The article says that Taft himself has said that, because congress represents districts, sections, etc., the President is the only real representative of the people.

"No man in recent times has gone into the White House with so nearly a universal trust of the people," writes the editor.

"But now, at the end of a year, his party is divided into fierce factions, his well-night universal popularity has waned.

"He made a logical and well thought out plan for his administration. He contended for a better and more sincere tariff revision—too late. The people respected his sincerity while they regretted his yielding. They saw clearly that these leaders of the party (in congress) could not be trusted. Yet they accepted the unsatisfactory result without severe personal criticism of him, and they said, "Now the President sees that these leaders do not represent the conscience and sincerity of the party and henceforth he will not yield to them.' They hoped that he had opened the way to a shifting of leadership and they still kept a high expectation of his administration.

"If the Republican masses could have voted on the question, 'Shall Mr. Aldrich and Mr. Cannon be retained as leaders in Congress?' nobody doubts what their answer would have been.

"The President must decide between party regularity and the leadership of the people. The old leaders stand for the undue influence of wealth on government.

"There is something terrible and cruel in many a wave of popular disapproval that sweeps over the land, but it is public opinion that is dominant in our democracy and public opinion has fast withdrawn approval from the administration since last summer.

"The people feel that the administration has gone out of touch with them. They are saying that the cabinet has not a single man who has ever held an elective office of importance (except the secretary of agriculture).

"The President has able counsel; gentlemen who have all won distinction as counsel for corporations and railroads. But the people, right or wrong, feel that these gentlemen may not know their case.

"The people expected that the tariff would be revised, that the conservative policy would be developed and that new regulative acts would be passed. The failure was threefold.

"And still, it is pointed out, Taft hopes to hold his party together. The people think the Republican Leaders will treat the conservation plan as they treated the tariff revision.

"If the party leaders again give him what they want and not what the people want, and if the President again submits to such treatment, his party will be hopelessly split and his chance of leadership will be gone.

"The people cannot reach Mr. Aldrich. He comes from Rhode Island. But they will not elect a Congress that will dare to elect Cannon speaker.

"The future of the Republican party belongs to the faction now called the insurgents, because they represent the convictions and conscience of the people.

"Party control is about to be shifted. To lead a party was a worthy aim, but our parties now are dissolving groups.

"The makers of wealth and the making of parties and the makers of presidents are not Republicans and Democrats, as they once were.

"Factions, parties, even presidents, have lost power to allure or obscure or frighten. What the people want is a leader, a leader without hesitancy. They have but one enemy in political life, and they are in earnest in their fight against that. That enemy is the power, whether Democratic or Republican, that money has to do the people's business out of the people's sight and by so doing it to secure immunity and privilege and more complete control."

Supply and Demand.

Theoretical political economists—who gather wisdom from books instead of actual living conditions—argue that present abnormal high prices are due to the inevitable law of supply and demand.

It would be a comfortable theory if true, but the facts are against the learned professors.

The law of supply and demand is only automatic where there is free competition. When the trusts stifle competition, or corner commodities, they knock abstract political economy into a cocked hat. The law of supply and demand means nothing.

This applies particularly to those trusts that secure—usually through the manipulation of tariff schedules—a monopoly in commodities that enter into the daily lives of consumers. When monopoly can raise the price of foodstuffs, clothing, building material or any other of life's necessities, it has merely placed an artificial tax on consumers. It has juggled with the law of supply and demand.

The tariff is the "mother of trusts." Every monopoly in the United States that wields an arbitrary power of artificial taxation does so in the main through tariff schedules. It is by this standard that the Aldrich-Taft law, like its predecessors, must be judged.

The most hopeful sign of to-day is the protest of trust-ridden consumers against robbery under the forms of law.

East and West.

The attempt of eastern tariff apologists to throw the blame for abnormally high prices on western producers of foodstuffs does not deceive anyone. There is a concerted effort to make dealers in foodstuffs the scapegoat in the national outcry against high prices. It can not succeed. The tariff is the culprit. Even eastern economists are beginning to admit this. But they try to shield their eastern tariff overlords by throwing the principal blame on western cattle raisers and Chicago packers. It is mere dust throwing. The robber features of the Aldrich-Taft tariff can not be concealed or exculpated.—Chicago Journal.

Illiteracy and Postage.

Ten years ago we were told that Sweden, Norway and Switzerland were the least illiterate of all the countries in the world. To-day the United States stands at the head of enlightened nations. No people in the world have so much literature, and literature at so small an expense, as we have. And literature means "the light."

In the distribution of this printed matter the second-class privilege has been a compelling factor. Moreover, it has encouraged the publication of a great number of periodicals, having first educated men to read, and next to write and print. Just as the public schools are public institutions, maintained by a general tax, regardless of the number of children you have, so is the postage rate on periodicals an educational enterprise.

It will not do to ask at this day, "Is the function of government educational?" Thomas Jefferson answered that in the affirmative once and forever. And Franklin prophesied a day when it would be nothing else. The government printing office is the biggest printery in the world. It provides literature, gratis, postage paid, on forestry, gardening, fisheries, the raising of guinea hens and over four hundred other different items pertaining to farming and manufacturing. Our foreign consuls are all ordered to supply us knowledge concerning what the world is doing and trying to do. This knowledge is distributed by the government. The department of the interior loans photographs and lantern slides of thousands of most interesting and valuable subjects to any citizen of repute, all prepaid and without fee. Geographical, geological and topical maps are to be had for the asking. Seeds and plants are distributed by the ton, with advice concerning how to get the best results for our labor. The entire postoffice department is in the broad sense educational. It aims at the easy, prompt and cheap distribution of knowledge.

The postoffice department is not run as a commercial enterprise to make money, any more than the weather bureau is run to show a profit. The navy and army have no income at all, and they supply us a "deficit" of a million dollars a day. Yet, when the postoffice department fails to show a profit a whole chorus of little statesmen lift a falsetto howl of pain! If there is a deficit, let us just thank the Lord that Uncle Sam has the money to wipe it out without winking an eyebrow.

The express companies carry second-class mail matter at one cent a pound in competition with the postoffice. If this were a loss to them they would let the postoffice have the business. The reason the express companies can carry at a cent a pound and make money while the postoffice department loses is because the express companies pay the railroads what the service is worth and your Uncle Sam allows himself to be held up. The moral is, get all government affairs on a business basis. To increase postage rates of any kind or sort at this time is to deal education a blow, and slap literature in the face.—Elbert Hubbard in the Chicago Examiner.

How Inconsistent!

Less than three years ago the United States treasury balance was in excess of $250,000,000. To-day it hovers around $75,000,000, and is rapidly receding. Presently the government will be obliged to borrow money to pay running expenses. Yet the Taft administration insists on a tariff so high that imports are seriously reduced and customs revenues drop, coupled with extravagant expenditures for objects which are by no means all to be considered necessary.

As in Laundries.

A California woman in training a new Chinese servant to wait on the door had her daughter ring the bell and present her card. Next afternoon a friend called and handed her card to the Celestial, who pulled out of his sleeve the card the daughter of the house had presented the afternoon before and carefully compared the two. "Tickee no matchee," he exclaimed, handing back the visitor's card. "No can come in."—Success.

The Extent.

"How about your cook? When I saw you last month you were quite dissatisfied with her."

"Was I?" responded the hostess wearily. "I've been dissatisfied with five or six cooks since then."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Wand of Sleep OR The Devil-Stick

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

me after this inter- the Major could imself that Arkel onderfully in his aking charge of s not brilliant, he present in- readiness of have given f the drug- cation, and e if any- likely to the matter. He st in Jaggard's hon- esty, incredible that an old servant thirty years' standing should turn traitor all at once but he thought it probable that some one might have taken him by surprise and drugged him. But as the window was closed, the person in question must have been concealed in the room. Here Jen's train of thought became confused.

Jaggard was far from the condition of connected thought, or coherent words. He turned and tossed upon his poor bed with bright eyes, burning skin, and babbling tongue. His head was swathed in bandages, and the housemaid who watched beside him had frequently to replace the clothes he tossed off in his violent movements. This nurse was a sickly, dark-eyed creature, who was strongly attached to Jaggard; and it was her love for h that made her proffer her services after him, and that chained to side. She reported to her mas- t Dr. Etwald had been that r and was coming again in the oon, but that there was nothing done until the delirium had ex- nded itself.

"Ay," thought Jen, as he stood by the bed, "or until the man dies. If he lies without regaining his senses, we will never know the truth."

He bent down to replace the bed-clothes which the sick man had thrown off, and, as he did so, a faint perfume, sickly and rich, struck his nostrils. It seemed to come from the bandages at the back of the head, and on bending down for a closer inspection, Jen saw that one of these was of finer linen than the rest. The fabric was cambric, and with a start which made the blood turn to ice in his veins, Jen realized that it was a woman's handkerchief.

"How came this here?" he asked the housemaid, pointing to the scrap of linen.

"Oh, that was on the first night, sir," she hastened to explain. "It was put on his head when in the room where he fell, sir. The doctor, sir, says as it ain't safe to take it away yet."

A curtain interposed between the head of the patient and the light of the window. This Jen drew aside, and lightly removed the outside wrappings of the wound. The housemaid looked on in horror, for she did not dare to prevent her master from meddling, yet she felt sure that he was doing wrong. But Jen was bent upon making the discovery as to whom the handkerchief belonged; and in a few minutes he had the outside bandages removed, and saw the handkerchief discolored with dry blood lying over the wound. With deft fingers he lightly touched the four corners. In one of them was the initials "M. D."

"M. D.!" said the Major to himself. "Margaret Dallas, the mother of Isabella. How did her handkerchief come into the room on that night? And the perfume?"

It struck his sense of smell with a belief that he had smelt it before. Nothing is so strong to waken memory as odor, and in less than half a minute the mind of the Major leaped back to where he had smelt it before. It was the perfume of the dried poison of the devil-stick.

CHAPTER XIII.

That the handkerchief of Mrs. Dallas should be found round the head of Jaggard was strange, but that it should be perfumed with the deadly scent which impregnated the devil-stick was stranger still. Had Mrs. Dallas found a wand of sleep? Had Mrs. Dallas perfumed the handkerchief with its cruel poison? Had Mrs. Dallas drugged or stupefied Jaggard on that fatal night by means of that saturated handkerchief? These were the vital questions which presented themselves to the puzzled Major.

And here the personality of Dr. Etwald intruded itself into the affair. It was Etwald who had bound up the wound with the handkerchief in question, and had forbidden its removal. The question was, had he received it from Mrs. Dallas, or had he found it on that night by the side of the insensible man? If the first, Mrs. Dallas must have perfumed it designedly with the poison, and Etwald, knowing that it was so impregnated, must have used it advisedly as a bandage. If the second, Mrs. Dallas must have been in the room on the night in question, and have used the handkerchief to render Jaggard insensible. And in either case, as the Major very sensibly concluded, Mrs. Dallas must be in possession of the devil-stick. Otherwise, how could she have obtained the deadly scent?

"And the plain conclusion of the whole affair," soliloquized Jen, "is that Mrs. Dallas must have stolen the devil-stick, must have murdered Maurice, and must have drugged Jaggard for the purpose of completing her work by stealing my poor boy's body. But her reason?"

That she did not desire Maurice for a son-in-law was an insufficient motive for the commission of a triple crime. She had declined to sanction the engagement; she had forbidden him the house; she had ample power to prevent the match which was so distasteful to her. Why, then, with all this power, should she jeopardize liberty and life by thieving the devil-stick and killing the man? In his perplexity, Jen sought out David and asked his opinion. The young lawyer gave a very decided verdict in favor of Mrs. Dallas.

"I don't believe that Mrs. Dallas had anything to do with the matter," he said, in a decisive voice. "She had no motive to commit these three crimes, each one of which is more terrible than the other. Nor, Major, do I think that she has nerve or brain enough to design or accomplish assassination or theft."

"But I assure you, David, the handkerchief is hers."

"Granted; but you forget that Isabella was in the room on that night. She might have dropped the handkerchief."

"Well," said Jen, after a pause. "That is not improbable. But the perfume?"

"Oh," said David, with a shrug, "we know that the scent is an Ashantee preparation. Dido's grandmother came from Ashantee, so it is just probable that Dido herself, knowing the secret, might have prepared a dose of the poison."

"Even so. Why should she have perfumed the handkerchief?"

"I can't say, Major. You had better ask her."

"I shall!" cried Jen, starting from his chair. "And also I'll find out why she needed to prepare the poison at all. In my opinion, David, that black Jezebel is at the bottom of the whole affair. She stole the devil-stick, she prepared the poison, murdered Maurice, and stole his body."

David retired to his room, and Jen went off to interview Isabella at "The Wigwam." He walked meditatively down to the gates, and here, on the high-road, his thoughts led him to a sudden conclusion respecting the coming conversation with Miss Dallas. Without much consideration he retraced his steps rapidly, and sought out David in his room. Then and there he asked him a question which was of vital importance.

"David," said he, abruptly, "owing to the coming of Etwald and Arkel on the night upon which the body was stolen, I forgot to ask you what reception Miss Dallas met with on her return home. Who received her?"

"Mrs. Dallas. She had missed her daughter, and had been seeking for her in a state of terror—surely natural under the circumstances. I found her pacing the veranda, wondering what had become of Isabella."

"Pacing the veranda," echoed Jen, thoughtfully. "Was she fully dressed?"

"Well, yes, so far as my memory serves me I think she was."

"And Dido?"

"I saw nothing, or heard nothing, of Dido. When I found Mrs. Dallas, I simply performed my mission, and delivered Isabella into her hands. The poor girl was quite distraught with the horror of the night, and was led unresistingly to bed by her mother."

"Mrs. Dallas dressed! Dido missing!" said the Major. "Thank you, David, you have told me all I want to know," and, with a nod, Major Jen set off for the second time to "The Wigwam."

Fortune favored him, for on arriving within the grounds of Mrs. Dallas the Major met with Isabella herself, in a light-colored dress, with sunshade and straw hat; she was strolling down the walk which led to the gate. On coming up with Jen, he was surprised to see that her manner was calm and collected; in all respects different from that displayed during the frenzy of the midnight visit. He could hardly believe that she was the same girl.

"I am glad to see you, Major," said she, holding out her hand. "You have saved me the trouble of a journey, as I was on my way to your house."

"To see me, Miss Dallas?"

"It is my intention to aid you in your search for the assassin of Maurice. Oh, yes, you may look doubtful as to my ability to help you, but I can and will. I am not the mad woman who burst into your library at 3 in the morning. I am cool and calm, and bent upon revenge. Maurice is dead. I loved him. And I intend to devote myself to avenging his death. Come, Major, sit upon this seat beside me, and relate all you have heard, all you have discovered. With my woman's wit I may be able to help you in the way the mouse aided the lion. Begin!"

Jen was astonished, both at her peremptory tone and her quiet manner. Whatever influence had been at work, it was certainly wonderful how she had calmed down from the nervous, hysterical girl, into the reasonable and cool-headed woman. Isabella noted the amazement of the Major, and guessing its cause, she explained the reason of the change in her looks, manner, and nervous system.

"Dr. Etwald cured me, Major," she said, quietly. "He has preserved my sanity, and I owe him a debt of gratitude."

"You certainly do," said Jen, dryly. "Will you repay it by marrying him?"

"No. I shall marry no one; not even Mr. Sarby, much as my mother wishes me to do so. I live only to avenge the death of Maurice, to recover his body from those who have stolen it. Come, Major, tell me what you know!"

Thus adjured, and feeling that he could not do without her assistance, Jen related all that he had heard from Arkel, and also his own personal experience with regard to the finding of the handkerchief. Isabella heard him to the end in silence, her large and shining eyes fixed upon his face. When he paused, she pondered, and finally spoke out.

"It would seem that you suspect Dido or my mother of having something to do with the matter?" she remarked, coldly.

"No. I don't say that exactly, but you must admit that the finding of the handkerchief bound round Jaggard's head is strange."

"Not at all. Dr. Etwald used it as a bandage. He picked it up in the bedroom."

"Precisely," assented Jen, eagerly. "Therefore, your mother——"

"Had nothing to do with it," interrupted Jen, "but the similarity of the kerchief in the room. Is there anything so very extraordinary in that?" she added, impatiently. "The matter is very simple. I brought with me one of my mother's handkerchiefs instead of my own. In the agitation of finding the body gone I dropped it, and Dr. Etwald found it, to use as a bandage. That is quite plain, I think."

"Quite plain," agreed the Major, "saving the presence of the perfume similar to that of the devil-stick."

"I don't know anything about the devil-stick. I never saw it; but with regard to the perfume I can explain. I was ill on that night, as you know, and Dido applied some of her negro remedies; among them the perfume with which that handkerchief of my mother's was saturated. It was bound across my forehead to soothe the nerves. During my journey to your house I snatched it off, and——"

"I can understand all that," interrupted Jen, "but the similarity of the perfumes? I must have that point cleared up."

"I dare say it can be," said Isabella, quietly. "Come up to the house, Major, and speak to Dido. I feel sure she can explain."

"Very good," said Jen. "If her explanation is only as clear as your own, I shall have nothing to say. By the way, Miss Dallas, how did you escape from your room on that night?"

"So far as I can remember, I left by my bedroom window. I had only to step out through it like a door, as it is a French window and opens on to the lawn."

"H'm!" said Jen. "But, seeing that you were so ill, was no one watching beside you?"

"Yes, my mother was. So you see, Major, she could not have dropped the handkerchief in the bedroom of poor dear Maurice."

"No; I understand. You have explained clearly. All points have been elucidated save that dealing with the perfume."

"You will now be satisedfi on that point," said Miss Dallas, rather dryly, "for here is Dido. She prepared the drug and perfumed the handkerchief, and for all I know," added the girl ironically, "she may have taken the hint from your wand of sleep."

HIGH SOCIETY ACTORS.

Aristocracy of Paris Takes Enthusiastically to Amateur Theatricals.

High society in France is said to be in a fever of excitement over amateur theatricals. The latest entertainment was an "Evening of Comedy," given by the Duke and Duchess of Noailles at their chateau Maintenon. The performance was preceded by two dress rehearsals at which Francis Coppee's amusing play, "The Father," was acted before an audience of peasants, who were immensely flattered by being summoned to attend. Their applause was spontaneous, and the more gratifying because they did not know they were assembled to test the actors' ability. The characters in "The Father" were taken by the Duke de Noailles, a scion of one of the oldest families in France; his wife, Countess Max de Beaumont, who acted with exquisite grace; the Viscountess d'Arjuson and Count de Germiny, who, unanimous consent had it, acted as well as many of the best professionals on the French stage.

These same distinguished players and, besides, Andre de Fouquieres, well known for his writings and lectures, and Baron Frederic de Neufville acted a comedy by Edie Basan. Chateau Maintenon was crowded with guests, who praised particularly the acting of the Duchess de Noailles, one of the most charming hostesses in French society and noted for the originality of her entertainments.

Countess de Beaumont, another leader in society, gave a theatrical entertainment recently in her chateau in the Department of the Sarthe, to which most of the actors and guests at the de Noailles house party were invited. The play was a comedy. Andre de Fouquieres took a prominent part.

Most of the actors gained experience and assurance by giving a performance at the Theater de la Renaissance, Paris, to which the public was admitted through the box office. The experiment was a great success. Every seat in the house was sold several days before the performance and 500 people were turned away. After Andre Fouquieres, in a gray frock coat and a snuff-colored waistcoat, had given a witty causerie on "Le Monde de le Theatre," he read a poem on "Enthusiasm," dedicated to him by Maurice Rostand, son of the academician, who is now one of the lions of Paris and hailed as a genius equal to his father. Then several distinguished amateurs appeared, among them Count R. de Bourboulon, Mme. Louis Royer, Mme. Pietre Weber, Mlle. Delage and M. de Lubez. Their musical and dramatic selections had all the qualities of the best French acting and the matinee was such a success that it was repeated.

Make the Garden Rich.

If I had only $5 to spend on my garden this year, I think I should put four of it into fertilizers and one into seeds and plants, says a writer in the Garden Magazine. The reason why the general run of gardens in this country have only ordinary success is that a person commonly thinks first of the plants that he wants to eat, while the needs of the soil come afterward.

Every single plant in a garden ought to be a success, and the only way to have a successful garden is to have the soil rich. There is a great deal more satisfaction in having a few sturdy plants that are simply bursting with health and vigor than half-starved specimens of rarities and novelties. No one ought to be satisfied with a garden that is simply "good enough." It ought to be a very good garden, and the only way to have a very good garden is to enrich the soil by fertilizers or manures.

Nicaragua to Date.

"We have decided to shoot you," said the Nicaragua official to an American.

"But my nationality——"

"Oh, that's easily arranged. If we find we have made a mistake we will apologize to your government later, when your government makes us."

Mistakes Will Happen.

Lady (to her sister, a doctor)—There; I cooked a meal for the first time to-day and I made a mess of it.

Sister—Well, dear, never mind, it's nothing. I lost my first patient.—Fliegende Blaetter.

A DEPARTMENT for WOMEN

Marriage and Divorce.

Answering the query, "Why so many divorces?" Life offers six answers: First, because of the decline of authority. Everybody in the country wants to be his own boss, and is so, as far as possible. Nobody wants to obey unless obedience matches inclination. Second, because there are so many more ways than there were a generation ago for a woman to make a living. Third, because the price of living is so high. Men abandon their wives in shocking numbers because the job of maintenance is heavy and they get tired off. Fourth, because women require much more and give less than they did a generation ago. They have been carefully endowed by law in most States with rights and privileges proper to independence. Fifth, because distractions have greatly increased in American life in a generation. Sixth, church influences, for the time being, are weaker than they used to be, and dramatic influences are more pervasive; church influences favor continuity in marriage; dramatic influences favor variety. There are plenty more reasons, but six are enough. The wonder is that, in the face of such convincing reasons as these, about nine marriages to every ten still hold good. All things considered, marriage seems incorrigibly proper even in this restless and progressive country. The united state being difficult and expensive to achieve, it is bad business for those who have attained to it to relapse back into the condition of the untied.

The Servant Girl Disappearing.

During the last thirty years the demand for servants has doubled, while the supply has increased only by half—in the last decade only by 5 per cent. In 1870 there was one to every twelve; even in the recent crisis, when the cities were filled with unemployed, the demand still outran the supply. And yet, during the thirty years past, the number of self-supporting women—that is, the actual labor market—has more than trebled. Forty years ago a woman thrown upon her own resources would tend to select housework for a living; in fact, one woman in two did so select. Thirty years ago only every third woman entered domestic service. Ten years ago only one in four rapped at the kitchen door. The other three applied—where?

Everyone knows; at the shop, the factory, the store.—McClure's Magazine.

Afternoon Gown.

At a recent fashionable luncheon the hostess was gowned in an unusually effective gown, made on lines suggested in our sketch. It was ciel-blue satin, cut en princesse and trimmed with silver buttons on sleeves, around collar and down front of blouse to point where the overdress of black chiffon velvet started. This continued to waist line, its fullness there confined in a plaited girdle. Attached to the bottom of girdle was a smartly shaped tunic, whose every line was perfect. Tiny blue chiffon violets trimmed bottom of tunic and top of upper bodice.

About Buying Bargains.

Some women seem to be born with "clothes sense." Others acquire it through long and expensive experience. And some never have it. There are very few women who are not amenable to the temptation of a bargain. And the bargain in the hands of the woman of judgment is a great aid toward dressing well on a small sum.

On the other hand, it is often a great stumbling block in the way of one who has not learned discrimination. Merely because a thing is cheap is no good reason for its purchase. It is best to study the needs of the wardrobe. In planning the wardrobe make out a list of what you already have on hand. Then in buying the new things see that they harmonize with the older clothing you wish to wear them with. For instance, if you have a blue tailor-made suit left over from last year, which will serve another season, and you wish to get a new dress and a new hat to wear with both the dress and the suit, do not get a purple hat and brown dress. The thing to do is to get both to harmonize with the left-over suit. Women who buy like this are always well dressed, and they spend far less money in the process than women who buy indiscriminately without regard for fitness or color.

Praises American Women.

The women of America are wonderful! Their versatility, acuteness, splendid mental energy, high ideals, firm grasp of subjects, added to their charming manners, tasteful dress, graceful deportment, are refined and feminine to a degree. We all know the brawny, masculine woman the world presents to us as the American, while she may be masculine in brain and alertness, is also feminine—emotional, if you like—in her makeup. She is a truly charming type. The American woman is also very practical, very inventive. She develops an idea, and she works out her idea to its utmost possibilities. It may be only a new sort of neckband supporter, but she does not belittle her hobby. She brings her imagination into her work. She may be utilitarian, but the successful business woman is artistic to her finger tips.—London Express.

Will Need All Her Tact.

Mrs. Herbert John Gladstone, whose husband is now Governor General of United South Africa, is said to be a very fit companion for him in his difficult task of governing this part of the world with satisfaction to everyone concerned. She is a woman of most gracious mien and infinite tact, which qualities will be very necessary to her in her new position. She is the daughter of Sir Richard Paget and of a family of Conservatives, but is, no doubt, able to adapt herself to her husband's politics.

Hint for Cleaning.

Clean silver toilet articles with a paste of alcohol and whiting. It will not scratch the surface of plain silver. A soft brush should be used to get the paste into crevices. Wipe with chamois or soft cotton and brush the embossed or engraved parts with a soft bristle brush. A solution of salts of tartar will clean white bristles nicely, and if well rinsed the brushes will look new.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Lace girdles are seen.

Coat gowns are to continue popular.

Many a summer gown will have the skirt made up of a series of ruffles of varying length.

The newest black silk stockings are embroidered up to the instep with tiny jet beads.

Dresses of colored embroidery on white will be found among the gowns for summer wear.

It is not unusual to find four, five and even six kinds of lace in combination on a single gown.

Lapels of coats are faced with moire, velvet or satin, the long separate coats oftener than otherwise having a collar of caracul, astrakhan, mink or other fur.

In place of the long-used white net or lace yoke, one finds the self-colored net or lace once more conspicuous and the lower sleeve is also of the dyed net or lace.

In children's clothes black and white checked materials are much used. Little coats of the same are worn over these dresses.

Children's styles are strongly Napoleonic. They, as well as their mothers, are wearing the military coat without the capes, fastened up the side with heavy gold or braid frogs.

Frocks of batiste, Swiss and Paris muslin, daintily hand embroidered and lace trimmed, are among the most becoming gowns for young girls where the occasion demands them.

Tulle is nearly always becoming and makes a satisfactory finish to nearly every sort of evening frock. With a high-necked gown a narrow fold of it at the throat instead of lace or ruching is often more becoming. It softens harsh outlines and has the effect of youthfulness.

TYPICAL DESIGNS FOR SHIRTWAISTS.

This year it is evident that extraordinary attention has been paid to small details in the fashioning of lingerie blouses. One of the most noticeable features borrowed from the dressmakers' models is the tendency to simulate a side-front closing. Many of the more elaborate of the new blouses give the appearance of fastening easily and quickly, just at the left side of the front. As a matter of fact, the closing is effected by means of minute buttons and tiny loops hidden away under a tucked flap at the back. Other blouses demonstrate the extent of the Russian influence on the fashions jabot, finished with narrow tucks. Graduated embroidered buttons were placed as shown in the cut, and the collar and cuffs were embroidered. The sleeves of the new waists are anything but monotonous and so long as they are not plain they are fairly sure to be acceptable in view of the multitude of varying styles.

To Clean Upholstered Chairs.

An upholstered chair can be cleaned of a great amount of dust if an old towel is dampened and placed over the upholstered part and then beaten with a rattan carpet beater. As the towel collects the dust it should be rinsed clean and the process repeated. This is a method of dusting a chair when there is no yard for one to take the furniture into, and it is done to keep the dust from flying over the room, settling on other pieces.

To Whiten Stone Steps.

To whiten your doorstep, put half a pound of glue size in a saucepan, add a pint and a half of water and slowly dissolve on the stove. When quite melted add one pound of powdered whiting, stirring it in gradually. Apply with a stiff brush, and, if too hard, add more water.

The Difference.

When a woman is disagreeable, something has gone wrong with her lover, and when a man is disagreeable something has gone wrong with his liver.—Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler.

To Appear Well-Gowned.

Use hairpins, visible, invisible and all kinds.

Wear a net or thin veil to keep in vagrant locks.

Cleanse your face with cream every night before going to bed.

Keep your shoes polished and don't allow the heels to become run over.

Wear immaculate neckwear, a clean shirtwaist and gloves without holes.

Don't allow the public glimpses of a soiled white skirt or a shredded silk one.

Don't wear your collar pins awry, and don't forget to sew on missing buttons.

Don't display a hole in your stocking right above your heel when you hold up your dress.

Don't go around with soiled nails or nails that are as vindictively long as a mandarin's.

Don't wear a veil with a slit across the face, and don't wear one at all unless you can adjust it neatly.

But, above all, look at your back in the glass before you start out; the punishment of Lot's wife does not await you if you do.

Some Chic Bandeaux.

A group of becoming bandeaux, to be worn with the latest fashion in coiffures, is shown here. The one on the left is a particularly dainty thing and would be most becoming on blonde tresses; it is fashioned of silver tissue and pearls, and a buckle formed of the same holds on the right a stiff white aigrette. The center figure wears a twist of black velvet holding a golden sheaf of wheat. The right is a girlish bandeau of satin ribbon held by a jewel and terminating in a bow on the neck.

Civil War Stories

Out of a Grave to Life and Liberty.

A few leaves from the diary of Geo. W. Bailey, during the war a first lieutenant in the Sixth Missouri infantry, and A. D. C. Second division staff, Fifteenth Army Corps, tells a tale of Yankee invention, pluck and endurance, that is as exciting as strange.

Lieut. Bailey was taken prisoner by the Confederates, before Atlanta, Ga., on July 22, 1864. His experiences before the time from which we give our extract will be passed over. Hungry, despoiled of clothing and everything worth taking, he was in the hands of the foe when he wrote as follows:

July 25, 1864—Continued silence in the direction of Atlanta. What was the result of the battle? What does the silence mean? Has Sherman fallen back? Has Hood evacuated? Were questions asked continually, but no reliable responses elicited. One genius said: "The Yankees can't fight for awhile, all the live 'uns are busy burying the dead 'uns."

"How long are we to be kept in this miserable place?" "How long are we to be kept on quarter rations?"

Nobody seemed to know. We knew that exchanges of prisoners had ceased because of a disagreement about the status of negro troops, and there was little prospect of the question being speedily settled. The gloomy prospect of Andersonville loomed up, and a careful mental consideration and adjustment of chances for life resulted in favor of a desperate attempt to escape rather than attempt to survive Andersonville. While thus contemplating, we were startled by the loud command of the Confederate major, ordering, "Fall in, prisoners! Hurry up!" A hasty formation into lines (no trouble about baggage), a march southward, the officers separated from the private soldiers. Where are we going? Don't know; can't ascertain; but toward Andersonville.

Confederate officers rather provoke argument on the subject of the war, and many interesting discussions ensue. No opportunity afforded to attempt to escape. Near evening we march through Jonesboro, Ga., some twenty miles south of Atlanta, situated on the Macon railroad. Inhabitants line the street; first Yankees—great curiosities. Whites rather jubilant, the pitying glances of the blacks indicate their sympathy. Desiring confirmation an opportunity was sought to converse with a negro. A beckoning, an approach. "Stop that!" said the guard. "Get back there, you—nigger!" But the mere prompt effort to respond, on the part of the black man, was convincing enough of friendship. Two miles below the town we reach our quarters for the night—an open field. A blanket is carelessly thrown among the prisoners and falls upon the writer. Providential, a great luxury, comforting rest assured. A few fires, retirement, sharing the precious blanket with a fellow captive. I wonder, suspect. No—yes! It is not gentle thoughts that "come o'er me stealing." But there's something—a new enemy. Retreat? Impossible, a detachment of the foe are already in possession; vain attempt at dislodgement. And they are ex-Confederates, too. Ravenous. Sleep is impossible; escape is possible. A guard approached.

"Halt there!" said he.

"I want to speak with you a moment," said the prisoner.

"Well, what is it?" asked the sentry.

From a hiding place that baffled former search a treasure is produced.

"I have a very fine watch here (an old silver turnip), and if you'll do me a small favor you can have it."

The sentry seemed not to be averse to winning the bribe, and, looking wistfully at it, asked:

"What favor do you want for it?"

"Turn your back and don't see me pass out," said the prisoner.

"Agreed," said the sentry.

"I'll be back in a few minutes," said the prisoner.

(A return to obtain a canteen and buy a little hardtack, a whispered "good-by," a stealthy, reapproach.)

"Halt! Where are you going?" demanded the sentry.

"It's only myself; it's all right," said the prisoner, approaching. "Don't talk so loud."

"Stop, d—— you!" bringing down his rifle.

"Thunder!"

The guard had been relieved, this was a new man. The clanking of an officer's scabbard approached the sentry as the distance widened between him and the chagrined captive, who picked his way through the prostrate forms of fellow-prisoners back to his "mess," and cast his weary body upon Mother Earth and slept until early in the morning.

July 26, 1864—When we were gruffly ordered to "Fall in, prisoners!" and over dusty roads marched rapidly southward. No rations. At early evening we were corralled in a large inclosure or pasture some ten miles north of Griffin, Georgia, near "Big Sandy Creek." Again we have the earth for a resting place, the sky for a covering. The writer lay and gazed upward into the "dim-lit vault" above him, and was busy with his thoughts. "Andersonville," they say; "no chance for exchange; fuss about the colored troops; you won't live a week in Andersonville." 'Tis a desperate alternative, but I'll take my chances in attempting to escape. There's a gully out there, through a brier-patch. New light; escape by way of burial. Plan matured; trusty comrade-officers assist. Tin-cup, muscles, will, calculating ingenuity, friendly suggestions, briers cut to stick in the earth concealing the writer and present uninviting appearance to pedestrians, and cautious work were brought into requisition and the grave-digging was completed. During the labor the captive's thoughts dwelt, with some misgivings, upon the imperative orders of the Major, issued the day before in the presence of the prisoners: "Shoot stragglers without warning. If you catch a man hiding, bayonet him without a word. No nonsense." Intended for intimidation, eh? Well, it's safer to consider it as dead earnest. He thought also of the immature plan to disarm our guard; how they were to be set upon simultaneously; how information of three companies behind deterred us, and how disappointed some were when wiser counsel discouraged the attempt. But the "grave" Col. Warren Shedd, Thirteenth Illinois Infantry, now tendered his assistance. Boughs and grass were gathered; the adventurer fitted in; satisfaction. "All right, cover up." First came grass and boughs, then—"Oh, here, Lieutenant, here are some things you'll need." Col. R. K. Scott, Sixty-eighth Ohio Infantry, presented some maps (linen) of the country, rolled up in which was a small pocket compass, the gift of Col. Shedd. A canteen was also handed in and served as a pillow. A hurried hand-shaking, a hasty good-by, and the burial proceeded. Earth came down upon him, pressing heavier and heavier; old grass concealed fresh earth, and, pursuant to program, stalks of blackberry were cut and placed on the "new made grave," in the hope that they would repel all investigators and better conceal the concealment.

Daylight approaches. Now the morning gray streams in one little ray through the small aperture ingeniously constructed at the head of the grave, to admit air to its occupant.

"Lieutenant" (a voice from above), "here are some rations for you, at your head, just under the surface."

"Oh, thank you!" was the muffled response; "but don't stop up the hole."

An hour passed slowly—another, seeming like three. The pressure from above increased more and more; the weight grew a ton a minute. The right side and arm were now without feeling—paralyzed; whole body in pain, pressure terrible. The suffering body suggested a reconsideration; ruled "out of order," as Andersonville came in view.

A death-like chill now seemed to penetrate the body of the buried captive, as if threatening to freeze the vitals. To move would be such delicious luxury, but a motion of the "foundation" would certainly demolish or disturb the upper stories.

July 27, 1864—Broad daylight. Distant view of sunlight. My acquaintance entirely cut. Are their motives actuated by prudence or fear? Is there any fresh earth visible? Do the briers stand up properly? Considerable risk, this. Foolish risk, perhaps. But what can I do now but lie perfectly still? Unusual commotion above. Footsteps hastily approach the brier patch. A voice, "All right, Lieutenant, lay low; good-by." (Retreating steps.) Encouragement and consolation. The forsaken one distinctly heard, "Hurry up your breakfasts" (breakfast) "and fall in." The line extended in close proximity to the missing captive. "Column, right face! forward—march!" and the column was in motion. How distinctly can be heard the regular tread. A sudden heavy, extra pressure, another; twice stepped upon, but by captives or captors remains a mystery. A mounted Confederate rode at the rear of the column, and the sound of the horse's feet beating on the hardened path is distinctly heard by the hidden prisoner; nearer and nearer approaching, now alarmingly close, and then a welcome passage by. The loose earth rattled down through the narrow window, and the danger was gone by. The road reached by the column. A halt. "All right" rang along the line and the tramp was taken up southward.

Glorious relief! The forsaken had chatted freely with a Confederate officer the day before, and entertained some fear that on that account he might be missed the more readily by said officer. The Confederate rear-guards now drew rations from a wagon on the road, necessitating further patience. Rations drawn, guards and wagon pass on; time is precious. Voices; a grunt, a crunching, crumbs chasing each other down the air-hole. A gentle hog calmly roots up and devours my precious, hidden rations and leisurely passes on. Voices still; children. It must be investigated. A slow pressure of the head upward; a giving of the covering; a falling of the loose earth and dust into ears or eyes, and down the neck, and through a little mound of earth and sticks, and briers and boughs, peered two anxious eyes, a huge hog, a negress, with two white children, evidently searching for relics of Yankee visitation, were the only living things visible. What a deserted prospect, yet loneliness was never more coveted. Joy! a slight rain falls with refreshing welcome, and drives the curiosity hunters from the field. Is there any possibility that the ground is still watched? A listening, a further elevation of the miscellaneous mound. Sounds of horse's hoofs; three countrymen pass on the adjoining road in the direction of the departed captives, a hasty lowering of the head; another reconnoissance. Raining heavily, the water trickles through the covering and renders the "grave" untenable. Now! and with a bound and a spring the slimy, narrow concealment was cleared, and the close timber entered at a double-quick. What! another blue uniform, and gliding away through the trees like a deer. The captive stopped, spell-bound. The tall object in blue finally turned, stopped and looked as if surprised. A slow approach, an explanation, congratulations, uniting of destinies for present purposes. "What is your name, Lieutenant?" asked the companion. "Bailey, of Gen. M. L. Smith's staff; and yours?" "Lybyer," said he, "of the Indiana Cavalry." Mutual expressions of satisfaction. "Misery loves company" demonstrated. "You are very tall, Lybyer, but you appear very young for a soldier," suggested the officer. "I'm six feet and over, and seventeen years of age," said he. "Why, eighteen is the youngest enlistment in our army. How did you get in?" "Well," was the reply, "I got in on my length, I suppose."

Auburn News

Sheriff Thomas had his five prisoners painting the interior of the jail Tuesday. For some time he has had Jiffy North helping him around the jail, his barn and lot. Jiffy is pretty handy. He will soon be out from a three months sentence for drunkenness.

Elder John Lennox of the Christian church was called to the clerk's office Monday evening, to join in holy wedlock Oliver Bungard and Delphia Robinett, both of Butler. The young couple came over for the license and desiring to have the matrimonial knot tied at once asked for Elder Lennox and Clerk Austin accommodated them by calling him. The bride and groom took supper in the city before returning home. Each has many friends who wishes the union much happiness and prosperity.

The Auburn Dispatch says: "John Riser and Samuel Noragon, Butler parties, traded horses last month, but John says Sam "trimmed" him to a frazzle. He now wants the court to see to it that Sam pays him $150 dauages because the "bellows" were no good."

Mrs. Thos. Rudd came over from Butler Monday evening spending the night with her daughter, Mrs. Blaine Snepp, whom she accompanied to Fort Wayne this morning.

Conference Report

BLUFFTON, Ind., April 11.—Bishop Cranston began to read his assignments at 9:30 this evening. The audtorium was crowded. The completion of the list had been delayed since 9 o'clock this morning owing to difficulties in filling several of the assignments.

There are a great many changes in the list, in some districts almost fifty per cent.

Rev. W. W. Martin will remain at Bluffton, the members of his congregation having requested that he be re-assigned to the local church.

Rev. C. U. Wade of the Fort Wayne district gets the Broadway church of Logansport, one of the best charges of the district. He goes there because of the need of a good money raiser in that church. Rev. J. A. Beatty succeeds Mr. Wade.

Rev. J. K. Cecil is returned to the First church of Fort Wayne.

L. J. Naftzger of Muncie district goes to Greenfield pastorate.

J. A. Beatty of Elkhart, was appointed superintendent of the Fort Wayne district.

C. E. Line of the Greenfield church, takes charge of the Muncie district.

A SLEEP IN CHURCH

BY WM. H. MCINTOSH.

Strange things unexpectedy happen, and what under ordinary circumstances would constitute a breach of decorum may exceptionally be perfectly proper and so in the old war time was a sleep in a church.

Sherman had returned to Goldsboro, North Carolina, from his brief conference with Grant at City Point, Virginia, and issued orders for the uneventful Raleigh campaign. Six corps aggregating 80,000 men, in three armies, right, left and central columns, moved from their camps on April 10, 1865, amidst heavy dashes of rain and took up their lines of march along roads westward. It befell Dustin's brigade to escort the immense supply train of the 20 A. C. that followed the 14 A. C. in the center and to the 22nd Wisconsin to bring up the rear.

Standing in the shade of a pine tree, I observed for hours the panorama of long blue lines of infantry steadily debauching upon the fields and listened to the dull thunder of the guns towards Smithfield. Sole occupants of the recent extensive camps, the regiment at close of day saw the rear most troops disappear in the foreground forest and the great train draw slowly forward until the last wheels turned out upon the road.

Fresh as were the teams, yet so heavily loaded were the wagons and so difficult was the hoof-poached passage that darkness had fallen some time before orders were given to march.

At snails pace and with frequent imitating halts the belated infantry had occupied hours in making little progress when suddenly the march quickened, the drowsy soldiery awoke and ground was so rapidly covered that they soon came upon open fields and in a large peach orchard on the left of the highway, found the huge train in park, line upon line closely massed.

The men lost no time in going into bivouac on the sandy soil, but I had seen just across the road on the right a framed meeting house that looked inviting, and, asking no official permission, I betook myself to the building which I entered and found that so many had already come to church that there had assembled quite a congregation.

Some officers with habitual appreciation of shelter had pre-empted a space about the pulpit and left to the men the pews in the body of the interior. It was most remarkable with what silence suggestive of reverence each proceeded to occupy his several pew, spread his blanket and betake himself to rest. Teaching and training had enthroned the church as a structure consecrated to the worship of the Almighty within where portals was an all pervading presence and to which the people came each Sabbath as a privilege. Here the grateful heart acknowledged heaven—sent blessings, bowed the knee in supplication, lifted the voice in hymnal praise and the faithful minister from the desk experienced divine truth and human duty.

Sometimes in verity from the languor of hard labor and insistent somnolence when the preacher became prolix and thought stagnant, He gave his people rest and oblivious of place and time there was enjoyed a stolen restful slumber. Among influences inducing attendance at church is subconscious faith that the simple act is meritorious and that an occult infusion of pious feeling may result, but those of us who were in church that night had only thoughts of an unwonted sheltering roof..

Heavy laden and weary, we had sought this sanctuary to find fulfillment of promised rest and as I stretched my limbs luxuriously along a pew pillowing my head upon my knapsack a strange and potent influence pervaded the hallowed shrine and a weird sense of an open door and a friendly welcome was experienced.

Whether any of my comrades felt the spell or realized the character of this chance lodging, I could not know for there was no interchange of speech, not even a whisper disturbed the solemn silence. To me, environment awakened reflection, the church stood in strong contrast to the nearby bivouac; it had been upwards of a year since a sheltering roof had been enjoyed and there was a happy intuition of a coming and not distant day when arms and uniform would be discarded, when the soldier would resume his citizenship and when once again he would enjoy the privilege of peace.

Many southern churches had been sadly desecrated as quarters, prisons and hospitals from the stern law of necessity along the lines of contending armies, but this country meeting house was immune from all harm. The people who had worshipped here on yesterday would re-assemble on the next Sabbath to find no evidence of occupation or injury. It was pleasant to think that men, women and children had so recently sat in these pews, that for the night was offering waried Union soldiers a rightly accorded sanctuary and in this move, I fell asleep. Slumber was unbroken, sweet and refreshing. I had come into our Father's house and he had given me rest. With the early dawn, we were awake; in quiet we folded and packed blankets and as circumspectly as a congregation departing, returned to the bivouac to prepare and enjoy the morning meal and to enter upon the march of another day. We had slept in church. It had in no sense been a profanation, but it had done us good. To my body it had given rest and to my mind it had seemed fulfillment of an inviolable promise and a spiritual benediction.

WALTER SNIDER, Cashier.

The second annual convention of the club women of the Twelfth district was held in Fort Wayne on Tuesday, April 12. Nearly all the cities enrolled in the district were represented and the clubs, with few exceptions, had delegates at the meeting. Those in attendance from Butler were Mrs. T. Rudd, Mrs. W. L. Blair and Mrs. F. L. Kiplinger. Mrs. J. B. Buchanan, of Auburn, district chairman, presided. The principal address of the morning was given by Mr. Chas. R. Lane, of Fort Wayne. His subject "What is a Literature Club?" was most interesting. In closing he paid the highest compliment to the club woman of America, saying that "wherever you might meet her, she stood for all that was good, strong, pure, loyal and lovely." In the afternoon Mrs. Grace Julian Clark, of Indianapolis, state president of the General Federation of Woman's Clubs, gave a most pleasing address. Her subject, "Everybody's Child" was discussed in a very able manner, delighting all with her charming simplicity. Miss Rosamond McIntyre, of Auburn, also added to the pleasure of the day, by giving several readings in her usual clever manner. It is to be regretted that more of our ladies did not take advantage of this convention, as it was one of importance and the subjects discussed of vital interest to all women who are interested in the rapid advance of the club work of the day.

So light running that your "youngest" can now mow the lawn without help.

KEEN KUTTER Mowers are fast cutting and easy running because of the triple gear and the fine ball bearings. A KEEN KUTTER will last longer than any mower on the market and is easily kept keen and sharp. To sharpen, merely reverse the blades and they sharpen themselves. A cheap mower will cost more in the end on account of repairs, will not do the work properly and will require twice as much labor.

The KEEN KUTTER is a money saver, a time saver, a temper saver—and will keep your lawn looking like velvet.

Methodist Church Notes

Next Sunday morning the minister will preach on "The Relation or Attitude of the Church to the World." Theme for the evening, "Why Have a Methodist Church in Rome?"

As we begin a new year in our church activities let us all renew our vows, and covenant with God to be more active and faithful. Opportunities are before us for uniting in a mighty campaign against evil.

We invite any and all who are not connected with some other church to worship with us. The Sunday school, the Epworth League, the Brotherhood, the Ladies' Aid Society, the Missionary Society, all are offering chances to labor in the Master's vineyard. All are offering to bring great blessings to you. Our heavenly Father rewards His disciples for any labor or sacrifice.

As minister I am deeply interested in your wellfare. I am taking up my duties as the pastor of this church for another year with a sense of my responsibilities. As neighbors, fellow citizens and church members will you not give me your co-operation, sympathy and prayers? I want to help you. Talk freely with me. Be at our church meetings always.

E. F. ALBERTSON, Minister.

Mr. and Mrs. Adam Fulmer received a telegram Wednesday afternoon bearing the news of the death of their son-in-law, Charles Woot, who died while undergoing an operation in a hospital. Mr. Woot's home is in Detroit, where he was engaged as clerk in the P. M. depot His widow, who will be known as Rosetta Fulmer, will return to Butler with her sister, Mrs. Frank Stage, who is in Detroit. Mr. and Mrs. Fulmer held their son-in-law in high esteem and the sad news was a hard blow to them.

Leonard Stamets of Clay Center, Kansas and Mrs Jennie Stamets of Waterloo, were the guests of Marion Knepper and family last week.

PYTHIAN SISTERS HOLD CONVENTION

Delegates From Twenty-five Temples Present---Angola Next Meeting Place

Wednesday, April 20, 1910, has been a memorable day in Butler, not only in the Pythian order, but to the entire city as was evinced by the interest displayed by every one to make the stay of the visiting Pythian Sisters pleasant.

The forenoon was devoted to the reception of delegates and visitors. At noon a fine dinner was served in the dining room of the Christian church.

At 2:30 the convention was called to order in the beautiful Castle hall of Butler K. of P. lodge by the district deputy, Mrs. Lina Jacobs Williams.

The occasion was honored by the distinguished guests, Mrs. Belle Ephlin, G. C.; Mrs. Carrie Fanning, P. G. C.; Mrs. Laura Sinclair, P. G. C.; Miss Cora Hood, G. M. of R and C.; Mrs. Brown, of Columbia City, deputy of district number five; Mrs. Florence Fanning, of Butler. Mrs. Cora Dunten, of LaGrange, Mrs. Dot Luckey, of Wolf Lake, who have been district deputies in former years and whose presence was a great pleasure to those who had met them during their visits to the temples of the district. The grand officers were given the chautauqua salute.

The temple was opened by Butler temple, after which the convention work was taken up by the district deputy. Mrs. Carrie Fanning welcomed the delegates and visitors in a few well chosen words and touched the hearts of all. Mrs. Laura Sinclair, of Waterloo, responded briefly.

The roll call showed delegates present from twenty-five of the twenty-six temples of the districts present.

Butler temple exemplified the work in a manner so perfect that no criticisms could be elicited. They followed the initiatory work with a beautiful flag drill that was heartily applauded.

Excellent reports were given by all temples, showing the work of the district to be in a most flourishing condition.

Questions relative to law and governments were answered by the grand chief.

The district treasurer reported $100 collected as a convention fund.

The following committee were appointed by the district deputy:

Reception—Nettie Madden, Florence Fanning, Ina Mutzfeld, Elva Gengnagel, Carrie Fanning, Eva Long and Amy Haverstock.

Registration—Lina Dunten, Eliza Trump and Mina Sutherland.

Press—Anna Wells, Maud Sheffer and Glenna Smith.

Resolution—Mary Dutter, Martha Maxwell and Etta Doty.

The evening session was opened by an invocation by Rev. Konkle.

A solo by Miss Mildred Sinclair received an enthusiastic encore.

Mrs. Dot Luckey read an impressive paper on the work of the order.

Miss Vieve Dutter, of Angola, who has been singing and playing for conventions since her baby days, favored the audience with a piano solo which was encored.

Auburn temple exemplified the "Public Installation Ceremony."

The grand chief then gave a short address that was an inspiration to all and a fitting close to the beautiful and impressive work of the order whose motto is ever "Onward and Upward"

It was decided to hold the next convention at Angola.

Obituary

Theobald James Britzius, son of John and Abigal Britzius was born in Butler Ind., June 29, 1881 and departed this life near Coldwater, Mich., April 13, 1910, aged 29 years 9 month and 15 days.

At the age of 11 he was baptized a member of the Lutheran church by Rev. Deffenbauch. He resided in Butler until he was seventeen years of age, at that age his family moved to Coldwater where he resided until the time of his death.

He leaves to mourn his departure a mother, six sisters and two brothers, besides many other near relatives. The father and three sisters preceded him to the land beyond death.

His many virtues are left behind for his kindred and friends to practice, and if there were vices and wrongs in his life let the mantle of charity fall on them and hide them, for he was mortal as we are mortal and liable to error.

Funeral at the Lutheran church, Butler, Ind., April 15, 1910, conducted by the pastor.

J. J. Oberlin For Co. Treasurer.

As will be seen in our announcement column, John J. Oberlin has decided to ask for the nomination for county treasurer at the democratic primaries, June 1. It is high time that some democrat announce himself for this important office, and Mr. Oberlin after considerable persuasion from his friends has consented to make the race. This office is the only one so far sought after in this part of the county, and we certainly feel that Mr. Oberlin will have little opposition He is a well known business man of this city and has a large following over the county. He is fully qualified for the office and will make a strong man on our ticket.

Obituary

On Wednesday morning, March 30, 1910, at Seattle, Washington, Harold Russel Stevens, younger son of Russel and Mary Stevens of Butler, Ind., died at the age of twenty years.

Thus death lifts the veil that divides the great unknown from this. The loving heart always seeking to bring joy into other lives has escaped from its frail tenement and passed beyond. The home of which he was the light and joy, is desolate. But its darkness is lit up by the memory of a life beautiful, in the rare power of self-forgetfulness. This thought of others, no pain, or weakness could quell; it was alive and active to the last. Nearly his entire life has been spent in our midst. Thus early it has been "rounded into calm."

Its influence will remain an inspiration. To old and young his early death is a source of deep regret. When about sixteen years old he was baptized and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church during the pastorate of Rev. Dale Smith. Surviving members of the family include the father, mother and brother.

It was morning when Harold Stevens passed away, and a fitting hour for souls like his to steal away from earth, like some fair flower, impressed with heaven's seal, he calmly passed away.

And thus a gentle spirit's gone
To seek its home above
And mingle with that holy throng
With him whose name is love.

CARD OF THANKS.

We want to thank our many friends for their kindness and sympathy extended to us in our bereavement, for the beautiful flowers, and especially to Mr. Abbey of Seattle for the many kind deeds shown to Harold, during his last days and death.

Mr. and Mrs. Russel Stevens.
Mr. and Mrs. Charley Stevens.

Funeral services were held at the home Sunday afternoon conducted by Rev. Albertson. Burial at Edgerton, Ohio.

The body of Harold Stevens who died in Seattle, March 30th, arrived in Butler last Saturday morning, April 9th, and was taken to the home of his parents, where his many friends could see him. On Sunday at 2 p. m., his funeral was held at the home, and many friends gathered there to extend to the bereaved parents their love and sympathy. Harold was put away beautifully, and looked very peaceful and natural, showing us who knew him that he had suffered little, if any. The flowers were many, the day was ideal, all tending to beautify the ending of Harold' stay on earth.

Not an Inch of Healthy Skin Left.

My little son, a boy of five, broke out with an itching rash. Three doctors prescribed for him, but he kept getting worse until we could not dress him any more. They finally advised me to try a certain medical college, but its treatment did no good. At the time I was induced to try Cuticura he was so bad that I had to cut his hair off and put the Cuticura Ointment on him on bandages, as it was impossible to touch him with the bare hand. There was not one square inch of skin on his whole body that was not affected. He was one mass of sores. The bandages used to stick to his skin and in removing them it used to take the skin off with them, and the screams from the poor child were heartbreaking. I began to think that he would never get well, but after the second application of Cuticura Ointment I began to see signs of improvement, and with the third and fourth applications the sores commenced to dry up. His skin peeled off twenty times, but it finally yielded to the treatment. Now I can say that he is entirely cured, and a stronger and healthier boy you never saw than he is to-day, twelve years or more since the cure was effected. Robert Wattam, 1148 Forty-eighth St., Chicago, Ill., Oct. 9, 1909."

A Wise Little Girl.

Miss Mary Garden, at a tea at the Belelvue-Stratford in Philadelphia, praised the skill of the modern corset-maker.

"It is really wonderful," said Miss Garden, "what this artist can do. I have seen fat old women who, from certain aspects, looked like supple girls. It was the corset-maker. And that reminds me of an answer that I heard in Sunday school when I was a little girl.

"'What is it,' our superintendent asked, 'that bands us together and makes us better than we are by nature?'

"'Our corset, sir,' piped a wise little girl of 8."

WELL KIDNEYS KEEP THE BODY WELL.

When the kidneys do their duty, the blood is filtered clear of uric acid and other waste. Weak kidneys do not filter off all the bad matter. This is the cause of rheumatic pains, backache and urinary disorders. Doan's Kidney Pills cure weak kidneys.

J. P. Alexander, 820 Ave. D, Council Bluffs, Ia., says: "I had backache, painful urinary disorders and kidney ills from the close of the war. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me in 1906 and the benefit has been permanent."

Remember the name—Doan's. For sale by all dealers. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. 50 cents a box.

The Patent office is some $7,000,000 ahead on revenue from patents, nearly $1,000,000 last year alone. Washing with Clay.

A savage tribe in Africa daubs cloth with clay, then rubs the dirt out in the river. That's a good deal like using a hunk of yellow soap that is made heavy with rosin and stale grease. The rosin stays in the cloth and keeps some of the dirt with it, and then your clothes look streaky. Easy-Task laundry soap—the white soap made of cocoanut oil, borax, naptha and wholesome tallow—takes the dirt out. That's its business—taking dirt out and driving disease germs away. Twenty-five years of reputation back of it, and still it is but five cents a cake.

Vindictive.

"Ugh!" spluttered Mr. Jones. "That aut had a worm in it."

"Here," urged a friend, offering him a glass of water, "drink this and wash it down."

"Wash it down!" growled Jones. "Why should I? Let him walk!"—Everybody's.

THE WHITE SLAVE TRADE IN FRANCE

EVERYONE asks why France is the worst exporter of white slaves, while in Paris the unfortunate ones are fairly well protected from exploitation, writes a Paris correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald. Alexander Coote, secretary of the International Bureau for the Repression of the Trade, in telling the French that American public opinion does them full justice; it was the French government, on Senator Berenger's proposal, that convoked the first official conference in 1902, resulting in the international agreement on which America is basing her efforts. Also, it was the French national committee that organized the magnificent congress that has given results over the entire world. "Yet," says Mr. Coote, in the Paris Matin, "there is truth in the public opinion of America that France exports more unfortunate women than any other country."

Paris papers quote from the American congressional report, and from American magazines and daily press. The French are astonished and distressed at their bad record. Why, they wipe out the cafe-concert slaving of 1902; and only in 1908 a law went into effect tearing out of the hands of the managers of "maisons closes" (boarding houses) their last hold on the girls inveigled into them. The new law caused hilarity at the expense of the disreputable houses. No matter how much money a misled girl may owe the establishment, she can requisition the first policeman to make them let her trunks go freely out. As impounding their hats, shoes and street wraps for pretended debt was almost the last resort of constraint, the relief was great. The policeman must respond with diligence and kindness. If the escaping girl requests it they must take her to the commissary—called the "Father of the Ward"—with a view to her return home or protection and patronage. Or, if she demands it, the policeman must let her call a cab and go her way. Liberty to go her way holds all the effectiveness of the law.

What astonishes Parisians is the tale of actual violence and physical constraint, when it comes out, rarely. They know that to make an inmate, the girl's good will must first be won. Even passive resignation is not sufficient for one capital act, great with destiny, to dodge which is to risk harboring a girl without a card. This deliberate act, without which no girl can be safely kept a week as boarder, willing or unwilling, is her independent visit to the prefecture of police, to make her sad choice and demand a card. A fatherly party reads the applicant to a solemn lecture, bids her meditate—and return in a week. She is told what the card is—a slavery of its own. The card is, nevertheless, a tower of defense for the innocent against constraint.

Whenever the London officers of the international bureau intercept a cargo of white slaves from France, they find either cynical old hands perfectly aware of their destination or else innocent girls counting on a situation. Mr. Coote complains bitterly of certain French intelligence offices. Recently four girls, well brought up and respectable, were thus sent to London. Each understood that a situation awaited her. Yet no sooner had they arrived than their money was taken from them on the pretext of changing it; and Mr. Coote's agents got hold of them just in time. He seems to be persuaded that violence would have been possible in London. "Surely the French intelligence office should have been prosecuted," he writes, "but nothing was done. However well the French law may be administered at home, it seems to be relaxed when exportation is in question."

He is right. One of the reasons is that the detective brigades in the great French cities have been fully occupied with their specialty. They are only too glad when old hands willingly seek foreign shores. And those who are not old hands have not come under their observation. Intelligence office frauds have not been in the line of these brigades, because the recruiting was not being done for Paris. At the time of the first conference, in 1902, France suffered from a special form of cafe-concert slavery peculiarly insidious, in that it had a public amusement blind for its customers and could lure innocent girls with the promise to put them on the stage. They imagined that they were going into honest vaudeville entertainments. The first step was to put them in debt for "costumes and stage training." The second step was to ship them to the low "cafes-concerts" that sprang up like poisonous mushrooms all over France, even in comparatively small towns. And the third step was ruin on the spot by drink and bad example, because they must sit and "consume" with the audience between turns.

Once they got started, the special brigade wiped out the cafe-concert slave trade promptly. It was a trade of the middle aged, posing as theatrical managers and agents. It had been able to grow up because it was not in Paris.

Present international white slavery is similar new work for the special brigades. Its chief lure is the employment agency. Its chief blind for the police is at present the old stand-by of ridding Paris of female undesirables. But the special brigades have had their eyes opened, and as the operators are but mature rescals of both sexes ripe for jail, a single conviction will be sufficient for each. And France will cease to hold the exporting record of the white slave trade.

SPEAKER WHO HAS BEEN SHORN OF HIS POWER.

JOSEPH G. CANNON.

For nearly a generation Speaker Joseph G. Cannon, the stormy petrel of Congress whose wings were clipped by the insurgents, has been a unique figure in public life. "The last of the frontier type of statesmen, of which Lincoln was first"—when a celebrity said that of "Uncle Joe" some six years ago he was applauded for holding the mirror up to life, for picturesqueness and plainness have been so developed and nourished by the seer of Danville that without them he would be like President Taft without the expansive smile, like Theodore Roosevelt without the teeth and eye-glasses like "Buffalo Bill" without the long hair and slouch hat.

Biographically speaking, Speaker Cannon comes of Quaker parentage and was born in North Carolina in 1836. He spent his boyhood in Indiana, and later moved to Illinois, where he has lived ever since, his home being in Danville. With the exception of one term, when he was kept at home by his constituents, he has been in Congress since 1872, or nearly four decades. Over a quarter of a century ago he was appointed by Speaker Carlisle a member of the committee on rules—the self-same committee over which the stirring battle has just been fought in Washington. For many years he was chairman of the committee on appropriations, and was known as "watchdog of the treasury."

Once upon a time, about eight years ago, Mr. Cannon dictated an autobiography to a Washington correspondent. It was short, succinct and characteristic. It ran: "Mr. Cannon was born of God-fearing and man-loving parents. He made himself, and he did a darn poor job of it."

In appearance Mr. Cannon is a rather slim man, about five feet and a half in height. Despite his 74 years he is as straight as an arrow. His rugged face is ornamented with a grizzled beard, his upper lip being shaved. He is quick and alert in his movements, his eyes have a youthful sparkle. In conversation he is almost as vehement as when making a speech.

In Washington years and years ago he became noted for his keenness in debate. He is a master of satire, of razor-like edge. In the thirty-six years he has been at Washington Mr. Cannon has helped write many an important law. In the Forty-third Congress as member of the committee on postoffices and post roads he introduced a bill changing the postal rates on second class matter, and aided in putting through the amendments prohibiting the distribution of lottery tickets and obscene literature through the mails. At the beginning of the war wih Spain Mr. Cannon as chairman of the committee on appropriations cautioned delay, but when it became evident that the war would come he put in the bill appropriating $50,000,000 for national defense.

At Danville Speaker Cannon has what is regarded as one of the best equipped private libraries in the State, and when at home he spends hours browsing on literature. He is ranked as a millionaire, having made his fortune in the street railroad and banking business and in investments in agricultural lands. In oratory Speaker Cannon is galvanic. As he brings forth a new point he comes dancing forth on his tip-toes, swinging his arms like the sails of a Dutch windmill, upper-cutting and parrying and swinging and sidestepping. There is a saying in Illinois that he would not be able to make a speech in a twenty-foot ring. His speeches are well interlarded with biblical quotations, an occasional bit of near-profanity and always with parables and stories to back up each point.

What the Grocer Said.

"This is a nice business," said the grocer to a Fort Wayne reporter. "I sell to the very best people in Fort Wayne, and by the very best I mean the folks who want good things and who pay for them—folks who know how to get the best goods at the price of poorer ones. Take Easy Task soap as an example. It is increasing in demand every day. The reason is that it does half the work itself, and the women know that. Yes, Easy Task not only works by itself, but it sells itself."

The Curse.

An Irish authority thus defines as an expert the effects of a well delivered curse: "The belief among the ancient Irish was that a curse once pronounced must fall in some direction. If it has been deserved by him on whom it is pronounced it will fall on him sooner or later, but if it has not then it will return upon the person who pronounced it. They compare it to a wedge with which a woodman cleaves timber. If it has room to go it will go and cleave the wood, but if it has not it will fly out and strike the woodman himself who is driving it between the eyes."—London Globe.

TEACUP POLITICS.

A Bit of Life at Washington in Which Women Are Prominent.

From Ash Wednesday until the summer time scattering, the teapot and the samovar, with the punch bowl as a helpful ally, become potent aids in the forwarding of political careers at Washington. How efficacious these simple elements in the official game of good fellowship prove to be is past conjecturing, but old-time hostesses well up in the sport of politics as played across the afternoon tea table are the last to decry the tea-drinking habits as practiced in Washington.

The wag who said that "politics is the voice of Washington women" would have found much in the talk of those who surround the tea tables to support his views. Many of the prettiest and apparently least serious young women in officialdom actually have "views" on subjects political, which show that the young heads beneath the elaborate coiffures are better stored with knowledge than even their most ardent admirers would have dared to hope. In the game of politics as played by fair women, the tea table is an all-important adjunct.

Those who make the rounds of Washington drawing rooms assert that everything from a nomination to the corraling of a goodly block of votes may be accomplished at a Washington "afternoon tea." For the orderly and effectual dissipation of incipient ructions "back home" nothing is equal to the simple expedient of asking the wife of a visiting constituent to assist at one of these weekly functions. Feminine insurgency is not equal to holding out against the lures offered by the tactful hostess, and many a cup of tea sipped in the drawing room of an accomplished woman of the world has marked the turning point in a career.

WONDERFUL PRODUCTIONS OF THE MODERN STAGE.

THE FINAL SCENE IN THE "CHANTECLER."

Chantecler, the king of the farmyard, is convinced that his role in life is to make the sun rise with his crowing. One day, while Chantecler is happy in his supremacy over all the other birds, the eternal feminine appears in the form of a hen pheasant chased by a sporting dog. Chantecler's heart is won by this beautiful stranger. The second act opens in the depth of night, with a group of conspirators in the form of owls, who, equally convinced that Chantecler's song is the cause of the break of day, determine to kill the author of the hated daylight, and arrange that a fighting cock shall slay Chantecler. Suddenly the "Cocorico" of Chantecler is heard; the valley, seen through the opening in the forest, becomes rosy with the glow of the rising sun; the night birds are dispersed and Chantecler and the hen pheasant appear on the scene. In the next act the guinea fowl is "at home" in the kitchen garden. Chantecler fights with the game cock, and is almost killed, but, by an accident, is in the end victorious. At that moment the shadow of a sparrow hawk is thrown over the whole gathering and they rush to the protecting wings of their wounded chief, who crows defiance at the threatened danger. In the fourth act, "The Night of the Nightingale," Chantecler has wandered into the forest with his charmer, La Faisane. She is jealous of the cock's love of his work, and by a subterfuge, which keeps him asleep till after the sun has risen, shows him how idle is his belief that it is only through his agency that the day is born. Chantecler, however, determines to go back to the farm and pursue his daily task with the same firmness of purpose as before. The golden pheasant is left behind, only to fall into a poacher's trap, and to be brought, chastened in spirit, to the farmyard in subjection to Chantecler. The final scene in the play, which is pronounced the most beautiful, is here pictured.

VANITY'S COST IN LIFE.

Mute Witnesses of the Poverty of New York Toilers.

Appeal to heart and conscience alike must have been powerfully made to the many women and fewer men who were beguiled by social curiosity or led by philanthropic interest to examine the collection of garments and of photographs made by the Consumers' League and exhibited last week at the Normal College in New York, says the Churchman of that city. The photographs showed tenement rooms on the east side with men, women and little children working on the garments that hung close by with placards fastened to them telling the few pennies an hour and a garment that these same toilers had received. A large part of the exhibit was the work of the child victims of the sweatshop system. And it was by no means clothing of the cheaper grades that was most conspicuous, but articles made to meet the wishes of the well to do and even the fastidious, such as are sold in the city's most elaborately furnished stores. For dainty feather stitching on a baby's dress a child—herself hardly more than a baby—is paid perhaps 4 cents. Twelve bunches of artificial roses are made for a penny. If the worker is speedy she can earn 60 cents a day. Artificial violets are cheaper. A mother and four children, of ages from 12 to 5, earn together 60 cents a day. Their work may be seen at the exhibit. It is beautiful; but the system that produces it at this cost of young life is an abomination. Hand-sewed men's neckties, intended to be sold at from 50 cents to $1 each, pay the maker 55 cents a dozen. The ultra-respectable black collar for elderly women, retailing for 50 cents, costs the vender for making less than 1½ cents apiece. Is it nothing to those who buy such things that childlife is stitched into their seams? The Consumers' League exists to help these inarticulate workers to help themselves. It can succeed only by enlisting the co-operation of buyers, for whose protection it has provided a label of investigation and approval stating that the garment that bears it is "made under clean and healthful conditions."

YORKTOWN'S SURRENDER

Yorktown's surrender, every school child has learned, made the efforts of Britain to subdue the colonies hopeless. Penned in by the land forces of Washington and Lafayette on the one side and by the French fleet on the other, Cornwallis had no alternative but to surrender. The French have always claimed credit for the victory at Yorktown, but American historians give to Washington the credit of the plan by which the British forces were penned into the end of a peninsula by superior forces, and he commanded the allied forces before Yorktown. A marble monument which marks the scene of this great event was unveiled Oct. 19, 1885, having been erected by the United States.

Cornwallis had been driven back to the coast in his efforts to conquer Virginia by Lafayette. The young Frenchman won respect from the general who had boasted "that boy cannot escape me." Washington, from his position on the Hudson river, saw the possibility of hemming in Cornwallis between the great French naval fleet under Count de Grasse, when that commander sent a message from the West Indies that he was headed for Chesapeake bay, and had a sufficient land force. Cornwallis had deep water on three sides of him and a narrow neck of land in front; his expectation in retreating to Yorktown was to obtain aid from the British navy.

Leaving the Hudson Aug. 19, Washington's army of 2,000 continentals and 4,000 Frenchmen reached the scene of action near Yorktown Sept. 18. The French fleet had arrived in Chesapeake bay Aug. 31, and Sept. 5 it defeated the British fleet sent from New York under Graves. Thus Cornwallis was cut off from aid by water, and Lafayette drew across the peninsula leading back to Virginia a strong force. He was shut in his "mouse trap," as the exultant Americans put it.

Cornwallis' army, which numbered 7,247 men at the surrender, was nearly equal to Lafayette's 8,000 men—"and better in quality," says Fiske, "for Lafayette's contained 3,000 militia." But the British general hesitated to try forcing his way out by land, and he had no knowledge of Washington's movements. The arrival of the army under Washington Sept. 8 made an American force of 14,000 men before Yorktown, and with the French fleet barring aid or escape by the sea, it became only a question of time when the British would surrender. Oct. 17, after some fighting that proved fruitless for the British cause, Cornwallis hoisted the white flag, and the formal surrender occurred two days later.

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of illness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact that it is the only remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is, therefore, all-important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to purchase and note that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

It is pleasant and refreshing to the taste, and acts gently yet promptly on the kidneys, liver and bowels, cleanses the system effectually, dispels colds, headaches and fevers and assists in overcoming habitual constipation permanently, also biliousness and the many ills resulting therefrom. The great trouble with all other purgatives and aperients is not that they fail to act when a single dose is taken, but that they act too violently and invariably tend to produce a habit of body requiring constantly augmented doses. Children enjoy the pleasant taste and gentle action of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, the ladies find it delightful and beneficial whenever a laxative remedy is needed, and business men pronounce it invaluable, as it may be taken without interfering with business and does not gripe nor nauseate. When buying note the name, California Fig Syrup Co. printed on the front of every package. Price, 50 cents a bottle.

Damascus, a Garden City.

Damascus is a garden city touched by the great desert. Under its roses one feels the sands. Beside its trembling waters one dreams of the trembling mirage. The cry of its muezzins seems to echo from its mosque towers to that most wonderful thing in nature which is "God without man." The breath of the wastes passes among the poplars as that Bedouin boy passed among the merchants when he came and when he went. In Damascus one hears the two voices. And when one looks from the sacred mountain upon that city of dream, cradled among the woods, one sees far off the tawny beginnings of that other magic which looks out from the Bedouin's eyes. And though perhaps with the pilgrims from Samarkand one loves to rest beside the fountains under the hedges of roses, one is aware of the other love-intercourse with which has made Damascus an earthly paradise for them and for you.

NEVER COLLECTED HIS FEE.

Amateur Effort of Young Lawyer Went Unrewarded.

William Henry Marlatt went into the practice of law before he was admitted to the bar, but the lawyers' union has never objected to him on that account. It was in the summer of '92, after his graduation from the Yale law school and before he had been admitted to practice in this state, that he found a man in jail at Lebanon, Ohio, who was playing checkers with his nose because of a conflict between himself and the statute relating to horse stealing. Marlatt discovered some irregularity in the commitment papers and started habeas corpus proceedings which set his man at liberty.

They walked out of the courthouse into the street, where the man asked the young lawyer to state the amount of his fee, which information was furnished him without delay. The man hadn't the money with him, having been in jail, but he said he'd send it at once.

"My best advice to you," said the lawyer, "is to hotfoot it out of town as fast as ever you can before the sheriff gets after you with a new set of papers."

"Mr. Marlatt," replied the man, "if God lets me live until Saturday night I'll see that you get that money." And he started down the street on a run.

They never arrested the fellow, but Marlatt is certain sure God didn't let him live, because he never sent the money. He just started off on a run and for all anybody knows he ran himself to death. However, Mr. Marlatt recalls his first experience at the bar with mingled emotions as he mentions the fee he earned but never got.—Cleveland Leader.

How to Plant a Tree.

In anticipation of the needs of Arbor Day the Oklahoma experiment station has in press a bulletin on "Tree Culture," by Professor Morris of the horticultural department. While the bulletin treats of many features, such as the best trees to plant for shade or post and pole production, perhaps the most timely and useful advice is that relating to planting which is as follows:

The trees should be set a little deeper in the soil than they stood in the nursery row, or where previously grown. The soil must be worked in underneath the large roots and tamped firm about them. The top of the tree should be leaned slightly to the southwest.

This enables the tree to resist the hard south winds and before the end of the first season the tree will be standing in an erect position. It is a good plan to shake the tree several times while tamping the dirt around the roots and to pour water about the tree in order to bring the soil in contact with every bit of root surface. After the water has been poured on, another inch or two of dry soil and good surface should be thrown about the tree to prevent baking.

Farm Wagon Jack.

A simple and cheap form of wagon jack is illustrated. The material required is four pieces of wood and a few bolts. It will serve quite well if made of soft wood, but will not last so long or do so much heavy lifting as it would made out of hard wood. Hickory is the best, but white oak is almost as good. A is thirty-six inches long, six inches wide and one and one-half inches thick. B is thirty-six inches long, six inches wide, two inches thick. A is bolted to B at right angles with five three-eighths bolts. It also has a succession of half-inch holes bored two inches apart, towards the upper part. C is 2x3 inches, of hard wood and as long as may be desired. It has a succession of half-inch holes an inch and a half apart. D is three inches wide and one inch thick, and about forty-four inches long. It is bolted to B near one end, and has a number of half-inch iron holes through the upper part, and an iron pipe to run through. This simple and cheap device answers perfectly for all the usual purposes of a wagon jack.

Ripening Apples on Trees.

The longer apples remain on the tree, unless the weather becomes too cold to permit their exposure, the better the flavor and the keeping qualities. The fruit that comes to perfection the farthest north, as that in the Hood river region of Oregon, appears to have the finest keeping qualities without deterioration in flavor.

Of the varieties raised in the East the winter russets keep longest without being put in cold storage and really reach the full perfection of flavor only late in the winter or the early spring. It used to be considered a marvelous and almost an impossible thing to keep apples over from the fall till the first summer apples appeared, but with methods of cold storage so extensively used as they are now this is easily achieved and with far less deterioration in flavor than might reasonably be expected.

Benefits of the Silo.

It will keep your stock thrifty and growing all winter, produces fat beef more cheaply than dry feed, enables cows to produce milk and butter more economically, is more conveniently handled than dry fodder, prevents more of corn stalks in the manure, furnishes a feed that the stock will relish in the cold winter months, makes palatable food of stuff that would not otherwise be eaten, enables the farmer to preserve food which matures at a rainy time of the year, when drying would be next to impossible, and is easily constructed and the expense of building will be more than returned the first year, and because it is the most economical method of supplying food for the stock during the hot, dry periods in summer, when the pasture is short.—Missouri Experiment Station.

Trapping Hawks.

We recently heard of a poultryman who fastened several traps on posts and stumps near his poultry yard for the purpose of catching hawks. The traps worked day and night, and it was not long until he had caught five hawks, an owl and a polecat. Hawks have a habit of lighting on a post or tree to survey the field before swooping down on their prey.—Farmers' Mail and Breeze.

Hard-Worked Horses.

Many hard-worked horses suffer with sore backs and the harness galls. One of the best remedies for cooling and healing those sores is two teaspoonfuls of ground white oak bark, two quarts of water. Pour this water (hot) over the bark and let it stand until cool. Then strain and bottle for use. Bathe sores in this solution.

Watch the Cat.

Keep your eye on the pet cat if you have one. If not, then your neighbor may have one which visits you occasionally. It may cause the disappearance of many a chick you can not account for. It takes a pretty sharp eye to catch them at it sometimes. The only remedy we ever found effective in such cases is to kill the cat. It is impossible to break them of the habit once they get it.—Agricultural Epitomist.

Fertilizer for Meadows.

Experiment station tests have shown that nitrate of soda is the one fertilizer most needed by meadows in the spring. As early in the spring, the second year after wheat, if clover has been grown, as new fresh growth shows, make a mixture of equal weight of nitrate of soda and fine dry earth, and apply broadcast at the rate of 300 pounds per acre. It would be quite useless to use any other form of fertilizer, for everything depends upon immediate availability of the plant food. By this treatment not only will wild grasses be kept back, but also sporadic patches of clover. The young timothy will develop very thick growth, due to very extensive stooling. The cost of fertilizer and its application will be about $4 per acre if no fall application was made, and $6.75 if it was necessary to fall fertilize.

Poor Shelter for Sheep.

Often we see sheep housed in places like that shown in the picture. One can imagine what the interior of this hole would be after the winter rains. It is dark and entirely without ventilation except for the front, and in a case of a driving storm sheep would be in a worse condition inside than out. Sheep never thrive if confined in sheds that are draughty, too close, or badly ventilated, and it is surprising that men who have raised sheep for many years with poor results do not seem to appreciate this fact. A shed with an open side on the south and with an allowance of about twelve feet of floor space for each sheep, should be provided. Every sheep farm should have a dog-proof fence.

BAD SHEEP-SHELTER.

Weights Per Bushel.

Following is the minimum or legal weight in pounds per bushel for the various commodities, by United States standard:

Lime (unslaked)	30	Apples (dried)	26
Malt	38	Barley	48
Millet seed	50	Beans (castor)	46
Oats	32	Beans (white)	60
Onions	57	Blue grass seed	44
Peaches (dried)	33	Bran	20
Peas	60	Buckwheat	42
Peas (ground)	24	Clover seed	60
Irish potatoes	60	Coal	80
Sweet potatoes	55	Corn (shelled)	58
Rye	56	Corn (ear)	70
Salt (fine)	167	Corn meal	48
Salt (coarse)	151	Flaxseed	56
Timothy	45	Hair (plastering)	8
Turnips	55	Hemp seed	44
Wheat	60	Hungarian	50

Liquor and Price of Grain.

The Secretary of Agriculture is authoritatively quoted as saying that if every distillery and brewery in the United States were to close and never use another bushel of grain in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors, the American farmers, as a class, would not know it, as far as the effect would show itself on the markets for grain.

Land and Those Who Work It.

Ninety per cent of the land is owned by the men who work it, and about 70 per cent of it is farmed by the most intensive methods. The 30 per cent in grass is not pastured. A seven-year rotation generally practiced is: Clover and grass two years, rye, wheat, roots, barley, oats. The land is well manured and produces heavy crops of grass.

Bees and Fruit.

An insufficient supply of bees will hinder the setting of fruit. While other insects may take a part in the carrying of pollen, the fruit raiser must rely chiefly upon honey bees. Experience shows that, though bees may fly two or three miles, hives should be within half a mile of the orchard or small fruit patch.

To Cross a Brook.

This arrangement anchors a post so it will not pull out when the wires are tightened. A wire is stretched from the bases of the two posts over the top of the lower post in a brook or ravine.

Fine Country Butter.

A woman in Illinois who makes fine butter writes that she skims the cream of two or three days' milk together, letting it all sour at one time, and churns as soon as it is sour. She makes pound rolls, and her butter always commands the highest price, her customers preferring it to creamery butter.

Killing Wild Mustard.

Wild mustard plants are easily killed without injury to the growing cereal crop by spraying the grain fields with a heavy 20 per cent solution of iron sulphate just before the mustard plants have reached the blossoming stage, according to the Wisconsin Experiment Station.

Age of Horses.

A good authority on horses says that the gray will live the longest and that the roans come next in order. Blacks seldom live to be over 20, and creams rarely live more than ten or fifteen years.

The Largest Incubator.

The world's largest incubator is in Australia, where it is used to hatch 11,440 ducks' eggs or 14,040 hens' eggs at a time.

HOUSEHOLD TALKS

Doughnuts.

One cupful of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of melted butter, three eggs well beaten, one-half cupful of sour milk, one-half cupful of sweet milk, one-half teaspoonful of soda in milk, one teaspoonful baking powder in flour, nutmeg, salt; use just enough flour to stiffen with a spoon; take from the pan with spoon and spread on board; let rise fifteen minutes; then with a sharp knife cut off and bring together, and fasten with fingers, and fry in hot lard; do not use hands to mix; use spoon.

Sauce for Chocolate Pudding.

Pour over the fire a cup of milk and a rounded tablespoonful of sugar. Mix a rounded tablespoonful of flour with a little milk and when the milk and sugar boil stir this into it. Cook for several minutes, stirring all the time, take from the fire and add slowly the beaten yolk of an egg. Just before serving whip in the stiffened white with an egg-beater and add a little vanilla flavoring.

Dutch Apple Pudding.

One egg, one cup milk, one pint flour, two teaspoons baking powder, two tablespoons butter, saltspoon of salt. Mix and spread dough one-half inch thick on buttered cake tin. Cut pared and cored apples into eights and press into the dough. Sprinkle with granulated sugar and bake. Serve with cream and sugar.

Escalloped Onions.

Peel six onions; boil in cold water until tender; butter a shallow dish and arrange the onions on it; add a cup of milk and a tablespoonful of butter; sprinkle over a scant half-cup of cracker crumbs; put pieces of butter the size of a cherry on top of each onion; bake slowly about an hour.

Walnut Wafers.

Beat two eggs until light, then add one-half pound light brown sugar that has been rolled fine, one-half pound chopped nuts, three even teaspoonfuls of flour, a pinch of salt and one-half teaspoonful of baking powder. Drop small spoonfuls on buttered pans and bake until light brown.

Lemon Crackers.

One-half pint of sweet milk, one egg, one and one-quarter cups of sugar, one-half cup of lard, one-half tablespoonful of oil of lemon, two tablespoonfuls of carbonate of ammonia, enough flour to make into a soft dough. Beat or knead for twenty minutes, roll thin, cut out and bake in a quick oven.

Fried Bananas.

Peel the bananas and cut each one into three pieces, crosswise. Roll each piece in beaten egg, then in cracker dust, and when the coating has stiffened fry to a golden brown in hot fat. When done drain in a heated colander and send to the table on a very hot dish.

Sea-Foam Candy.

Two cups of granulated sugar, half cup of corn sirup, half cup of cold water, whites of two eggs. Boil the sirup, sugar and water until the mixture hardens when dropped into cold water, then whip in the whites of the eggs and pour into greased pans to cool.

Breakfast Rolls.

Take one and one-half cups of bread dough, one cup of warm water, one cup of sugar, one-half cup of lard, one beaten egg. Mix into a soft dough, let it raise until night, mold into rolls, place in a pan at least two inches apart, and leave until morning. Bake about fifteen minutes.

Butter Cakes.

Make a dough as for quick biscuit, roll out quarter of an inch thick, cut in small rounds and roll out these until thin as cookies. Prick with a fork, bake in a quick oven and when done butter well. Leave in the oven a minute and send to table.

Fruit Candy.

Wet two cups of sugar with two tablespoonfuls of water and boil until very thick. Stir in now a box of seeded and picked-over raisins and when these are well coated with the candy pour the mixture into buttered thins and mark off into bars.

Cocoanut Candy.

Mix together two cups of powdered sugar, four tablespoonfuls of cream, a teaspoonful of vanilla flavoring and a 5-cent box of grated cocoanut. Press the mixture hard into a square tin and cut into squares.

Hints About the House.

Good coffee cannot be produced in a dirty coffee pot. Therefore carefully wash and dry the coffee pot each time it has been used.

A little work basket in the guest room is often a great comfort and one of those little things which a guest particularly appreciates.

If your cooking utensils have a habit of burning or the victuals stick easily, try boiling a little vinegar in same. Acts like magic, especially with heavy skillets.

Delicious eggplant is prepared by cutting the raw vegetable up after the manner of white potatoes that are to be fried. These are then fried in boiling beef fat, sprinkled with salt and sent to the table piping hot.

When putting down linoleum or oilcloth have strips of molding nailed about the linoleum where it comes to the baseboard. This prevents dust from getting underneath and also preserves the edges from moisture under the floor covering.

Vaseline has quite a number of domestic uses. When the brasses are cleaned it is little extra work to rub them over with vaseline and polish with a soft duster; but this will save much work ultimately, as, after this treatment, they will not readily tarnish.

PRESIDENT'S LONELY LIFE.

Plain Common Folks Have a Better Time than the Nation's Chief.

After all, maybe it isn't so much fun to be the President of the United States. Perhaps there is more quiet, sociable satisfaction in being a noncommissioned officer in the great army of just common folks. There is almost of necessity a condition suggestive of loneliness attaching to every eminent, exclusive or unusual position in life. Whatever in the nature of wall or fence or social or official barrier serves to shut the crowd out, tends to shut the individual in. One cannot enjoy the honor and distinction of occupying a position above the level of the multitude and at the same time feel that sense of intimate sociability that comes of touching elbows with one's fellow beings. The normal, ordinary mortal does not particularly enjoy being too much in the presence of his superiors, especially if he is expected to make the attempt of presuming to meet them on the level.

And so it is that for every-day people to meet and enjoy the society of the highest executive officer of the United States of America requires more tact and less self-consciousness than those who have never tried it would be likely to imagine, the Christian Science Monitor says. Perhaps the feeling that is apt to possess one making such an attempt might be compared in a measure to the sensation one would experience in going for a stroll with a friend who was mounted on stilts. As a matter of fact, the President would, no doubt, gladly get down from his official stilts if it were possible for him to do so; but, try as he will, he is powerless in the matter. He may seek to make those about him believe that he is no taller than they are, but it counts little what he may say or do; they will persist in looking up to him. Perhaps there has never been an occupant of the White House who has come nearer to meeting the people on a common level than does President Taft. But those with whom he meets cannot forget that he is the first citizen of the great republic.

The President of the nation, whoever he may be, needs and deserves all the honest and disinterested friendliness that individuals and the public can give him.

VALUE OF FARM PRODUCTS.

Census Bureau's Statement Concerning Method of Ascertaining It.

Inquiries have been made of the Census Bureau whether farm products should be valued by farmers, in replying to census enumerators, at the general wholesale prices or at the actual prices obtained by the producer. It was pointed out by the inquirers that many farmers sell a proportion of their eggs for breeding, at much higher than the regular price. Others sell part or all of their milk, butter, and cream, at retail. Quite a number sell pure-bred live stock of various kinds at more or less fancy prices. The bureau's correspondents are of the opinion that if sales are quoted in this way in the census reports, the results might be somewhat uncertain as a basis for the average market prices.

Responding to these inquiries, Census Director Durand states that in forming its inquiries and instructions with reference to the value of domestic animals and fowls, the Census Bureau must necessarily follow the lines laid down in the law governing its action. That law requires the bureau to ascertain the number and value of animals and fowls. The value sought is not the value of some particular class of animals or fowls, but of all animals and fowls. It is the amount at which the animals and fowls can be sold. Good pure-blooded animals will sell for more, and thus have a greater value than the poor animals. Where there are many pure-blooded, the average will be higher than where the opposite condition of affairs prevails, but, as a matter of fact, the pure-blooded animals are so thoroughly distributed that they left no appreciable influence upon the average published by the twelfth census, except in the case of the young colts of the State of New Jersey.

No appreciable influence on the average price or value of eggs, milk or butter is observed in consequence of the practice mentioned by the inquirers. The high-priced eggs, milk, butter, etc., are found about as much in one part of the country as in another. The average which the census will publish is not that of a particular class of eggs, but of all eggs produced. It is the same for all animals, fowls and animal products. The relative number and value of the animals and products to which specific attention has been called does not exert, for the country as a whole or for many of the States, an influence sufficient to make the average published by the census materially different from the average market prices.

Not the Sealskin.

Simeon Ford, apropos of wifely sympathy, and at a recent dinner in New York:

"How hard it is when the wife is unsympathetic! Poor Jones trudged home through zero weather the other night, and, blowing on his frozen hands, said solemnly:

"'Well, I've got the sack.'

"'Oh, you dear!' his wife cried. 'The sealskin, or the other one?'

"'The other one,' said Jones, laughing bitterly."

Why She Returned.

Mrs. Johnson had gone away from home, leaving Mr. Johnson disconsolate. On arriving at her destination, she missed her gold lace pin, and wrote her servant, asking the girl to let her know if she had found anything on the dining-room floor.

The servant wrote as follows: "When sweeping the dining-room floor this morning, I found thirty matches, four corks and a pack of cards."—Success Magazine.

Reason for His Objection.

"I have engaged to take a course of lessons in mind reading, dear."

"I don't think you had better spend money in that foolish fashion, dear."

"Do you think I could not learn to read your mind?"

"No, I think perhaps you could."—Houston Post.

Have You Tried?

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? We can furnish positive proof that it has made many remarkable cures after all other means had failed.

Women who are suffering with some form of female illness should consider this.

As such evidence read these two unsolicited testimonial letters. We guarantee they are genuine and honest statements of facts.

Cresson, Pa.—"Five years ago I had a bad fall, and hurt myself inwardly. I was under a doctor's care for nine weeks, and when I stopped I grew worse again. I sent for a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, took it as directed, and now I am a stout, hearty woman."—Mrs. Ella E. Aikey, Cresson, Pa.

Baird, Wash.—"A year ago I was sick with kidney and bladder troubles and female weakness. The doctors gave me up. All they could do was to just let me go as easily as possible. I was advised by friends to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier. I am completely cured of my ills, and I am nearly sixty years old."—Mrs. Sarah Leighton, Baird, Wash.

Evidence like the above is abundant showing that the derangements of the female organism which breed all kinds of miserable feelings and which ordinary practice does not cure, are the very disorders that give way to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Women who are afflicted with similar troubles, after reading two such letters as the above, should be encouraged to try this wonderfully helpful remedy.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

FASHION HINTS

Foulards are coming in such lovely shades and patterns, that it's no wonder they are to be more than ever popular this season. One of wistaria, figured over with irregular dashes of white, is shown here. It is designed for general wear. A little hand embroidery on the vest adds to its attractiveness. The "kimona" or "peasant" type of shoulder-and-sleeve-in-one, is again fashionable.

Beautiful Wall Coatings for Homes.

In line with the progress of all other things in these modern days is the beautiful, perfect and sanitary wall coatings for our homes. Alabastine is the name of a rich, soft and velvety preparation for the decoration of walls and ceilings. It adheres to the walls of its own adhesive qualities. It is inexpensive, clean, artistic and so easily put on that any one can follow the printed directions on every package. Any shade or tint is easily produced. Alabastine is proof against insects or disease germs so prevalent in wall paper. It does not rub off and flake like kalsomine. A complete color plan for the walls of the home and stencils to help make the home beautiful, together with a book about home decorations and samples of color effects will all be sent free by the Alabastine Company, 482 Grandville avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich. This liberal offer to home decorators deserves careful perusal.

BY TAVENNER

"I am now fast getting to be an old man. I have seen the great corporations and the trusts and combinations grow in this country at a rapid and well-night irresistible pace, and they will grow faster and faster until we shall be absolutely helpless unless we adhere faithfully to the provisions of the anti-trust law. The pending railroad companies immunity from the anti-trust law will confer on them unlimited power to effect mergers. I for one can never consent to such legislation.

In what was probably the most remarkable speech in his career, United States Senator Knute Nelson of Minnesota thus spoke of the Taft-Wickersham railroad regulation bill. That such an attack could be made by a republican senator upon a bill which the president has declared to represent true republican policy and doctrine, and support of which Attorney General Wickersham and all the reactionaries have declared is a test of true republicanism, indicates how far apart the stalwarts and progressives really are.

The Minnesota senator was listened to with marked attention. The reactionaries were so amazed the forgot to even make interruptions, as is customary when progressive republicans have the floor. It was so obvious that Senator Nelson was deeply impressed with forebodings of disaster to the nation in the event of the passage of such bills as the one under consideration, that the speech was strangely effective. The occupants of the galleries were silent and attentive, and all eyes were centersd upon the picturesque Minnesotan.

Senator Nelson related how the western section of the country had suffered under railroad oppresion and the long fight that had been made, until the legislation of 1906 was forced by public sentiment. He talked of the anti-trust law as the shield which had been created to protect the public against further oppression by trusts and combinations of all sorts, and then proceeded to show how the pending bill purposes to destroy that protection and to give the railroads unrestricted power to resume their oppressive methods.

"If we are not wise," warned the Minnesota senator, "if we are no wiser than the French were in the days of Louis XV and Louis XVI and allow these trusts and monopolies to grow and go on untrammeled the day will come—it will not be in our day, but the day will come—when the American people will resort to a revolution as the people of France had to do, but it will be a peaceful revolution—an American revolution—not as violent and repulsive as the French, but as thorough and effective in its results.

"Mr. President, I am very much obliged to senators for listening to me without interrupting me. My opinion of this bill as it came here from the comittee in the first instance is that in essense its chief aim was to protect the railroags against the anti-trust law. I can come to no other conclusion, and being a plain, blunt man, I can not help expressing this opinion in this chamber and before this body."

"Sure Cure"

"I would like to guide suffering women to a sure cure for female troubles," writes Mrs. R. E. Mercer, of Frozen Camp, W. Va. "I have found no medicine equal to Cardui. I had suffered for about four years. Would have headache for a week at a time, until I would be nearly crazy. I took Cardui and now I never have the headache any more."

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

The pains from which many women suffer every month are unnecessary.

It's not safe to trust to strong drugs, right at the time of the pains.

Better to take Cardui for a while, before and after, to strengthen the system and cure the cause.

This is the sensible, the scientific, the right way. Try it.

COMPLETE SPECIFICATIONS OF NEW COURT HOUSE

COURT ROOMS

The circuit court room, in size 40x60 feet, with 20 foot ceiling, is located in the center of the north half of the building. The court room will be provided with a large bar lobby, with a certain amount of space for the accommodation of the public. The judge's bench will be located at the west end of the room with the jury box on the north side and the clerk of the court on the south. The other officers of the court will be distributed in the customary way. Provision will be made for a large bar lobby between the judge's bench and the bar lobby, separating the court from the spectators. A small court room, in size 35x27 feet, will be located in the southeast corner of this floor. This court room will be furnished similar to the large court room, with the exception that it will not be provided for jury cases, being intended to accommodate such cases that come before the judge, however, in case of emergency, a jury trial can be held in this court room.

JUDGE'S CHAMBERS

Directly in connection with the circuit court room and in connection with the small court room, will be the judge's chambers. These rooms are spacious in size and each is provided with a private toilet room.

COURT STENOGRAPHER

The court stenographer for the circuit court will be located directly adjoining the judge's chambers.

JURY ROOMS

There will be two jury rooms: Jury room No. 1, in size 14x25 feet, is in direct connection with the circuit room and immediately adjoins the location of the jury box. Jury room No. 2, in size 23x18 feet, is located in the northeast corner of the building, and each jury room is provided with a private toilet.

PRIVATE STAIRS AND ELEVATOR

Between the judge's chambers off of the circuit court room and the law library will be located the private stairway and elevator from the sheriff's office and county clerk's office in the basement and first floor below.

LAW LIBRARY

The law library will occupy a spacious room 30x23 feet, located directly in the center of the west front. The law library will have a 16 foot ceiling, with a decorative plaster cornice and cove. The law library will be equipped with library shelves and a thoroughly up-to-date law library.

ATTORNEY'S CONSULTATION ROOM

Immediately adjoining the law library to the south will be the attorney's consultation room, in size 12x23 feet.

GRAND JURY ROOM

The grand jury and prosecuting attorney will occupy a room 15x18 feet, and is provided with a private toilet room.

WITNESS ROOMS

The men's and women's witness rooms for the circuit court room occupy a space at the north side of the east stairs. Each room in size is 14x20 feet, and each is provided with separate toilet rooms. There will also be in connection with the grand jury room separate men and women witness rooms with private toilet rooms and are located in connection with the grand jury room in the southwest corner of this floor.

COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT'S OFFICE

The county superintendent's office occupies half of the center part of the south front, and will consist of a public business office 20x18 feet, with a supply room 15x10 feet, and a public examination room 39x20 feet.

GRAND ARMY ROOM

Occupying the remaining portion of the center south part of this floor will be a room 39x22 feet, intended to be assigned to the G. A. R. or the DeKalb county historical society and for county curios.

ATTIC STORY

The attic or space between the ceiling of the second floor and the roof will not be used for any purpose otherwise, than serving for ventilation above the second story and roof, and such ventilation pipes as may be necessary. This space will be reached by stairs from the second floor, with walks to the several windows and clock dials.

CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING

It is designed to make the construction of the building thoroughly modern and fire proof in every particular. The foundations will be constructed of concrete. The exterior walls will be faced on all four sides with cut stone, treated in a monumental and dignified character. The exterior walls will be brick and cut stone. The interior construction will be similar to that employed in what is known as "skeleton office construction," and will consist of reinforced concrete columns, girders, beams and floors. This interior skeleton construction will be entirely erected, together with the concrete roof, before any of the interior dividing partitions are placed in position. All floors will be constructed of reinforced concrete and hollow tile, a form of construction which provides a great element of strength at a minimum cost of construction, and also occupying a minimum amount of space. These floors will have a bearing capacity for a load ranging from 150 to 300 pounds per square foot, with a factor of safety of four. This factor of safety means that the floors could be loaded four times their normal carrying capacity without danger. The construction of the roof will be similar to that of the floors, supported with steel trusses and construction, and will be made of reinforced concrete.

ROOF COVERING

On top of the reinforced concrete forming the roof construction will be laid a composition gravel roof for the flat decks, and a vitrified tile for the steel roofs. In connection with the vitrified tile will be glass tile of a similar form, forming a skylight in the center at the intersection of the steel roofs, forming a skylight over the center rotunda.

FLOORS

The floors in the offices will be finished with a marble concrete, generally known to the public as a "granite" floor. The floors in the corridors and halls will be composed of marble tile and marble nosaic. The floors in the court rooms and commissioners' office will be cement, covered with rubber tile for deadening the noise of walking.

PLASTERING

All plastering throughout the building will be hard mortar. Before plastering is applied to the outside brick walls, the brick work will be covered with a dampproofing for protecting the plastering and interior decorations. An ornamental plaster cornice will be used in the corridors and the two court rooms, commissioners' room and law library.

WOOD WORK

The only woodwork that will be employed in the building will be the window frames and sash and a high wood wainscoting in the court rooms, which is done to stimulate the acoustic qualities, and such chairs as may be necessary throughout the various offices.

DOORS

All doors throughout the building, including the door frames and casings, will be of steel with an enameled painted finish in imitation of oak and mahogany. These doors will be standard fireproof door, of such material and construction that will pass the requirements of the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

INTERIOR HARDWARE

All interior hardware for doors and windows will be of cast bronze, using ball bearing butts for the doors, unit locks with screwless spindles and cast bronze knobs. All hardware showing finish will be of a suitable design to correspond with the style of architecture of the building.

MARBLE WORK

The walls of the corridors, rotunda and stairs will be wainscoted in marble at a height of about 7 feet. The lobbies of all offices will be wainscoted in marble to the height of 4 feet. All rooms will have a marble base and all windows a stone or marble window stool. All stairs from the first to the second floor will be constructed of steel with marble treads and risers, marble strings and newel posts, with metal balustrades and mahogany handrails.

DECORATIONS

The interior decorations of the building will be of the highest grade, to be in harmony with the marble and material employed in the finishing. The rooms forming the various offices, etc., will be finished in simple colors in oil, with a stripped flat finish. The corridors, halls, rotunda, court rooms, commissioners' room and law library will be decorated with fresso colors in oil to develop the architectural treatment. The dome will be embellished with art glass in light colors, so as not to destroy the efficiency of the lighting of the center part of the building through the roof.

PLUMBING

All plumbing fixtures throughout the building will be of the very latest sanitary type, using enameled vitreous ware throuhout, automatic seat action ventilating closets, one piece solid vitreous lavatories and urinals. All toilet rooms will be separately ventilated with vent ducts to the attic, vent ducts having an aspirating coil at the bottom, and all interior drain pipes will be cast iron. The toilet partitions and wainscoting in toilet rooms will be of marble.

HEATING

The heating will be by vacuum steam, furnished with a sufficient amount of fresh air through direct, indirect radiators placed beneath the windows, besides a certain amount of direct radiation for heating the building.

VENTILATION AND ACOUSTICS

Particular attention will be given to the ventilation of the various offices and court rooms, as well as to the acoustic requirements of the court rooms. The various offices and court rooms will be separately ventilated, particularly those of the court rooms, so that a rapid change of the air can be maintained when the rooms are crowded, and during normal conditions the circulation of the air may be maintained by gravity. The various vent ducts will have aspirating coils at the base to maintain and make the change of air rapid. The court rooms will be arranged for ceiling ventilation to be used during the summer months. Electrical fans, placed in the attic, will be used for exhausting the air, each controlled separately through the custodian's room and court rooms. By this system of ventilation, which can be installed at a minimum cost, the cost of operation is reduced to a minimum, as there are only certain times when rapid ventilation will be required, and during normal conditions, the ventilation will be maintained by gravity circulation. The only woodwork used on the interior for finishing will be a high wainscoting in the court rooms, which is done to make the wall surfaces resonance, which together with particular attention to the formation of the ceiling, will insure perfect acoustic properties.

ARTIFICIAL LIGHTING

The interior artificial lighting of the building will be by electricity and modern electric fixtures, all to be controlled by electrical switches from the various halls and rooms.

FURNITURE, AND FURNISHINGS

All interior furniture, such as counters, will be built up with marble fronts, wood tops and bronze grilles. All tables, roll top desks and filing devices for the records will be made out of steel and marble. The special furniture for the court rooms, which shall include judge's bench, jury box, clerk and witness desks, will be made out of steel. The only woodwork used in connection with the furniture will be the chairs, which will be oak and mahogany as the various rooms require. The interior furnishings, such as window shades and the various articles necessary for the use of the various offices, will be of the best of their kind for the purpose intended.

EXTERIOR DESIGN

The exterior design of the court house is modern Greek architecture or Greek colonial. The scale of the various parts and members was kept rather severe, to be in harmony with the size of the building. The general character of the building will be monumental and dignified, rather severe in its general character, with a sufficient amount of ornamentation to give the exterior a pleasing appearance, interesting and free from being monotonous.

ESTIMATED COST

The estimated cost of the building as herein described, can be executed within the amount of $250,000, making everything of a permanent, first class character suitable for a building for the purpose intended to be used, and of such a character that many years will elapse before there will be any indication of wear and tear. By the use of such material as intended, a perfect, sanitary and hygenic condition throughout the building can be easily and economically preserved.

IN GENERAL

As the architects selected to prepare the plans, details and specifications and supervise the construction of the plans for the court house for DeKalb county, we offer ourselves as thoroughly experienced in this special line of building. We have long made a study of this class of work, and are familiar with, not only the planning of such a building, but by actual experience in the construction of several court houses, we know that we are thoroughly competent to produce results that will be not only satisfactory to meet the requirements of the county, but will be pleasing to everyone who has an occasion to visit the building. It is our intention that the new court house building shall be a thoroughly modern designed and equipped building, equal to the best class of buildings now being constructed for this class of service.

The senior member of our firm was the supervising architect on the Hancock county, Greenfield, Ind, court house, also the Starke county, Knox, Ind., court house.

We have just recently completed a court house for Monroe county, Bloomington, Ind., $180,000.

Scottish Rite Cathedral, Fort Wayne, Ind., $200,000.

LaPorte county superior court building and jail, Michigan City, Ind., $140,000.

Defiance county infirmary, Defiance, Ohio, $25,000.

And have under construction lyceum building for the St. Patrick's Roman Catholic congregation, Fort Wayne, Ind., $40,000.

Covered market way, Fort Wayne Ind., $20,000.

Custodian building for adult women in connection with the Indiana School for Feeble Minded Youth, Fort Wayne, Ind., $60,000.

The above description in detail will give a general and concise conception of the proposed new building, its size, character, finish and equipment, so that any one who takes the pains to read this descriptive specification through, will have a detailed ideas as to the character of building proposed and contemplated by the board of commissioners and architects for DeKalb county.

Respectfully yours,
MAHURIN & MAHURIN.

A BIT OF ADVICE

First—Don't Delay. Second—Don't Experiment

If you suffer from backache; headaches or dizzy spells; if you rest poorly and are languid in the morning; if the kidney secretions are irregular and unnatural in appearance, do not delay. The kidneys are calling for help Slight symptoms of kidney trouble are but fore-runners of more serious complaints. They should be given attention before it is too late.

Doan's Kidney Pills cure kidney trouble—they are recommended by thousands. Can residents desire more convincing proof than the statement of a citizen of this locality, who says that the cure Doan's Kidney Pills effected years ago has proven permanent?

Philip Oherlin, Route No. 1, Waterloo, Ind., says: "The principal symptom of kidney trouble in my case was a lameness across my back and sides. Whenever caught cold, it settled in my kidneys and made my trouble worse. Finally I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and they completely and permanently cured me. I have previously endorsed this remedy and at this time I am glad to confirm my former statement."

The commencement exercises for the eighth grade graduates of the Butler schools will be held in the M. E. church, May 6. The class for this year is an unusually strong one, and there are seventeen to take the examination. They will furnish their own program.

"Olympia" was the name chosen by the judges for Mrs. Leech's ice cream parlor, and Miss Ester Wagner received the honor of furnishing the name and received $2 00 in cash. Miss Myrtle Boyle received second and Miss Erma Miller third. The meaning of the word Olympia is "finest quality."

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Yates entertained a number of their friends from the G. A. R. and W. R. C. at their pleasant home on West Main street, in honor of his birthday, on last Tuesday evening. Sandwiches, coffee, candy, ice cream and cake were served. It was a very enjoyable time for the "Old Boys" and their wives.

The misspelled word which occurred last week was in A. F. Brindley's ad and was found by J. G. Diehl, The word was "mattress." Several other words were reported. Try again this week. Typographical errors do not count. There are many common words which are often spelled wrong, and this is the kind of word to look for.

Herman Groscup, the manager of the new brick and tile yard, was in the city, Tuesday, laying out the ground for the sheds and kiln, also to rent a house to live in. He expects to move here within a short time. We understand the building will be two stories high (30x180) and the kiln will be one of the most up-to date patent kilns in the country. The company expects to buy a new boiler and engine as the old ones were not large enough to run the kind of plant they expect to operate They will be making brick and tile within the next sixty days. We understand they are loading the machinery and other equipment on the cars at Altona this week. The enterprize is one that Butler as well as surrounding country has been greatly in need of. We wish the company success in their new undertaking.

It is the opinion of the HERALD editor that Thomas Taggert has ruled the democrats long enough, and that Thomas R. Marshal is the man who can safely lead his party to victory.

The Auburn Courier took exceptions to the HERALD because it published the specifications for the proposed temple of justice. The Courier editor makes us think of the old fashioned musket whose ammunition chamber was something immense, but when once discharged they were about as dangerous at one end as the other, and outside of a big noise they were quite harmless.

Gilbert H. Hendren of Linton, is candidate for clerk of the supreme court on the democratic ticket. He is a graduate in law and for four years edited a democrat newspaper, and has been a leading worker for his party for twenty-five years. For two campaigns he headed the speakers bureau. He is especially fitted for the coveted position, and deserving of the co-operation of every democrat.

The Fort Wayne News says Butler is nearly pestered to death with gypsies. Well, what do you think of that. The editor of this paper has been around some, and the only one of the never-wash tribe we have seen came in and wanted to hold our hand, but we told her our wife was liable to come in most any time and we wouldn't take the long chance. She at once betook herself from the sanctum She tried to make love to Mr. Lake at the meat market, but failed to cut the sausage, and left town.

Sadie McCurdy of Angola is the guest of O. A. Garber and wife this week.

Clinton North has returned from Auburn after several days visit with Sheriff Thomas.

Clarence Murch returned to his school at Ann Arbor, Tuesday, after a ten days visit with his parents.

The HERALD has an administrator's notice this week signed by Coats & Endicott. While there has been no partnership arrangements as yet between Mr. Coats and Mr. Endicott, there is a possibility that there will be later on. Mr. Coats has given Mr. Endicott access to his office and library and, they will work together some during the summer, but it is the intention of Mr. Endicott to continue his school work here another year He has studied law and has been admitted to the bar at Logansport, and will take up the work at the close of the next school year.

Swimming is not only something which boys proverbially enjoy, but is also frequently urged as an accomplishment which all persons owe it to themselves to possess. Yet a surprisingly large number of young men—even among those who go to sea—do not learn to swim. While the Atlantic squadron was holding its winter drill in Cuban waters a few weeks ago there was swimming instruction for no fewer than 3,500 men in the fleet who had never acquired the art.

The desirability of a uniform for school children has been the subject of debate among leaders of thought in the State of Washington. The raising of the question is due to the unhappy rivalry that so frequently arises among school children at graduation time. The aim is to make popular the adoption of some simple style of dress which shall do away with competition and at the same time serve the purpose of utility and convenience. There is no reason why the plan should not succeed. It has long been in practice in English schools, and in some of the best-known private schools in America. It will succeed as soon as a uniform is adopted by any particular school which seems to confer distinction and a mark of differentiation from the less fortunate.

Are virtuous actions intuitional? That is to say, are the feelings that prompt them divinely given? Are they independent of the experience and teachings of ourselves and our ancestors? Herbert Spencer rejects the intuitional theory. To him, conscience seems not innate, but a matter of education and environment. For instance, is there any natural intuition of the sinfulness of murder? Modern people generally regard it as sinful because they have been so taught; but the Fijian regards murder as an honorable action. In like manner, the Turcomans consider theft honorable, and pay honor to the memories of noted robbers. Our own primitive savages held horse-stealing and scalp-lifting to be not only praiseworthy, but the tests of manhood and qualities of leadership. The ancient Egyptians prided themselves on their skill in lying, but they were mere pikers in this art beside some of the modern devotees of high finance. There is much in human history to justify the doctrine of original sin. Our virtues seem to be acquired qualities, begot by patient and painful endeavor, through imitation of the example of the better specimens of the race and the teachings of the illuminati. Men have stoned their prophets in all ages, but they have nevertheless profited by their instructions. The same process is going on to-day. We of this generation are starting from higher ground, but we are climbing no less surely than did our remote ancestors. Perhaps the most notable feature of the day is the tendency to be dissatisfied with mere abstract morality and to insist upon its manifestation and application in the concrete. The people are demanding higher standards in business, finance and industry. High ideals alone are not satisfying. There must be high living as well as high thinking. The popular impatience with existing evils is shown in the numerous efforts to correct them by statutory enactment.

Edward VII., "by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India"—such is his official designation—began the tenth year of his reign in January. When he ascended the throne, on the death of his mother, the diplomatic capital of Europe was Berlin, and the Kaiser's will was the dominating power in European affairs. London now rivals Berlin as the diplomatic center, and the purposes and plans of the British king are more dominant than those of any other European personality. Edward has devoted himself to the diplomacy of peace through the conservation of the rights of the powers and the removal of the causes of irritation. He has allayed the century-long suspicion by Frenchmen of British purposes, and has done much toward checking the development of jealous hostility on the part of his subjects toward Germany. Were it not for his pacific efforts, the anti-German agitators might before this have precipitated a conflict of arms. In domestic affairs his influence has been exerted toward a better understanding between the contending factors, and he is recognized by all parties as an impartial arbitrator, seeking, above all things, the best interests of the empire. No suggestion has been made for years that he is unfit, by intellectual equipment or by temperament, to be the head of the great nation. At one time in his youth there were agitators against the monarchy who predicted that a revolution would ensue on the death of Victoria, and that the Prince of Wales would never ascend the throne. But the idea of such a revolution disappeared long before he became king. When he finally did ascend the throne, he had fortunately come to the ripe maturity of his great abilities, with a full appreciation of the responsibilities and obligations of the head of a wide-spreading and powerful empire.

Sarcasm That Was Wasted.

Life tells of an old fellow, a member of a whist club in Brooklyn, who enjoyed the reputation of being a great crank. His animadversions against his partners were so severe that it was rare indeed that he could get anyone to play with him.

One night, however, a man happened in from the West and the avoided one promptly assailed him with a request to "sit in." The Western man was about to comply when he was taken aside by one of the members of the club who told him the reputation of the crank.

"I don't care," he said. "I can stand it, I guess."

At the end of the evening he was approached once more by the curious member.

"Well," said the member, "how did you manage?"

"First rate."

"Did he insult you?"

"Why, no."

"Didn't he browbeat you?"

"Not at all."

"Didn't he say anything?"

"Nothing special. He only spoke once during the whole course of the game."

"What did he say then?"

"Why, I didn't get the cards out right, and he looked over very pleasantly and said: 'Why, you can't even deal, can you?'"—Montreal Herald.

Subduing a Bully.

A writer in a Vladivostok paper tells of an encounter he once witnessed on a Siberian train between a lady and a nobleman.

When the train pulled up at Tsitikar, in Manchuria, a Manchu noble who had bullied all his fellow passengers alighted at the station restaurant after warning them that he would decapitate any of them who took his seat. During his absence a smartly dressed young Russian lady entered the car and, despite the alarmed expostulations of its occupants, calmly appropriated the seat. When the noble returned he flew into a passion and advanced threateningly with his curved saber drawn. But the young woman coolly covered him with a shining revolver.

"Do you take us for a pack of cowardly mandarins?" she exclaimed, and then, pointing to her feet, she remarked: "Here is your place, my hero."

The Manchu noble surrendered and sat at her feet for the rest of the journey.

Passed Through.

They had just got back from a trip abroad, says a writer in the Yonkers Statesman, and were telling some callers all about it. They had taken their motor, as the story abundantly shows. "And did you go through Berlin, too?" asked one of the callers. "I should just love to see Berlin!"

"Did we, dear?" said the wife to her husband.

"Yes," replied the busy man, from behind his paper. "Don't you remember we bought some gasoline there?"

"And Paris—did you stop in Paris?" continued the caller.

"Did we, dear?" asked the wife of her better half.

"Why, of course. Don't you know we busted a tire there and had to have a new one put on!"

Not a Progressive.

"Wouldn't a railway increase the population of this village?" asked the enterprising person.

"Dunno's it would," replied the native. "It 'ud be a constant temptation to a lot of us inhabitants to get away."—Washington Star.

MY DREAM OF DREAMS.

Alone within my house I sit;
The lights are not for me,
The music, nor the mirth; and yet
I lack not company.

So gayly go the gay to meet,
Nor wait my griefs to mend—

Than thine, to-night, my friend.

Whilst thou, one blossom in thy hand,
Bewail'st my weary hours,
Upon my native hills I stand
Waist-deep among the flowers.

The Woman Who Listened

The little club at Royat-les-Bains, where I was taking the cure, had swallowed up most of my ready money, and I was bound to go over to La Bourboule to see my elder brother.

Even if I had not been broke I should not have taken a first-class on such a little side line. A middle-class girl got in, and the hot summer night and the question of a draught from the window soon got us into conversation. She confided to me that she had met her mistress in America, that her mistress was a Polish countess, that she was traveling by the same train, that they had been taking the cure at Vichy, were going to complete it at Mont-Dore, that her mistress was certainly young, a widow, and pretty.

This, interspersed with what I vouchsafed, occupied Miss King, for that was her name, and myself till we stepped out into the dark at the little station of Laqueuilles, from which I learned we were to proceed by an omnibus across the mountains to La Bourboule.

We—la comtesse, King and I—were the only passengers, and this, with the fact of my acquaintance with King, and that none of us were English, soon enabled me to get into conversation with the little Polish lady who interested me strangely, for she certainly was very young to be a widow, and was a very fragile little beauty with quite ivory skin, jet-black hair, large dazzling, turquoise-blue eyes, and a little round red mouth.

It was a lovely night, but the heat in the 'bus was intense, and, therefore, there was nothing unnatural in my remark:

"Should we not find it cooler if we went outside?"

I was soon helping Mme. La Comtesse to climb by the little ladder on to the roof.

"So you have been picking poor King's cotton brains about me. Well, what have you found out?"

"That we both belong to a conquered nation."

"You are Irish."

"Yes, who told you?"

"King. What else?"

"She told me I must find out the rest for myself."

"You asked her my name?"

"No, indeed."

"Then, what?"

"If you were pretty."

She smiled, but said nothing, as if avoiding an obvious compliment, and then said:

"If chance had thrown me into confidences with your valet, I think I should have asked your name."

"Do you know," said I, "it would be a unique experience to meet as we have met, to woo and win, to continue to the end, and if there never were an end, to part unknown and unknowing, never to meet again, but always wondering and being wondered about, and, therefore, never forgotten."

"Do you think so?"

"Oh, yes!" I replied. "Every one else you know, every one else I know, knows all about us—our names, our ages, our likes and dislikes; the goat-paths we have traveled and will return to; they and we have worn out our interest and our love and hate, one for the other. But a new experience would be to part before we wore out our loves, never to see one another change or grow old, but always to stay in each other's memory as we are, young; never to know the other is dead or married, but always to feel that one thing in the world had not come to an end, believing that, if we met again, we would be the same."

"Go on!" was all she said.

I took her little hand.

"To exchange names is to label oneself, to establish doubt; fear as to the past and as to what the other will do, or think, or say. Not to give names is to act naturally as if alone, unseen, unwatched, unafraid.

She was entranced; her head was on my shoulder. She said dreamily: "Go on! Talk to me!"

"If I do not tell you my name, if I never hear yours, nothing that may ever happen to either of us will matter. If your death were announced, if my name became the most dishonored in the world's history, it would bring no sorrow or shame to either of us, nor shadow our pleasant memory of to-night which must be eternal."

"The idea has endless possibilities. Names, as you say, are a folly. I will not tell you mine."

I persuaded her to break the journey and we went to our hotels, I to the Iles-Britaniques, she to the Ambassadeurs, chose our rooms, and by agreement, met again and wandered about till we found a place open to eat supper in. But we ate little. I smoked and talked. She listened with her great eyes intent upon me.

At what time I kissed her for the last time and we parted, I do not know. I remember she cried and clung to me, and I promised to call for her after I had seen my brother. This I did, but only to leave a note with King, saying my borther required me to start at once for Paris from which I would return immediately and come straight to her.

On the third day I was back, only to learn that the lady I described had gone to Lyons. I followed her there, and after some delay tracked her to Biarritz, and thence to Spain. I was madly in love and I determined to find her.

I tracked her till I came to Barcelona, where I could not hear of her having left, and yet where I could not find her anywhere. In my despair, I sent her description to the police. At last they came—there were several of them—and the principal one said:

"Do you know her?"

"Yes."

"Is her name——"

I stopped him with I do not know her name. She is a Polish countess; where is she?"

"You are quite right, signor. You have been following her all over Spain. We have followed you. We know all about you. You need have no fear."

"Never mind about me. What of her?"

"Her name is——"

"I don't know or wish to know her name. Where is she?"

"On her way to Siberia."

"Siberia! Why Siberia?"

"She was enticed to a luncheon on board a yacht by the Russian secret police."

"My God! The police! What is she supposed to have done?"

"They say she is a member of some political secret society."

There was nothing more to say, nothing to be done, but journey back to London, worm myself into the confidence of the Russian embassy, get letters of credit and a passport, become attached to a great newspaper, and start on a mission to prove to the world at large that Russian prisons were all that is beautiful and good, and the Siberian mines were rest cures. I knew they would be so prepared for me, as they had been so prepared for other traveling Englishmen. I found them so, and so reported, and accordingly I was given all information I desired. I played my game well, and was more than discreet, never asking the one thing about the one person in the world I wanted to know till I found myself inside the fortress of Saint Peter and Paul, for there I found she had been taken. Her dossier was even shown to me. The last word in the document was "Escaped."

There is but one means of escape from the prison of Saint Peter and Paul, and that is through a trapdoor in a dark corridor which runs over the river.—M. A. P.

The Cows of Muscat.

Muscat is famed as the hotbed of smugglers in the Persian gulf, the nearby desert tribes being regularly supplied with arms despite the efforts of the British patrol. But to the writer, reared on a Missouri farm, the odd antics of the cows of Muscat seemed nothing short of freakish. They actually eat fish. No grass grows, so the wily Arab teaches his family cow to subsist on dates and dried fish. The milk tastes queer to a foreigner, which is probably why the Arab likes it. He also claims it is richer and makes more butter, but most ridiculous of all is the deception practiced on cows when the calves are "weaned." A calfskin or sometimes a goatskin is stuffed with rags and tied not far from where the mother cow is anchored. This effigy of her late lamented offspring soothes her nerves and keeps her from "going dry," according to Arabic tradition.—San Francisco Chronicle.

PHILIPPINES PROGRESSING UNDER UNITED STATES RULE

UNCLE Sam has no reason to be ashamed of his first ten years in the Philippines. Whether one is an imperialist or an anti-imperialist—whether one rejoices or regrets that we have the Philippines on our hands, no true American can be other than glad that so large a measure of just rule and prosperity has come to these islands from the American occupation, says a writer in the Chicago Record-Herald.

The Filipino war left desolation in its path, as war always does, though since this war was fought largely in the jungle it left as little desolation and as few bitter feelings behind it as war ever does. Even Aguinaldo, who had as much reason as any one, perhaps, to resent Uncle Sam's forcible entrance, has become a good and peaceable American citizen, living in quiet and contentment near Manila and speaking in the highest terms of the government he so recently was fighting. After the war came the rinderpest, that swept off nine out of ten, if not ninety-nine out of a hundred, of the carabaos, or water buffaloes, animals which are almost indispensable to the life of the Filipino. Then disastrous typhoon succeeded disastrous typhoon, uprooting homes and whole villages, until it looked as though the very elements were leagued against the American occupation. But worst of all was the long delay of our Congress in recognizing the Philippines as part of the United States in a commercial sense. The old markets of Spain were closed to the poor people, and no new markets were opened to them in America until the last Congress gave them practically free trade with the United States, allowing their sugar, hemp, tobacco and copra to come in duty free.

Now the tide of prosperity, so long damned up or diverted from the Philippines, seems to be flowing toward them in a steady stream, and the days of murmuring of the Filipino, let us hope, are ended. Already capital is beginning to flow in. New enterprises are being started; the forests and the gold mines and the coal fields are being exploited and the virgin wealth of the islands, which cannot be estimated, is being explored and developed. One might speak with enthusiasm of the railroads that are pushing up into the country, opening up new fields of wealth with every mile constructed; of the great carriage roads like the one to the new summer capital, which cost $1,000,000. Three new docks recently have been completed to which the largest ships afloat can tie up. New streets are being opened throughout Manila, and the splendid street railway system is being extended in every direction.

The church and the schoolhouse came with the pilgrims to Plymouth, and they came to the Philippines with the militant pilgrims of 1898. To say nothing here of the splendid work of the mission churches and schools, nearly 1,000 American teachers and 8,000 native pedagogues are teaching the young Filipino idea how to shoot, at the expense of Uncle Sam.

POLITENESS IN RAINSTORM.

Citizen with Umbrella Shows How Courteous New Yorkers Can Be.

The politest man in New York was paying gallant attention to the ladies for two hours at 5th avenue and 35th street yesterday afternoon, according to the New York World. F. Hopkins Smith, author, artist and engineer, lamented at the Southern society's dinner the other night that "we live in the most insolent city in the world."

Mr. Smith would have been delighted to study this very polite man.

A drizzling, penetrating rain was falling. The polite man carried a very large umbrella. In the most deferential manner he urged women who had been shopping and who waited buses going uptown to find shelter from the rain in the doorways of the shops on the northeast corner and near it.

Then, raising his silk hat, he asked each woman courteously if she wanted a 5th avenue bus or a Riverside drive bus. As a bus approached he halted it and asked the conductor how many places were vacant. Learning this, he told the women waiting in the doorways, and, in turn, escorted to the bus as many women as there were places for. He protected the women so carefully under his big umbrella that his high hat and seal-lined overcoat soon were soaking wet.

Plainly some women were grateful for his attention; some giggled; some resented his addressing them as if they feared his motives. But his decorous, deferential manner never changed. About 6 o'clock, after escorting scores of women to the buses, he started up 5th avenue.

"Why have you been doing this?" a reporter asked him.

"I just wanted to show people that New York men are polite," he answered.

"Will you tell me your name?"

"Pardon me, but what has my name got to do with the purpose I had in view?"

Personal Magnetism a Great Asset.

There have been great advocates at the bar whose charming manner, like the presence in court of some of the world's famous beauties, would so sway the jury and the judge as to endanger and sometimes actually divert justice, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine. A gracious, genial presence, a charming personality, a refined, fascinating manner are welcome where mere beauty is denied and where mere wealth is turned away. They will make a better impression than the best education or the highest attainments. An attractive personality, even without great ability, often advances one when great talent and special training will not.

There is always a premium upon a charming presence. Every business man likes to be surrounded by people of pleasing personality and winning manners. They are regarded as splendid assets.

What is it that often enables one person to walk right into a position and achieve without difficulty that which another with perhaps greater ability, struggles in vain to accomplish? Everywhere a magnetic personality wins its way.

Young men and young women are constantly being surprised by offers of excellent positions which come to them because of qualities and characteristics which, perhaps, they have never thought much about—a fine manner, courtesy, cheerfulness and kindly, obliging, helpful dispositions.

G. O. P. IS FAIRLY REEKING WITH GRAFT

Republican Party Staggers Under the Burden of Robberies Committed by Own Agencies.

MILLIONS IN THE TOTAL LOOT

Sugar Frauds and the Chicago Cases Cited—Ohio and Pennsylvania Are Other Examples.

The Republican party throughout the United States is reeling from the effect of a series of heavy blows which are shattering the organization through which it has controlled the national and many State governments for sixteen successive years. Some of these blows are of a political nature, but most of them take the form of graft exposures. Practically every graft exposure of the last ten years has uncovered machinations of a Republican machine intrenched in office, growing fat off public property. Right now these exposures are at a climax. Uninterrupted power, fostering confidence, is shown to have bred corruption of amazing extent, in the nation, in the State, in the municipality.

Secretary Ballinger of the Department of the Interior is defending himself from scandalous charges of complicity in land frauds brought by the former chief forester, Gifford Pinchot. Into the investigation President Taft himself has been drawn as a defender of Ballinger.

The sugar trust is shown to have stolen immense sums from the government by fraudulent weights, the New York Sun's estimate of the thefts being $30,000,000, and while underlings are prosecuted the big offenders go free. The charge is not denied that for a year after full information of the thefts was placed before the Republican national administration the sugar trust went on robbing the government unchecked.

In the New York State Legislature Senator Allds, just after being elected leader of the Republicans in the Senate, was accused of being a bribe-taker, and Senator Ben Conger brought proof to sustain his charges of wholesale corruption, extending over years, in the Republican legislative organization of New York. Laws have been bought and sold as in a public market.

Chicago has contributed its share to the exposures of graft, the conviction of Inspector Edward McCann for taking tribute from divekeepers being one of the most notable cases of successful prosecution of police corruption in history.

Pennsylvania, rock-ribbed Republican State, whose capitol is a monument to the corruption of its Republican bosses, is still in the grip of the party of plunder. Philadelphia, where it is estimated Republican freebooters have divided $50,000,000 in the last decade, has not shaken off the ring, which is as old as the city itself, and the great strike which is now paralyzing that metropolis is traced directly to the grafting politics.

There are a few Republican grafters in penitentiaries; there are more of them at liberty, but down and out, disgraced. Chicago has furnished two convicts—John A. Linn and John A. Cooke. Washington has furnished two more, United States Senator J. R. Burton of Kansas and United States Senator John H. Mitchell of Oregon. Cooke and Linn helped themselves to the funds of their offices as court clerks. Senator Mitchell was convicted of complicity in land frauds, such as are involved in the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy. Senator Burton was convicted of attempting while Senator to get a postal fraud order removed from a get-rich-quick concern.

Senator Chauncey Depew still sits as Republican Senator in Washington, but the disgrace of the insurance scandals causes him to hide his head, and no more is his jaunty smile pictured in the press or his comment printed as the witty utterances of a "prominent Republican." He is not wanted on the stump in any political campaign. The "yellow dog fund" of $1,200,000, the "house of mirth" at Albany, and "my pestiferous friend up the river" are all being recalled by the Allds scandal, which gives pungent point to recollections of the insurance scandals.

Of all the scandals for which responsibility has been fastened on the Republican party the greatest in money involved is the sugar trust smuggling case. After paying $2,100,000 to the government in settlement of evaded duties, the trust saw four of its former employes—Charles Kehoe, Edward A. Boyle, Patrick J. Hennessey and John M. Coyle, sentenced to a year's imprisonment for underweighing frauds. Then the big men in the trust sat back and laughed at their punishment. The gigantic nature of these frauds is told in records in the custom house.

Albany, N. Y., has long "enjoyed the reputation" of being the legislative graft center of the country—it is notable that Republican majorities have ruled in Albany with few lapses—the latest being the Allds scandal, growing out of a charge that the man honored by the Republican Senators as their leader had taken a $1,000 bribe for supporting a bill wanted by bridge companies. Corroboration has been given in the inquiry to the general belief in organized barter of legislation by the Republican machine of New York State. When the investigation of the charges now pending is ended, there will come another into general legislative graft, and Republicans of New York are shuddering at the prospect.

Gov. Harmon of Ohio is giving a practical example of what a Democratic administration can accomplish. He has appointed a legislative graft probe commission which has uncovered amazing graft scandals, which went unchecked under Republican rule. Wholesale grafting in State printing contracts is disclosed.

The Worst to Come.

President Taft, standing between Aldrich and Wetmore, again defends the tariff, but his words do not ring true and no one is deceived. The oppression of the new tariff law speaks more loudly to condemn it than President Taft in its defense. The Aldrich-Taft tariff is indefensible. The standpatters insisted on haste in getting the Aldrich-Taft tariff law on the statute books. They argued that tariff uncertainty was "bad for business."

Then they proceeded to frame a tariff law that excels every one of its predecessors for uncertainty. It places a club in the President's hands by which he can keep foreign schedules open at discretion. For instance, at the end of March there is an automatic advance of 25 per cent ad valorem on all the schedules governing foreign imports. The President is empowered, at discretion, to nullify this automatic increase in the case of foreign nations that do not discriminate against us in their tariff laws. This is the so-called "maximum and minimum" clause.

Tariff war with Canada is already assured. It will doubtless be followed by a series of tariff wars with other countries. There will be reams of diplomatic correspondence, months and perhaps years of negotiations. Meanwhile the maximum tariff will go into effect against many nations. The American consumer's tax will get another boost.

Expert authorities assert that the Aldrich-Taft law, even without the maximum and minimum provision, bears harder on American consumers than any of its predecessors. But the worst is yet to come.—Chicago Journal.

Trade War Inevitable.

President Taft's diplomatic talent evidently is not of an order to persuade Canada to submit tamely to the arrogant demands of the Aldrich-Taft tariff. Trade war with our next-door neighbor and second largest customer seems inevitable.

Canadian exporters, busily cultivating the South American and Asiatic markets which the United States neglects, openly advocate standing firm against the Aldrich-Taft tariff. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association is rejoicing over the situation. Canadian statesmen do not give the least intimation of yielding one point. Canada has just entered on an era of wonderful development. Canadians welcome the prospect of the Aldrich-Taft maximum, because they realize that the ensuing imposition of 33⅓ per cent Canadian surtax on imports from the United States will shut out $100,000,000 of American goods each year and stimulate Canadian industries to a corresponding extent.

The trade war cannot now be avoided. The consequences will be serious, and the United States will be the principal sufferer. This country needs Canada more than Canada needs this country, and the short-sighted policy that erects a higher barrier between them will condemn itself by its own evil effects. Incidentally, the spectacle of the President of the United States eating humble-pie cannot fail to please Canadians, who have not forgotten the insolent treatment accorded their own reciprocity envoys at Washington twelve years or more ago.

Landslide in Massachusetts.

The biggest election landslide that old New England ever has experienced was the overwhelming election of Eugene N. Foss, of Boston on the Democratic ticket, over William R. Buchanan of Brockton, Republican, to represent the Fourteenth Massachusetts District in Congress, in completion of the unexpired term of the late Congressman Lovering, Republican.

The plurality is 5,640 for Foss in the strongest Republican district in the State. Although aided by Senator Lodge and Governor Draper, who stumped the larger cities, Buchanan was unable to keep the district in the Republican column.

Eugene Foss is a brother of Congressman George E. Foss, of Chicago, who represents the Tenth Illinois District. This is the first political victory of the Massachusetts brother, who has fought several notable campaigns on the platform of Canadian reciprocity.

The eyes of the nation were on this election as a straw showing how the political wind is blowing in national politics. The result is taken to mean the downfall of Lodge bossism, the dissatisfaction of the Cape Codders with the deeds of the present national administration, and as a direct slap at the high cost of living.

The sensation produced in Boston by the result knows no bounds. Governor Draper, when asked for a statement, said:

"I haven't anything to say except that I am sorry. I am very sorry to see Mr. Foss elected."

He Does Not Know.

We desire to go on record with one prophecy: that Joseph G. Cannon will go to his grave with a vague wonder what it was all about. He doesn't know; he doesn't even suspect. Not that Cannon is not intellectually acute; his most vitriolic critic could not call him a fool. But he is morally obtuse, and the issue is moral.

"The Speaker has said that an elephant could be put through the House if the House so desired," shouted Mr. Clark.

"The Speaker," retorted Mr. Cannon, who until now had watched the proceedings in grim silence, "would be prepared to rule on that question whenever any gentleman thinks that the minority has become the majority. But that presents an entirely different question from the one now before us."

"Whenever any gentleman thinks that the minority has become the majority." This is the Cannon point of view. "A majority" to him does not mean more than half the members of the House; the term is a technical one; it means simply that fraction of the portion of the House which originally elected him which has not yet repented of its action. This is the "majority"; and it will be until the sun goes down on Cannonism.—St. Louis Republic.

The Wand of Sleep
OR
The Devil-Stick

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER XV.—(Continued.)

As dirty and disreputable as ever, Battersea, rolling his hat in his dirty hands, made his appearance on the threshold of the library, conducted by the disgusted footman. When the door was closed behind him, and he stood alone before those who were about to examine him, he shifted uneasily from one foot to the other, blinked his bleared eyes and blushed, as with the shame of guilt, through the sallow darkness of his skin. Jen, with the military instinct of command fully awakened within him, looked sternly at the feeble old creature, and questioned him sharply, as though he were talking to a soldier who had done wrong. On her part, Meg left the most part of the examination to the Major; but she listened with anxious looks and parted lips to every word which fell from the tramp's lips. The death of the man whom she had loved so deeply had inflicted terrible anguish upon her loving heart, and, as a tribute to his memory, she was anxious to punish his assassin. But at present, influenced by the views of the Major, she began to waver in her opinion regarding the guilt of the weak-brained creature, who stood trembling nervously at the doorway.

"What is your name, man?" demanded Jen, commencing in the orthodox manner.

"Battersea, sir. My father was black, an' my mother she was white; an' they weren't married. I was brought up in Battersea, so I took that name, I did, not 'avin' any right to another name."

"How do you get your living?"

"I begs!" said Battersea, candidly. "And when I can't get nuffin', I steals."

"I am sure of that," remarked Jen, taking the devil-stick off the table. "And you stole this, I'll be bound."

"I didn't. I found it."

"Where?"

"At Missus Dallas' place."

Jen started, and looked sharply at the old man, who, to all appearances, was answering his questions with all possible candor.

"Be more explicit, man," he said, sternly. "What do you mean by Mrs. Dallas' place? The house or the grounds?"

"The groun's, near the gate. The day after th' young gen'man was killed."

"And why didn't you give it up to the police?"

"I wanted money for it, I did, an' they wouldn't give no tin to me for findin' it. She," pointing to Meg, "is fond of pretty things, so I sold it her; but she didn't pay me for it."

"No," said Meg, speaking for the first time, "because I did not know if you had come by it honestly."

"I tell 'ee I found it, I did," growled Battersea, becoming restive under the constant questioning. "Found it near the gate of Missus Dallas' place."

"Inside the gate," asked Jen, "or outside, on the road?"

"Inside; jus' among the grass. I was coming up to git some food from missy, an' I sowr that 'andle shinin' in the sun. I goes, and I looks, an' I fin's it. I knowed as the perlice wanted it, 'cause I 'eard talk of it doin' murder; but as perlice wouldn't give me tin, I wouldn't guv' it to they," added Battersea, cunningly, "so I keeps it for 'er, but she ain't paid me yit," he concluded, with the whine of a mendicant.

For the moment, Major Jen did not ask any more questions, for the very simple reason that he did not exactly know what course to take. Undoubtedly the tramp was telling the truth. But here the question of the dried-up poison occurred to Jen. If the poison had evaporated by the lapse of time, the devil-stick must have been innocuous and incapable of inflicting death. Therefore—upon the evidence of the saturated handkerchief, the bag concealed in the turquoise-studded handle must have been refilled by Dido!—Dido, for the significant reason that she, inheriting the traditions of her Ashantee grandmother, alone must have been capable of manufacturing the deadly drug. To prove this assumption—a feasible one—the devil-stick was close at hand.

Jen picked it up, and slightly pressed the handle. At once the turquoise gems indented the concealed bag; at once the iron fang protruded from the end of the stick, and on looking closely the Major at the end of the spike observed an oblong drop of greenish hue. The evidence of his own eyes was enough, and Jen replaced the devil-stick upon the table, with the full conviction that the bag had been filled with a fresh preparation of its original venom. This discovery—to the Major's mind—confirmed the guilt of the negress.

"What is the matter?" said Meg, as she saw the Major's face grow dark with his thought. "Is anything wrong?"

"Yes. Dido is wrong!" he said. "I always thought that black witch was at the bottom of everything. I am sure of it now. I believe she killed Maurice; but the evidence is, as yet, too slight upon which to accuse her. If I thought that she"—here the Major checked himself, and resumed in an altered tone, "But I must think of these things later on. In the meantime I must conclude my examination of this man."

"Do you think he knows everything?"

"No. I believe he found the devil-stick as he says: within the ground of Mrs. Dallas, mind you!"

"Well, and what does that prove?"

"Prove!" retorted Jen, sharply, "simply that it was dropped there by that black fiend, after she had killed Maurice." Then, turning to Battersea, he resumed his examination:

"You know the negress, Dido, who is in the employment of Mrs. Dallas?" he asked, mildly.

"Yes, sir, an' a h'awful female she is! She knows things as ain't good for 'em. 'Bout that devil-stick es you talks of."

"Oh," cried Jen, recalling Dido's denial. "She knows of that, does she?"

"Yes, sir, she do. Arsked me 'bout it, but I know'd nuffin, I didn't."

"What did she say concerning it?"

"Well, sir, when I brought a message from Dr. Etwald 'bout that devil-stick ——"

"What?" cried Jen, interrupting sharply. "Did Dr. Etwald know about it also?"

"He did, sir. Leastways he arsked me to arsk Dido 'bout it."

"I thought as much," said Jen, in an excited tone. Then, after a pause, he added: "Battersea, would you like free quarters and plenty of food and drink for a week?"

"I ain't a fool, sir," said the tramp, with a sheepish grin, "I should, you bet."

"In that case, go down to the kitchen, and tell my servants from me that you are to stay there. Later on I'll see you."

"Thankee, sir. I'll get free quarters and grub for a week?" cried Battersea, rubbing his grimy hands. "My eye, 'ere's oppolance. Can I go now, sir?"

"At once," replied Jen, and pointed to the door.

Battersea bowed awkwardly to Meg and his benefactor; then he went out of the room and left the Major alone with his visitor.

"What does all this mean?" asked Meg, quite surprised at Jen's excitement.

"Mean!" cried Jen, in a tone of conviction. "Why: that Etwald is mixed up in this business also!"

CHAPTER XVI.

"Etwald!" repeated Meg, thoughtfully. "Is he not the doctor of whom you have made so great a friend?"

"Yes. I took a viper to my bosom, and it stung me," replied Jen, who, in his excitement, was pacing backward and forward with hasty steps. "But I shall be even with him. In some way or another I believe that it is possible to bring home to him this triple crime. Etwald prophesied to my poor lad, in his charlatan way, that if he wedded Miss Dallas, or even announced his engagement with her, his fate would be one of life in death."

"What did that mean?"

"Mean? Death without the addition of life. That word was brought in solely to render the prophecy—if it may be called so—confusing. Etwald was in love with Miss Dallas. He found in Maurice a formidable rival. He warned him by his pretended prophecy that he should slay him if he persisted in standing in his path. Maurice announced his engagement upon the very day when Etwald went to pay his addresses to the girl. From that moment he doomed Maurice to death. Yes, I truly believe that such was his design, and that he offered to buy the devil-stick in order to carry out his criminal intention."

"Did he ask to buy the devil-stick?" demanded Meg, in surprise.

"Twice; and both times I refused to part with it. Failing to get it honestly, he stole it! You heard what Battersea confessed, that he had taken a message from Etwald to Dido about the devil-stick. Well, this doctor has some mysterious influence over this negress. I believe he incited her to steal the devil-stick, and that by his directions she filled it with a fresh poison."

"But could she prepare the special kind of poison required?"

"Assuredly. She confessed as much. Her grandmother came from Ashantee, where this devil-stick is used for the purpose of destroying people. Dido inherits a knowledge of the family secrets, and knows how to make this poison. It cures nervous headaches—that is, the perfume of it does—and Dido made some with which she saturated a handkerchief to bind round the head of her young mistress."

"How do you know that the poisons are the same?"

"From the peculiar, sickly, heavy odor," explained Jen, promptly; and continued: "Well, you can see the rest for yourself. Dido filled that devil-stick with the poison," he pointed to the article on the table, "some of it remains in the wand yet. Etwald used the devil-stick to kill Maurice, and on going back to tell Dido of his success I have no doubt he dropped it inside the gates of Mrs. Dallas' ground, where, as you have heard, it was found by Battersea. Oh, it is as plain as day to me!" cried Jen, vehemently. "Etwald killed Maurice, and stole the devil-stick to accomplish the murder."

"You have certainly made out a strong case against this man," said Meg, after a pause, "but it is all theory. Your proofs?"

"I shall find them. David will help me."

Meg sighed, and, rising to her feet, she drew her cloak round her tall form.

"I shall help you also," she said, sadly. "That is, if you will accept of my help."

"Assuredly. You loved Maurice——"

"To my cost, Major; but he did not love me. This girl—this Miss Dallas," she added, in a faltering voice, "she must be very lovely, for Mr. Sarby loves her also. A woman who has three men at her feet must be wonderful."

"She is certainly beautiful, but she is not clever, and her weak nature is enslaved by the gross superstitions of Dido."

"I should not think from your description that she was likely to attract Maurice," said Meg, in a low voice; "but undoubtedly he loved her dearly; and I——" She made a gesture of despair and moved towards the door. On the threshold she paused and held out her hand. "Good-by, Major; should I hear anything further I shall let you know. But the tramp?"

"I shall keep him here. If he were guilty of the crime he would not stay, but as it is he will remain under my eye. I intend to question him further about the connection between Dido and Etwald; I wonder what power this doctor holds over the negress?"

"You can learn that only from the woman herself."

"Or from Etwald," rejoined Jen. "If I can only succeed in having him arrested, he may confess all."

"Let us hope he will," replied Meg; and after shaking hands again with Jen, she took her departure.

While the Major was considering what step he should take, David, returning from a long and solitary walk, entered the room. Of late the young man had indulged in these lonely excursions, whence he always returned more melancholy than ever. His fine face was lean and worn, there were dark circles under his eyes, and his manner, formerly noted for its composure, was now nervous and hesitating. On approaching his guardian, he saw the devil-stick on the table, and at once his pale face grew yet paler.

"Where did you find it it?" he asked, pointing a trembling finger at the terrible piece of evidence.

"I did not find it at all," rejoined the Major, gloomily; "Meg brought it to me. It was Battersea who found it. He offered it for sale to Meg, and she brought it and the tramp to me."

"Battersea!" said David, repeating the name in a puzzled tone. "How did he become possessed of it? Has he anything to do with the crime?"

"No. He found the devil-stick within the grounds of Mrs. Dallas, near the gate."

"Who lost it there?" said Sarby, abruptly.

"Ah!" replied Jen, in a meaning tone. "Tell me that and I'll have the assassin of our dear Maurice within the walls of Deanminster jail before the year is twenty-four hours older. It 's my belief, David, that Dr. Etwald killed Maurice!"

"Impossible! For what reason?"

"Because he wants to marry Isabella Dallas."

"In that case he should rather have killed me than poor Maurice, for, as my suit to Isabella was supported by Mrs. Dallas, I was the more formidable rival of the two!"

"I don't think so, my boy; Isabella loved Maurice, and to marry him she would have rebelled against her mother. But I daresay if you become engaged to her, Etwald will remove you also from his path."

"There will be no need for him to do that," replied David, coldly. "I shall never marry Isabella."

"What do you say? I thought you loved the girl."

"I do love her!" cried David, vehemently. "I have always loved her, and shall continue to do so until the day of my death. At the same time I shall never become her husband."

"Why?"

"Don't ask me, Major. I would tell you if I could, but it is impossible."

"Of course, my boy, if you choose to withhold your confidence from me, I have no right to force you to speak. All the same, as I have been a second father to you, I think you should be more open with me."

"I would tell you if I could," said David again, but in rather a sullen manner; "but I have reasons—strong reasons—for not doing so. Later on I may tell you all I know."

"All you know!" repeated Jen, in a startled tone. "About this crime?"

"Yes. I know something, but what it is I dare not tell you now, Uncle Jen," he added, gravely looking at the elder. "If you are wise, you will not pursue your inquiry."

CHINESE COTTON.

Japanese Try to Improve Quality to Compete With Our Product.

Japanese cotton manufacturers are working earnestly to improve the quality of cotton grown in China so that they will not be dependent on the American grown product.

According to Vice-Consul Heintzleman of Shanghai, a Japanese firm close to the Chinese government began experiments last year at Kangwang, province of Kiangsu, with cottonseed obtained from several countries. Seeds from India and Japan gave poor results. The American seed, however, has produced a cotton greatly superior to the native.

The staple is good, but the color, owing to heavy rains, is poor. If future trials are successful seeds will be distributed to the farmers gratis. The Japanese hope in this way to procure a cotton of American grade which they can purchase at low price and lay down in their own country with small cost of transportation. This accomplished, American cotton will only be bought by Japan when her requirements exceed China's production.

Most of the cotton is grown on small farms of five to seven acres. The whole family, says the journal of the American Asiatic Association, engages itself in the cultivating and works as many as twelve hours a day. If the work exceeds the capacity of the family coolies are hired at 16 cents a day.

The implements used in the cultivation are of a rude type. The wooden-frame plow with an iron blade is drawn by cows and buffaloes. The hoe used corresponds to the American adze. The method used in raising water for irrigation is by a pump consisting of a string of cups, sometimes operated by animals. A rude sickle is used in cutting. Transportation about the fields is done on human backs, while the haul to the market is done by the wheelbarrow.

Small ditches fed by creeks surround the fields for irrigation. The ground is broken twice a year, in spring and autumn. The plants grow to six or seven feet in height and the crop is gathered in September or October. About 60 per cent of the cotton is manufactured by native process. In the treaty ports most of the cotton is sold to foreign manufacturers.

The shipment of American cotton into China can be accomplished only when the crop here is poor. Even then most of the cotton is brought in from India. The American cotton is too expensive to compete with the local product.

The Way It Looked.

"Aren't you going to settle anything on your daughter?" asked the young man with the incipient mustache, the languid air, the drawl and the cigarette.

"That's as may be," replied the parent coldly. "But it rather looks, if she marries you, that she is going to settle something on me."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Another Serpent Tongue.

"Do you like my new hat?" asked Mrs. Brooke.

"Yes, indeed," replied Mrs. Lynn. "I had one just like it when they were in style."—Lippincott's.

WOMEN'S INTERESTS

Thoughts on Domestic Economy.

There are many households in which the mistress of the establishment doesn't know her business, writes the Country Contributor. This is a deplorable state of affairs. What right has a woman to marry and take on the responsibility of housekeeping when she doesn't know the first thing about it? What man would dare attempt life at such hazards? With such a wife a man is truly "up against it" when hard times come. If the woman has been wholly dependent on the cook and the best that the market affords for food for her husband and family, where are they to land when prices rise as they have risen and retrenchment in household expenses is necessary?

There are many women who hold this ignorance and incapacity of theirs as a distinction—they imagine that it marks them something above the common herd. Out upon such nonsense! What man at the head of a large manufacturing or business concern can succeed unless he knows the minutest detail of the business? Why is it that the man "who began as an office boy" so often ends as a millionaire? Simply because he knows his business from the ground up.

If the details of a business, then, are not above the close study and consideration of a financier, why should the minutiae of the day's work be beneath the notice of the mistress of any sort of house? Why should not the flour bin and the grease can be under her inspection? And why should she not be able to take the place of any servant in the house if necessity presents itself? To my mind, nothing is more interesting than the preparation of food and the study of domestic problems. Our supper in the kitchen redemonstrated to our minds the fact that we have too much house. Nobody needs a parlor, a living room, a dining room and a kitchen, at least nobody in moderate circumstances. The family life is much alike among rich and poor and we are nestling, close living creatures by nature. A small room with a genial fire draws the family like a magnet, a little circle, needing only love and congeniality to bring happiness. Can we not take a lesson from this regarding the actual essentials of existence?

WEDDING COSTUMES.

For a fashionable wedding the bride's gown of heavy white satin has been fashioned after the model in the illustration. It is cut en princesse, and the square yoke of dotted net is draped on each side with the princess lace in fichu fashion. The lace veil reaching to the knees is prettily arranged on top of head with orange blossoms. The bridesmaid's costume is primrose satin, also of princess cut, with cleverly draped tunic arranged as shown in design. The bodice in this gown is made from self-tone tucked chiffon cloth, with round yoke of white Irish lace. A large black velvet hat, with crown band of gold embroidery and huge pink rose on left side makes a charming finishing touch.

Belts appear everywhere and on everything that has a waistline.

Anyone possessing a sun-plaited, knife-plaited or accordion-plaited skirt may rejoice, for these skirts will be all the rage again.

Gold and silver, colored and jeweled slippers are high in fashion's favor, yet many of the most careful dressers cling to the blacks.

A single poinsetta or a huge rose, more often than not artificial, is pinned on milady's muff. It gives a pleasing touch of color.

To have more than three buttons on the spring suit is taboo. And what is more, the three must be diagonally arranged to be quite au fait.

The guimpe of plain sheer tulle or net is more frequently used than that of tucks. The yoke is extremely shallow, and flesh tint is the usual color.

Drapery is still a commanding feature. It is quite the thing to wear something loose, that may be called a wrap, though it is more an evolution of the scarf.

Tan footwear is promised the greatest vogue that it has ever had, and it will, of course, come in some startling new shades, all the way from champagne to ochre.

White cotton crepe will be used quite as much this spring and summer as last year. Some waists of this material are now seen, rich with elaborate designs embroidered in colors.

The Russian coat is trying to the average figure, and the wise woman will have her general utility coat severe and conventional with the materials and some little details to stamp it this season's suit.

What Girls Are Called.

The most popular names for girls—what are they? Statistics have been amassed by someone in a girls' college, where there is an enrollment of 1,600. Of this number more than 100 have the name of—not Gwendolen, or Gladys, or Patricia, or Doris, or Juliet, or Marie, or Inez, or Marcia, or Persis, or Eugenie, or Geraldine, or Hortense, or Muriel—but just Helen. One-sixteenth of all the girls bore this name, which means Light. Mary came second with less than ninety. Then folowed Margaret, Ruth, Florence and Elizabeth, in that order. Old-fashioned names are frequent. There are still many Hopes and Dorothys, and a few Emilys and Penelopes, but Abigail, Huldah and Hepzibah seem to have outlived their popularity in America.—Collier's.

Old-Time Cures.

Of all the homely cures which are still to be discovered in old manuscript books of the past one of the simplest is that of a sliced onion, dipped in salt, and rubbed well over the skin. Another famous remedy consisted of white mustard, made into a thick, creamy mixture with water and spread over swollen toes at night. Linen rags were then ordered to be wound around, so that no air could cause a chill. If the heat did not prove too great for forbearance, the sufferer was ordered to leave the mustard to dry on, and to remove all traces of it in the morning by means of a soft handkerchief dipped in rain water.

Of homemade ointments, one of the least difficult to make is that of a mixture of half an ounce of white wax, an ounce of beef marrow and two ounces of hog's lard melted over the fire, and then strained through a piece of linen. According to a century-old recipe, which dates from the time when every housekeeper's garden was her medicine chest as well, herbs and leaves, compounded with care, had an almost miraculous effect on painful chilblains, although, like all the foregoing recipes, it was only prescribed to be used when the skin was not broken. The mixture consisted of a handful each of common mallow, marshmallow, ground ivy and periwinkle leaves, boiled with a pennyworth of alum and six breakfast cupfuls of water. Boiling was continued until the liquid had reduced to a quart, when it was strained off and stirred into six-pennyworth of camphorated spirits.

Don't Marry the Man—

Who thinks he is irresistible to the fair sex.

Who is courtesy and smiles to strangers, but keeps dullness for home consumption.

Who counts it wrong in a woman to do that which a man may do with immunity.

Who has no higher ambition than to become rich, sinking honor and manhood to attain it.

Who thinks his cigars and wines a necessity, but looks upon household expenses as a luxury.

Who is mean. Better have a poor husband, who, if he cannot give you much, gives cheerfully.

Who is afraid to say "no" when tempted to do wrong, and "yes" when he should do what is right.

Who runs with the crowd; dares not assert his own manhood, and would commit a wrong rather than take the initiative and be singular.

Who thinks a woman should have no interests outside her home, but should be a domestic slave, tied down to never-ending drudgery.

Who has no sympathy with your aspirations; who cannot enter into the spirit of your work, and looks upon your best efforts as a waste of time.

Who boasts of his capacity for spirits; of how much he can drink without showing the effect. Get away from him; he is more of a hogshead than a man.

The Untrimmed Hat.

The prevailing fashion for having an entirely plain hat on the head is interesting and artistic, but one should not adopt the fashion without knowing its dangers. They are these: That unless the hat has exquisite lines, which means perfection of cut and shape, it looks ungainly. One must pay as much for the shape of the brim in a hat of this kind as for the trimming. Too few women realize this.

Raglan Sleeves Again.

It is said that the Raglan shoulder line and a modified kimono sleeve will return to favor. It is true that they were satisfactory and more becoming than the tight sleeves set in small armholes, which are still in vogue. The same idea is noticeable in many of the new and beautiful ball gowns, where broad bands of embroidery extend over the shoulder line.

Peppers Are Handy.

It is a good plan to have a can of Spanish peppers always in the house. They can be easily and attractively used in an emergency. Sandwiches may be made of them, or they may be used to garnish leftover meats, etc. Cut the meat into cubes, cover with bits of pepper and bread crumbs and brown.

Correct Whining Children.

For a child's sake if not for those around him, do not let him whine. The fault finding attitude toward life is all too easy, and it makes for sure unhappiness. The whine of the young becomes the chip on the shoulder of maturity and the sour disgruntlement of age, says a writer on child development. The child who is taught to take life as it is without complaints, better yet, to make the best of it or to laugh at its discomforts, is the child who will go through the world a pleasure to himself and to those who must deal with him.

Women in the Trades.

Only two professions, according to statistics, have so far not been invaded by the persistent American woman. There are no women sailors in the marine corps and no female linemen for telegraph and telephone systems. The other professions and trades number women as follows:

Architects ..	1,041	Packers and shippers ..	18,998
Clergymen ..	5,323	Stenographers	88,118

A Novel Hat.

The dashing hat which appears in the drawing is extremely novel. It is of rough straw in the natural color, with a bowl-shaped crown of medium height and a wide brim rolling high on either side—the left sire rolling slightly higher and toward the front. A wide band of black velvet ribbon encircles the crown, passing through the rever on the left, which is slashed to admit it. Through this is thrust a quill in exquisite shades of peacock blue and green and cut to resemble an arrow. The entire effect is most novel and striking, and yet how simple!

Practical Charity.

Mrs. Juno Robeson, of Cleveland, Ohio, has established a practical charity. She has opened a house in a good neighborhood where working women may find a home at a cost not exceeding $2 a week. The house accommodates twenty; it has the air of a private home. The women furnish their own meals, but under Mrs. Robeson's direction.

To Thread the Machine Needle.

If, for any reason, either poor eyesight or lack of light at machine, one has difficulty in threading the machine needle, try holding a piece of white cloth or paper on the opposite side of the needle eye, which will then be so prominent that threading will be easy. Keep a bag hanging on the sewing machine to catch scraps. Have scissors hung by a cord or ribbon.

The First Thing.

Mrs. Wise—So you're going to marry and go to housekeeping, eh? Why, you don't know the first thing about keeping house!

Miss Pert—Oh, yes, I do!

Mrs. Wise—I'd like to know what?

Miss Pert—The first thing is to get a man to keep house for.—Modern Society.

Civil War Stories

How It Feels to Be Killed in Battle.

At the battle of Shiloh I was shot between the eyes. I was left on the field for dead, published as killed, and had the rare pleasure of reading my obituary in a local newspaper several months afterward. It was a fine piece of writing, full of pathos and affected me strangely. Testimony of that kind ought to convince any fair-minded court that I really died for my country, and ought to know something about how it feels to go hence in a glorious cause. I will therefore try to tell you how it looked to one who has been to the margin of the dark river, though it seems I didn't quite cross over after all.

When the shot struck me it seemed as if I had been hit with a crowbar coming endwise at great speed. A thought of that kind passed through my mind at that time. I felt the missile tear through my head as plainly as I ever felt anything, though it did not do so, and I felt the air rush through after it and chill my brain. I was conscious what seemed to have been two or three minutes, from the amount of thinking I did, but it might not have been more than as many seconds, for I have since learned that the mind can sometimes work with inconceivable rapidity.

The first feeling that came over me was one of most terrible disappointment. It was absolutely crushing. It was not a feeling of regret that I was cut down at the dawn of manhood—I never thought of that—but it was a feeling of cruel disappointment that I had not been spared to get to the battery upon which we were charging at the time I was hit. A moment before, my blood had been seething with that indescribable frenzy of excitement which can only be experienced when the veins are bursting with the thrill that goes through them when a charge into the very jaws of death is being made. I was too much maddened by the intoxication of battle to think of personal danger. Not a thought of that kind crossed my mind. In the earlier stages of the carnage the sight of a dead man had sickened me, and I had felt my cheek blanching and my knees trembling when the blood of a comrade reddened the earth, but not now. All feeling of timidity had been swept away by the magnetism of that sublime moment when victory was in sight. I felt tigerish, and thirsted for vengeance. I wanted to get to that battery, and I wanted to get there bad. I was straining every nerve to that end, and to be cut down at the moment when victory was almost within grasp, with shouts of defiant triumph bursting from my powder-stained lips. I tell you, friends, it was simply awful. Nothing in language can paint the wretched feeling of disappointment that overwhelmed me at that cruel moment. Had I been spared to reach the guns, I believe I could have died without a regret, but to be snuffed out before the job was finished was a calamity too great to find expression in words.

Immediately after being hit I felt myself sinking into a dazed condition, and then came a season of debate with myself as to whether I was alive or dead. I had a hole straight through my head big enough to admit a good-sized cane, I thought; therefore I must be dead. A man in my fix would have been killed instantly, hence I was most certainly dead so far as the body was concerned. I could not be alive. It was contrary to all precedent. But some other faculty of mind would combat this argument and try to convince me that I was still alive. "I can move my hand or my foot," I would reason, "and a corpse couldn't do that; so I'm alive after all." "But I don't move my hand or my foot," the other faculty would insinuate. "I simply think I do; so I must be dead. My brains are scattered over the ground. There's no doubt about that, for I felt them go, and that means instant death; so of course I'm actually dead." And so it went until I lost all consciousness; one part of the brain trying to convince me that I was dead, and another trying as persistently to persuade me that I was alive, all in a dreamy, semi-conscious sort of way, gradually growing fainter and fainter, somewhat like the sensation of going to sleep.

There was no feeling of pain; no thought of death, except as a stubborn fact that could not be avoided. Not a thought of my past life; no thought of friends or home. Not the slightest regret at my untimely taking off, aside from the temporary feeling of disappointment above referred to. Not a single pang that all my hopes and ambitions had come to a standstill. My future status was not once considered. There was no hope of heaven; no fear of hell. I heard no celestial music. I was not uplifted by angel hands and borne gently away. No seraphic beings robed in light flitted before me with rustling wings. No dark forms glowered upon me and barred the way to the realms of joy. I was simply drifting away from consciousness in a manner not at all uncomfortable; my last recollection being the mental debate as to whether I was alive or dead.

Who can tell but that death on the battlefield may not have been in many cases an exact repetition of my own feelings at the time when I believed my last moment had come? Had I really died before recovering consciousness such would indeed have been my end.

I remained in a senseless condition four days, and when I came to the noise of battle was still ringing in my ears. The debate was resumed, but instantly dropped by the introduction of convincing testimony that I was still among the living. My head was greatly swollen, and seemed bursting with pain. I was entirely blind, my eyes being completely closed by the swollen condition of my head and the matter from the wound, which had caked over them. The blood had matted all over my face in a thick crust. I was in the hospital, and somebody was at work trying to bring my features once more into daylight, and he was doing it in a manner that was torture. This had probably brought me back to consciousness.

Their Kindness Was Not Forgotten.

The cry of "On to Richmond" awakened no enthusiasm in the hearts of the Third Ohio one day when they found themselves en route as prisoners of war for that famous capital. Nor were they enthusiastic when they halted for the night and prepared to sink supperless into dreamland.

The Fifty-fourth Virginia Regiment was encamped near by, and some of the men came down to have a look at the "Yanks."

"Had your coffee?" asked one of a blue-coat stretched disconsolately on the bank.

"Not a sup," answered the other.

"Ain't you had any rations to-night?"

"Only a crumb or two from the bottoms of our haversacks."

This was told to the boys of the Fifty-fourth, and old Virginia hospitality showed itself at once. The men soon made their appearance with coffee kettles, corn bread and bacon, the best they had. In a few minutes the coffee was steaming, the bacon cooked, and prisoners and captors sat down together around the camp fire, "like kinsmen true and brothers tried." The hungry, grateful Yankees ate with a relish such as no one can appreciate unless he has been in a like situation.

No wonder there was a warm spot in every heart of the Third Ohio ever after for the generous Fifty-fourth.

A fresh slide in the magic lantern gives another of these shifting war pictures. In the distance is Mission Ridge, which has just been stormed. That long line of prisoners passing over the pontoon bridge and up the stony mountain road is the Fifty-fourth Virginia. A soldier on duty at Kelly's Ferry asked indifferently of one of the prisoners, as the regiment passed:

"What regiment is this?"

"The Fifty-fourth Virginia," was the reply.

In an instant the loungers sprang to their feet and rushed to camp. "The Fifty-fourth Virginia is at the ferry!" they shouted, as they ran in and out among the tents of the Third Ohio.

The Ohio boys were quickly in motion. Boxes from home and all reserved stores were speedily ransacked. Coffee and sugar, beef and canned peaches and the best they had of everything were freely brought forth. They remembered gratefully the debt of honor and paid it nobly. It was the same old scene over, with the shading reversed. For one night at least both Confederates and "Yanks" enjoyed again the sweet grace of hospitality that could bring a smile even to the grim visage of war.

Boys Saved the Town.

In his reminiscences of Sherman's march, in Harper's, W. W. Lord, Jr., tells how a group of small boys saved a town from pillage and burning.

"The ubiquitous, irrepressible and inquisitive small boy saved Winnsborough from a supplementary pillage and conflagration. Actuated by a desire to loot the residences in the headquarters neighborhood, six desperate fellows hid in the court house tower, determined to remain behind the army long enough to burn and plunder to their hearts' content and yet have time to join the rear guard before night set in. But heaven willed otherwise. A band of village boys, wandering amid the ruins, by chance discovered the marauders peering like vultures from their lofty perch within the belfry and hastened with the information to my father. Fortunately three of the Union officers, quartered at the rectory by General Slocum, had been detailed with a squad of men to bring up the rear as whippers-in of stragglers. These officers had rounded up their waifs and strays and were bidding farewell to my parents before hastening after the army, when the terror-stricken boys arrived hot-footed and gasped out their story. Our friends of the enemy and recent guests thus found themselves upon the horns of a most embarrassing dilemma; a desire to arrest these thievish stragglers, and a natural dread of capture by the lighthorse Confederate cavalry, which hung constantly upon the outskirts of the invading army for the purpose of cutting off stragglers or of engaging any small detachment sent out on special duty.

"In the end duty triumphed over fear. My father gave them a letter which promised for themselves, their prisoners and men safe-conduct until they reached the Union lines, and they proceeded to the court house with their squad of men. There they dislodged from the belfry the crest-fallen robbers and incendiaries, with evidence of guilt upon them in oil-soaked tow. Then they all set forth to overtake the army."

Johnny Stuck to the Gun.

When I was at the G. A. R. tents at a recent reunion, I heard a story which impressed me as very dramatic. A Union soldier named McNamee was the raconteur, with an ex-Confederate named Strong. It was at the battle of Pea Ridge, and McNamee said:

"I was with the battery, which was crowning a slope; the rebels made a dash at us and got the guns. We came back at them and fought fist and skull in the battery, pulling the cannon this way and that. We got two of the guns back, and the third one was jerked up the edge of a steep ravine. One Johnny got behind it and gave it an awful shove, jumping on the carriage at the same time. I picked up a musket, with a fixed bayonet and threw it at him. The bayonet caught him in the shoulder and went through, but he rode that gun down the hill, and when he got to the bottom he shouted to me to go to ——

"Well, I believe they call it sheol now."

"Do you think you'd know your mark, stranger, if you saw it again?" asked Strong.

"I don't know."

"Well, here it is," and pulling off his shirt, Strong showed the wound of the very bayonet which the other had thrown at him. "I rode that gun down the hill," he said, "and I pulled out that bayonet and got safe into our lines."

Of course the men shook hands and were sworn brothers from that time forward.

You Get Style Plus Quality

A SERIOUS condition of the Clothing trade today is a continuous sacrifice of style for quality, or quality for style, to maintain a sensible cost. A few makers do combine style and quality, but you know it results in an exorbitant price.

Let us tell you the problem to combine style and quality, yet keep the cost within the limits of the average man, is solved in Clothcraft Clothes. Clothcraft makers have blazed the trail in their scientific tailoring methods.

We investigated the clothing market thoroughly and were independent, because we wanted to offer you the very best the country afforded. And we are proud to be known as the Clothcraft Store.

CLOTHCRAFT
All-Wool Clothes $10 to $25

Clothcraft are the only clothes that guarantee you both style and quality at popular prices. We and the makers take all the risk; you take none.

The Comet's Tail

Many learned professors say
Be ye careful.
On the eighteenth day of May
Be ye careful.
For the comet's tail will then,
Class us with those that have been,
And 'twill put us there with them
Be ye careful.

For the tail is made of gas—
Oh be careful.
And through it we're bound to pass;
Oh be careful.
If the prophecy is true
It will be all up, boo hoo!
So all that we can do
Is be careful.

If you've any fear at all
Then be careful;
That you'll leave this earthly ball—
Be ye careful.
What you do and what you say
For you've only got till May,
So you'd better learn to pray,
And be careful.

If you'd build an air tight room
Being careful;
You might stay it out till June
If you're careful.
Take along some cans of air,
And let it fizz out in there,
You could stand it, on the square,
If you're careful.

But if you take some salt
And be careful
(We will not find any fault
If you're careful)
Throw it on the comet's tail
You can catch it without fail
And life will still prevail
If you're careful.

Auburn News

Another Garrett lady has succeeded in capturing an Auburn young man. This time the lucky one is Miss Ethel Kibbe who on Thursday evening was united in marriage with John M. Bishop son of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Bishop of West Nineth street. Rev. J. H. Neuhauser tied the matrimonial knot and bade them God speed.

Romey Draggoo, of Auburn Junction, has three toes on his left foot crushed while handling ties on the B. & O. near Concord, Friday afternoon. He came to Auburn for medical attention. A foreigner let the heavy piece of timber drop at an improper time owing to him being unable to understand his orders.

William Frick of Waterloo, has filed a cross complaint for a divorce from his wife, Margaret Frick, and custody of their child. Recently she began such a suit but he thinks he ought to have it and recites a number of facts to support him, the principal one being that her mind is unbalanced and gives several incidents showing that in her relations to him she has been unnatural.

Mrs. Mary J. Fredericks has caused her divorce proceedings against her husband, Samuel Fredericks, to be dismissed.

George Scott of Butler, was in the city Tuesday. He resently retired from the farm but yet drives twenty-two miles nearly every day to help his son-in-law, Leonard Shoemaker, with the work. That is the way a number of retired farmers are retired.

Mr. and Mrs. John Cook of near Butler, were here Monday. Mr. Cook is one of the men this spring fortunate enough to have an abundance of potatoes but unfortunate in disposing of them. A goodly number were sold for 15 cents per bushel.

Arguments were due Friday in the case of Cook vs City of Butler before Special Judge Bratton of Angola, but the night before the attorneys on each side asked to have the matter postponed until next term of court. There was no excuse given for the postponement, neither are the attorneys running for office, they must be making garden. That is timely argument, isn't it?

Emma Davidson of Garrett, filed a suit in the circuit court late Saturday for divorce and custody of the children aged twelve and nine years, respectively, the fruits of her marriage to Harvey O. Davidson. Failure to provide is the general allegation, she saying she had to support herself and children, also her husband.

Atorney Charles O. Borst is the commissioner appointed by the court to sell real estate and satisfy claims as prayed for in the action of D. E. Hoover et. al., vs C. C. Shaw et. al. the commissioner 's bond being $10,400 double the appraisement of the said real estate.

The plaintiff in the suit of Phennoes Card vs E. F. Haynes having failed to pay the costs in another litigation as ordered by the court, this suit was dismissed at his cost.

Another failure to bide the court's order resulted in the dismissal of the damage suit begnn by Thomas Ward against the B. & O. He was ordered to submit to a medical examination at the instance of the defendant company but he failed to do so.

Corunna is to have an election. Their town clerk, Arthur Amos, has skipped to Canada and left the office vacant. Mr. Amos did not leave, however, with any of the town's funds as many office holders do who go to Canada, but he got the Canadian land fever and got it bad, so bad that a farm in the wilds of Canada looked better to him than an office in Corunna which pays a salary of $20 a year. But to fill the vacancy was what puzzled the town council. They did not want to incur the expense necessary for a special election to fill the office, but the last legislature made it mandatory. Every vacancy of this kind must be filled by a special election with all the expense attached there to. This was one of the laws passed by the last legislature in the interest of the taxpayer. They will hold their election on Saturday with Earl H. Wise as a candidate on the Independent ticket and Eugene Treesh on the citizen's ticket.—Auburn Dispatch.

So light running that your "youngest" can now mow the lawn without help.

KEEN KUTTER Mowers are fast cutting and easy running because of the triple gear and the fine ball bearings. A KEEN KUTTER will last longer than any mower on the market and is easily kept keen and sharp. To sharpen, merely reverse the blades and they sharpen themselves. A cheap mower will cost more in the end on account of repairs, will not do the work properly and will require twice as much labor.

Obituary

Martha Slentz was born in Franklin township, DeKalb county, Indiana, May 6, 1850, departed this life April 23, 1910, aged 59 years, 11 months and 17 days.

She was united in marriage to Samuel Oberlin, October 10, 1868. To this union were born three children, Miles, Meda and Viola. Twelve grandchildren, two brothers, three sisters and a kind and faithful husband are left to mourn their loss.

As a neighbor and friend she was held in high esteem. As a companion Mr. Oberlin takes pleasure in saying there could have been no better. This, however, is one of the sayings that brings the greater sorrow and deepens the anguish in the hour of death.

A further evidence of her loving kindness was shown by the care and motherly love bestowed upon her grandchild, Ida Oberlin, whom she made a home for from the age of two till the present time.

Sister Oberlin became a member of the United Brethren church at Jerusalem class in the year, 1884, and remained a consistent member until the time of her death. Her acceptance and conversion to Christ during the early days of life was a source of comfort to her friends and family during her sickness and death.

Funeral services were held at Jerusalem, Monday, at one o'clock p. m., conducted by Rev. O. B. Wells, of Roanoke, Ind., assisted by Rev. J. A. Davis. Interment at Hamilton.

Valentine Newton Moughler

Son of George and Mary Anne Moughler, who are now deceased, was born in DeKalb county, near Butler, Indiana, September 28, 1855. He departed this life on April 10, 1910, in Angola, Indiana, where he was then living, at the age of 54 years, 6 months and 18 days.

He was united in marriage to Harriet A. Fry in 1882 To this union were born eight children, six sons and two daughters, all of whom survive him, George, of Optima, Oklahoma; John, of Montpelier, Ohio; Carl, Ross, Lawrence, Mabel and Ruby, of Angola.

About twenty-two years ago he gave his life to the Lord and united with the Christian church at South Scott under the ministry of Elder Hedges.

Two brothers, Cyrus and Frank, and one sister, Mabel, have gone before him, while he leaves on this side three sisters and three brothers, Mrs. Rachel Woodworth, of Omaha, Nebraska, Mrs. Jane Gifford and Mrs. Carrie E. Harmon, both of Angola, and David Moughler, of Butler, Ind., and Jacob and Perry, of Angola. Besides those of his immediate family he leaves four grandchildren and a host of other relatives and friends, who are bereaved that he walks with us no more.

Funeral services were held at South Scott, Tuesday afternoon, conducted by Scott Calverr, minister.

CITY BUSINESS ENGINEER RESIGNS

A. J. Eakright Resigns as City Engineer Frank McDowell Takes His Place.

The city council met in regular session Monday evening. All members present except A. S. Kester.

Several small matters pertaining to water taps, etc., were disposed of. The more important feature of the meeting was the resignation of the city engineer, J. J. Eakright. Mr. Eakright in tendering his resignation said there had been some talk about the city having two engineers, and that it was his opinion one was enough and that owing to his physical disability, not being able to use his right hand on account of the injuries sustained in a runaway and not knowing how soon he would be able to do so, he felt it his duty to release the council from his services. He said he did not want to delay the paving, that he was here in Butler to stay and wanted to see it grow. The council felt the same as Mr. Eakright in the matter and accepted his resignation, and Engineer McDowell, of Auburn, being present, was given the office. Mr. McDowell informed the council that there would be considerable work that one man could not do. To this Mr. Eakright offered his services as assistant to the engineer the same as any other citizen, to which there can be no reasonable objections on the part of council or citizens.

Mr. Mason was present, representing the Neal Paving Co., and tendered his bond for completing the work and maintaining the same. A few days was taken by the council to investigate before accepting it.

Clerk Buehrer being absent, Milo D. Husselman filled his place.

Trouble Ahead

AUBURN, Ind., April 21.—Late yesterday evening County Clerk Austin issued a marriage license to Harlow Sechler, aged twenty-three and Miss Carrie Bleeks, aged twenty. Both are of St. Joe and are well and favorably known all over the county. The young people will become residents on a farm within a short distance of the city and have the heartiest wishes of all.

WATERLOO, Ind., April 21.—Mrs. Nora Paul and V. I. Brookmiller, both of this city, were married last night. The bride is the widow of the late J. H. Paul, and one of the most highly respected ladies of the city, while the groom is Waterloo's leading lumberman.

GARRETT, Ind., April 21.—Word has just reached Garrett of the marriage of Leo White and Miss Inez Lampman, two of the well known and most popular young people of the city. Miss Lampman has been employed as a stenographer in the Savings, Loan & Trust company, at Auburn, for some time past, and the groom is a student of Ada, O., college, taking a course in electrical engineering. The ceremony was performed in Hillsdale, Mich., on Good Friday, and it was planned to keep the marriage a secret for one year. Like the "best laid plans of mice and men" theirs went wrong, too and the secret is out. Mr. White is the son of Engineer Glen White, of this city, and is one of the most highly thought of young men of the community, while the bride is the accomplished daughter of B. A Lampman, who has but recently removed to Canada, but had been one of the prominent citizens of Garrett for several years. Mr. and Mrs. White will have the warmest congratulations of the entire city.

Miss Pearl Case daughter of Mrs. Mariah Case, will become a bride early in May when she will wed Geo. A. Smith of Garrett. Their many friends are already looking forward to the time when matrimonial congratulations will be in order.

Master Fred Mondhank is on the sick list.

FOUND—Ladies glove which remains at this office. Owner can have same by paying for this notice.

Mrs. B. D. Coffman is here from Chicago visiting A. U. Vernier and family and her father J. E. Decker.

It was rumored around the streets Tuesday that Waterloo would have a candidate for auditor to be voted on at the democratic primaries. George Hallett is to be a candidate. No formal announcement of his candidacy has as yet been made.—Auburn Dispatch.

While Grandma Robinett was going home from church, Wednesday evening, she was struck with a bicycle rider who was riding on the sidewalk and quite badly hurt. Owing to her advanced age it will probably be a long time before she recovers. Dr. Kramer informs us that she is injured internally.

REAL ESTATE HIGH IN SOUTH DAKOTA

E. E. Leech Tells of the Emigration and Other Interesting Features

MAY MAKE LOVE TO SQUAW

And Get Tattooed, Says Wife.

Mobridge, S. D., April 17, 1910.

Dear Wife and Friends in Butler—I will write you a short letter today. Went to church this afternoon and heard a very able sermon by Rev. Jenney who is a field missionary.

Work that is all outside work has been at a stand still for the last three days on account of rain and wind. It is just below the freezing point and the wind is very piercing.

Mobridge has about 500 souls. It is three years old and has just been incorporated into a city and will this coming Tuesday elect its first officers It has one church, Lutheran, three more to be built this summer, Catholic, Congregational and Methodist, and a $6,000 school house is being built.

A good many dwellings are under construction. It is a railroad terminal and will without a doubt be a terminal for another road before the summer is over as the road is building this way. It lays just across the Missouri river from the reservation that is being homesteaded this spring, and has several good stores, two banks and too much booze. Real estate is high. Business lots sell as high as $3,000, residence lots from $150 to $300. The soil in and around town is a dark brown sandy soil with a gravel subsoil. The emigration to this country is enormous. Every passenger train is loaded and from ten to thirty cars a day of farming tools, horses and cattle bound for the reservation or to Montana. A good many are going there.

Must say something of the Missouri river, the source of our drinking water, color just about the same as DeKalb ditch water after a big rain—flavor very good. There are two wells in this town, but people prefer the Missouri for theirs. It is a turbulent and treacherous stream on account of so much quicksand and small whirlpools constantly changing its course.

Mr. Hagerty expects to go into the reservation about May 1, where he has a claim. He has purchased a horse and carriage for transportation. Indians, of course, we have got some and all great big fellows And squaws, there is where I shine. They are most as large as the men, and how beautiful! Of course, you do not get a chance to see much of them for they generally are all covered up with their great large warm shawls, and when they get tired of walking around they usually sit down on the sidewalk or in the street, just as their fancy strikes them The other day there was an Indian family into the hotel where we board. It was one of those hot days we had the first of last week, and among them was a boy about ten years old who had a large woolen scarf wound around his neck and to look at him you would thought it was cold when in fact it was about 90 degrees in the shade.

Well I guess this will be all for this time. Regards to all,

E. E. LEECH.

Mrs. Leech says she is not worried in the least concerning the "big squaw" as "Heap Big Injun" will tatto him if her husband dares to make love to the "horrid old thing.

Tie and Feed Barn

Jacob Stuver, of Columbia City, has purchased Mrs. Otis' property which fronts on West Main street. He will move here at once and erect a feed and tie barn for the accommodation of farmers and as an investment for himself. This is what the farmers have been praying to happen for some time, as the hitching racks in the city are very scarce and good indications for fewer just as soon as the paving is commenced.

The tie and feed barn business is not an experiment with Mr. Stuver. He has been in the same business before and knows all the ins and outs of the business. He has paid cash for everything thus far contracted, and is not coming to Butler broke. The HERALD feels that the barn will be a good thing for the city, as it gives the farmers a place to put their teams away in safety, and during the paving especially will the barn be in demand

The size of the barn will be 55 feet wide by 150 feet long. Mr. Stuver informs the writer that on Sunday forenoons the barn will be free to people who come in from the country to attend church services. Mrs. Otis received $2,550 for her place. J. D. Wilcox made the deal.

He "Sees Things"

The Auburn Courier has a pipe dream. In plain English he has been "seeing things." He says: "Powers reproduced one of his mid-spring dreams as to the raising of the old jail and the construction of the new, and his unjust, uncalled for and ludicrous censure of the county commissioners", etc. To our knowledge nothing of the kind has ever appeared in our editorials concerning the court house proposition. And the only thing that we can think is that Editor Lochner has a nest of bats in his garret, or perhaps trying to hand the commissioners a lemon in a sort of hide-and-seek style.

As the HERALD goes to press there is little to report concerning the democratic state convention now in session at Indianapolis. But the Indianapolis papers say Mr. Marshall is the real drawing card and the central attraction. We are pleased to know that the 12th district unanimously indorsed the Marshall plan of nominating a United States senator. The Taggart men are claiming to be the stronger while the friends of the governor are confident they will win.

Obituary

Mrs. Mary E. Reasoner Inhofe was born in Denmark, Ohio, Feb. 12, 1851, and departed this life April 24, 1910, aged 59 years, 2 months and 12 days.

At the age of thirteen she moved with her parents to DeKalb county, Indiana, where she remained until death. She was united in marriage to Elijah Inhofe, June 3, 1869. To this union were born three children, one boy and two girls—O. D. Inhofe, of Butler, Sarah N. Wyatt and Ethel V. Armstrong.

She leaves to mourn their loss, a husband, three children, seven grandchildren, five brothers, two sisters and a host of friends. Her father, mother, two brothers and two sisters preceded her to the better land.

She united with the Lutheran church when but a mere child, and twenty-four years ago she united with the United Brethren church of which she remained a member and a faithful christian until her Savior called her home. In her last and lingering sickness she often spoke of her Savior and said, "I am not afraid to die, I am ready and only waiting to go home." And as we stood around her to watch the end, when at last she took us by the hand and said, "Good-by, watch me home."

The last fond look, the last kind word of mother dear we saw and heard will for all time with us remain a memory sweet in joy or pain.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. A. J. Brock at the U. B. church at Newville. Interment in Newville cemetery.

Ended is now her life on earth,
We realize her solid worth.
Feel she is sweetly safe at last
And all her afflictions past.

Lord grant our lives like her's may be
Lives full of faith and charity.
Of faith in God, for others love,
So we may meet in heaven above.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to extend our sincere thanks to the friends and neighbors for any favors shown us during the sickness and death of our wife and mother.

THE FAMILY.

Mrs. Monroe Norford is quite sick.

Mrs. Wm. Aldrich fell last Sunday evening and broke her hip, but is getting along nicely considering her age.

Rev. W. P. Herron, who formerly was pastor of the M. E. church at Hamilton, and who was assigned to Trinity church at Fort Wayne came to the city, from the recent conference at Bluffton, suffering with appendicitis. He entered St. Joseph hospital at Fort Wayne and was operated upon but he failed to recover, and his death followed soon after the operation. He was only 45 years of age, and in the prime of life, and his untimely death is deplored by all who knew him. He leaves a wife and two children. The body was taken to Osceola for burial. —Waterloo Press.

Pork-raising ought to be a profitable industry for those engaged in it, as the demand for pork increases every year, and the supply is decreasing. On Jan. 1 the number of swine in the great pork-raising and exporting States of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Missouri and Nebraska was only a little more than four-fifths as great as on the same date a year earlier. The actual decrease was nearly five million swine. As these States produce one-half of all the swine in the country and probably a large part of the pork consumed in the non-swine-producing commonwealths, the fact that the decrease in them is about three-quarters of the decrease in the United States throws an interesting light on the cause of the increase in the price of pork within the past year or so.

As it is contrary to the policy of the United States to secure "spheres of influence" and to make commercial settlements in the territory of other powers, the preservation of the treaty rights of Americans in China depends on the maintenance of the territorial integrity of the empire, and the prevention of a disregard of the open-door provisions of those agreements. Suspicion is felt in some official quarters that Japan is planning to secure exclusive control of Manchuria to the disadvantage of all other powers. Japan already controls Korea, and has succeeded to the Russian rights in Manchuria. It has lately entered into an agreement with China that the mines along certain Manchurian railways shall be exploited by the Chinese and Japanese, allowing it to be inferred that no one else may exploit them. The policy of Japan is well known to be backed by a desire to extend its influence as far inland on the Asiatic continent as possible. It needs space for the expansion of its population. Its policy is also based on the desire to secure for the Japanese exclusive privileges. The danger to the commerce of the western powers, including the United States, lies in the possibility that Japan may be able to obtain from the Chinese concessions which are inconsistent with the maintenance of the open door for those powers. If China chooses to resist Japan in this matter it will find its treaties useful, for it has agreed with the other nations that they shall have equal commercial privileges. But even if China should be indifferent, the other powers will not allow Japan to obtain a foothold which will prejudice their interests. But before action is taken there must be more than a suspicion that the treaty rights are threatened.

The professor of philosophy in the agricultural college of Kansas proposes a scientic course of matrimony, to be made a part of the instruction in the public schools of the State. He has outlined his plan in a pamphlet, entitled "A Better Crop of Boys and Girls." In this pamphlet he repudiates the old adage, that "love is blind"—at least he thinks it ought not to be blind. He says we have scientifically worked out cards for the scoring of cows, pigs and chickens, "but how about scoring young men and women who are candidates for marriage? What are the marks whereby a young woman whose hand is sought in marriage may know a good man when she sees him, and those whereby a young man may know a good woman?" He goes on to argue that because advanced courses of instruction are provided for those who would improve the breeding of horses, cattle, hogs and sheep, we should set up a standard of requirement for those who are engaged in the complex and difficult task of rearing children and improving the race. All of this sounds very plausible from a scientific standpoint, nevertheless the idea can hardly fail to be shocking to refined tastes. It takes all the romance out of love and marriage. No doubt it would be well if there could be some legislation or regulation to prevent the marriage of the mentally and physically unfit; but the idea of comparing the mating of human beings to the breeding of cattle is repulsive. The old way of falling in love has produced good results on the whole. The race has steadily improved. Scientific theories of raising children may be attractive to old bachelors and old maids, but with the father and mother the human element founded on love is predominant. If all romance is to be done away with and matrimony to to be based entirely upon good judgment and scientific calculation, then we would do well to adopt the system prevailing in some French society, and let the marriages be arranged entirely by the parents or guardians, the young people acquiescing quietly in whatever arrangements may be made. Then the mating could be as devoid of emotion and sentiment as the most scientific Gradgrind could wish.

FORGET IT—GOOD ADVICE.

Only Thing That Keeps Married Man Out of Sanitarium.

Over the desk of a busy man is a flaming red motto framed with equal brilliancy, so there is no escaping it. That motto has but two words—"Forget it"—but it speaks volumes to those who know that man's life.

His business is a harassing one that deals with keeping people warm and seeing that the ranges and furnaces are in order. Beneath the motto is a telephone that clangs from morning until night, all too often giving forth unreasonable complaints from fussy women who think their rights paramount.

Those who know him have often wondered at that man's philosophical temper, an exchange says. To a friend he revealed that the reason he does not go into a sanitarium of take to bad language from the fretting annoyance of his business is the silent preachment of the motto.

"I used to be a terrible worrier," said the man. "Every time a woman rowed me, or a man tore me to pieces because the furnace would not draw, I would go home looking as though life were a bursted tire, that nothing could repair. My poor wife bore the brunt of my gloom and the children came in for many an undeserved scolding because of office grievances.

"One day when I was particularly down on my luck, my small son, aged 10, burst out with, 'Say, dad, forget it.' It was slang and not what you would call reverential or well trained, but—it went home. I realized how I was letting my work ruin my disposition, therefore my life.

"That day I bought that motto you see and had it framed. There is scarcely an hour in the day that I do not look to it for help—and get it. I have trained myself, no matter what goes wrong, not to hold it as a grievance, but straightway 'forget it.'"

That slangy phrase which would cause Addison to ask for a translation, or Stanley Hall to take to print on the decadence of modern English, has a rich, meaty kernel that most of us could well digest. There are few women in this crooked-going world who cannot profitably take to slang as when inclined to hold a grievance, and "forget it."

As a cureall for the nagger let her live by that rule, "forget it." Then if husband will smoke in the drawing room and the kiddies neglect to wash faces, put on overshoes or courtesy gracefully when strangers address them, instead of making these delinquencies the subject of endless harangue, she will make life pleasant all around, and forbear to hang on indefinitely to her grievances.

The girl who is always being "put upon," or slighted, instead of passing on her troubles to the boredom of all who are caught listening, should make this motto her own. The next time she is inclined to think herself the one and only abused one, let her whisper to herself that magic phrase, "forget it."

There is the girl whose sole topic of conversation is the meanness of father and mother, the partiality of teachers and the cattiness of friends. Everyone lives for her special undoing and she becomes soured and discontented with no cause.

What must she do, nurse her wrongs into corroding wounds and adopt for herself the Ishmael role through life? There is a simpler and quicker way to happiness. Let her but learn to say, "forget it."

The Scotch Covenanters.

The Scotch Covenanters are so religious that the male members of the church are not allowed to vote in any election in our country because the name of God is omitted from the constitution of the United States. They are opposed to ceremonial to the point that no organ, piano, flute or violin or any musical instrument is allowed in the church. Psalms are the only singing permitted. The aversion to instrumental harmony is based on the belief that it is too much of a concession to Roman Catholicism. The Covenanters class the Episcopal Church as separated only by a gauze veil from Catholicity.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

Well Done, Massachusetts.

If President Taft has doubted the attitude of the people of the United States toward the Aldrich-Taft tariff, his doubts should be dispelled by the election of Eugene N. Foss, with a Democratic majority of 5,640, in the Fourteenth Massachusetts Congressional District, to succeed a man who was chosen by a Republican plurality of 14,250 two years ago.

Mr. Foss made his campaign on a straight tariff issue. His sweeping victory is a protest against the Aldrich-Taft law, and a repudiation of the Republican party by the inner temple of Republicanism.

Senator Lodge led the fight against Mr. Foss. President Taft himself took part in the campaign, making a special trip to Providence, and defending the tariff in a public speech within a few miles of the battlefield.

There was no local issue. The tariff alone was in contest; the voters of the Fourteenth District emphatically expressed their dislike and distrust of the tariff and its sponsors.

The Aldrich-Taft tariff and the Republican party are discredited in the very cradle of protection. Republican grand dukes and tariff barons are defied by their own followers. The common people are in open revolt against the interests. The vassals have turned against their feudal lords.

When such a popular uprising occurs within the very shadow of the Sacred Codfish that hangs on Beacon hill, there is not a doubt of Democratic victory all over the country at the Congressional elections this fall.

The real insurgents are not in Congress. They are the people. An insurgent populace does not with good grace withhold its hand, once nerved by victory. The example of the Bay State is inspiring. It does not require an ear of unusual keenness to detect the rumbling of the tumbrils, bearing the flower of our standpat aristocracy to the political guillotine, where the voter with the ballot-ax will administer the coup de grace.

High Food Prices and Foreign Trade

For the first time in that month in fifteen years the February of the current year shows an excess of American imports over exports. We bought abroad during that month four and a third million of dollars of products more than we sold abroad.

During the eight months beginning with the opening of the fiscal year on July 1 and ending with the last of February the excess of exports over imports was in round numbers. That's a balance of trade of comfortable dimensions to have in our favor, but during the same eight months ending with the last of February, 1909, this excess was $341,000,000, while the excess during the same months ending February, 1908, was more than $540,000,000.

It is not to be overlooked, of course, that the movement of money (gold, silver and bank notes) and of securities, also, must be included in the computation if an exact statement of the balance of trade in our commercial relations with other countries is sought. No computation is exact which comprehends commodities alone and no balance of trade is in our favor in the complete view unless the incoming total of commodities, securities and money is greater than the outgoing total. None the less, the movement of commodities is both interesting and instructive.

That a balance in our favor in the exchange of commodities averaging at least thirty millions or forty millions a month for some time past, should, in the second month of the present year, be suddenly changed into an adverse balance of more than four millions seems an illustration of one of the most familiar laws of trade. The falling off in our balance of trade in that month is due to a lessening in the exports of agricultural products, together with an increase in our imports.

We sold abroad something like $14,000,000 less of agricultural products in February than we sold in the February of the year before. And there has been a lessening in the amount of such products sold abroad during that entire period of eight months, which shows a total decrease of more than $150,000,000 in our excess of exports over imports.

To ascertain to what extent the increase in our purchases abroad may be due to the new tariff would require exhaustive anaylsis, but the conclusion that the decrease in our sales of agricultural products is due to the high prices of those products is irresistible. We are consuming more of these products at home than formerly. We hence have less to sell abroad than formerly. The prices of those products are advancing all over the world, but there are agricultural countries where prices are not yet as high as they are here and the purchasers of the world are buying in the cheapest markets.

Nothing alarming is disclosed by the conditions. Our exports of nonagricultural products are increasing. The increase in those products alone for February was almost enough to offset the decrease in farm products. If it had not been for an increase in our imports this increase in nonagricultural products would have been enough to leave the balance of trade in our favor not far from the February normal.

The significant feature of the condition is that we seem to have reached a time when, pending the introduction of a more intensive system of cultivation or some other change, agricultural products will continue to constitute an ever lessening and nonagricultural products an ever increasing proportion of our total export trade.—St. Louis Republic.

Exports and the Ship Subsidy.

In February, 1908, exports from the United States exceeded imports into the United States by $515,000,000; in February, 1909, the excess of exports over imports had fallen to $341,000,000; in February, 1910, exports exceeded imports by only $189,000,000.

The demand for American ships to carry American goods to foreign markets is founded on absurdity and proceeds from self-interest.

England, Germany and France, our greatest commercial competitors, are steadily developing foreign markets by sensible trade methods. The United States, by putting a premium on manufacturing for home consumption, deliberately retards the development of export business.

The day will come when the ridiculous Republican policy of "protecting" manufacturers will be recognized, not as the great benefactor, but as the greatest curse of the American people, and those who fastened it upon this nation will be set down in history as traitors who did not scruple to sacrifice the future of their country on the altar of private profit for themselves and their friends.

A Republican Machine.

"No Republican machine in this country is more astutely operated or more firmly intrenched than the Republican political machine in Massachusetts," says Ray Stannard Baker in his political review in the American Magazine. Mr. Baker continues:

"No boss in American politics is more accomplished in every art of machine manipulation than that 'scholar in politics,' Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, and he is ably seconded by Senator Crane, Gov. Draper and Congressman Weeks. They all work together, and behind them are solemnly marshaled all the great financial and corporate interests of Massachusetts—indeed, of New England. The New Haven Railroad, which now has a monopoly on practically all the transportation facilities of New England by land and by water, is behind them.

"So are the great tariff-protected manufacturing industries, and the great banks. The financial interests of New England are all solidly behind Senator Lodge and his machine. And for good reasons. No State machine has been able to deliver to the monopolistic and corporate interests more exactly what they have demanded than the Massachusetts Republican machine. In the last Legislature the New Haven Railroad got the permission which it so long desired, of absorbing the Boston & Maine, forming a practically complete monopoly—and that without giving the people any further power of regulation."

Canada's Lesson Learned.

Senator Aldrich's trade war with Canada is the culmination of a series of deliberate affronts to Canadians by the high-tariff clique of Washington.

Sir John Macdonald's famous "national policy," on which he returned to power in 1878 and thereafter ruled Canada until the early nineties, was the direct result of "standpatism" by United States tariff barons.

Macdonald's predecessor, Alexander Mackenzie, bombarded Washington fruitlessly for even slight reciprocal trade relations. Eastern mill bosses and their lumber barons would not yield, and their influence at Washington kept Canada out in the cold.

Therefore Macdonald began in 1878 to make Canada independent, as far as possible, of the United States in trade matters. Canada's economic independence got a slow start, but has grown apace.

Even up to ten years ago Canada's statesmen were ready for the renewal of a "reciprocity" treaty with the United States. But, as they gradually learned that United States tariff barons had absolute control of Congress, they dropped the idea. They began building up other foreign markets, and gave Great Britain, the mother country, a preferential tariff agreement.

That is why Canada is in a position to-day to refuse tariff dictation from Washington. The shoe is on the other foot.

The United States needs Canada's market more than Canada needs the United States as a market.

And that is why Canada proposed to clap 33 1-3 per cent additional duty on imports from the United States, if we impose the "maximum" 25 per cent additional duty on imports from Canada.

There is always a reckoning day, as the framers of the Aldrich-Taft law have found out.—Chicago Journal.

Washington "Economy."

For the good cheer of the ninety-one members of the United States Senate a palatial marble clubhouse, with a private office for every Senator, equipped with every luxury imaginable, has just been provided by a country grateful that an occasional dollar of its earnings escapes the eagle eye of predatory interests.

The building cost $3,000,000, or somewhat more than $30,000 per Senator. Thus does the nation care tenderly for its ninety-one statesmen.

More than a score of the Senators are millionaires. Already they belong to the best clubs in Washington. They are amply able to build their own club. But no; their recreation must be provided at the expense of the poor taxpayer.

The cost of living is already outrageous and growing every day. The demand for economy is urgent. Yet the poor, broken-down, indigent Senators must have a $3,000,000 club at public expense. And even that does not satisfy them, for they are now seeking to add to the civil-service pay roll a corps of masseurs, that they may enjoy free baths and relaxation of tired muscles at the taxpayers' cost.

Isn't the spectacle of the mendicant Senators and their charity club a sight to make angels weep and strong men curse?

PAUL REVERE.

Memories of the War

At Last.

O'er the sunlit hills of Berkshire dropped the drowsy summer calm,
Filling all the glens and valleys with the silence like a psalm;
Like an angel-chanted anthem thrilling towards a poet's ear,
Till he dreams the mystic rhythm God alone can know and hear.

By a little stream that bubbled from beneath a towering pine,
Hidden half and overshadowed by the sprays of blackberry vine,
Stood a man and maiden waiting till the parting hour should come,
When their clasping hands must sever at the rattle of the drum.

He to offer life for duty on the swart Virginia plain,
She to watch and hope his coming through the sunshine and the rain,
Very few the words they uttered as they waited hand in hand,
But the silence throbbed with voices that their hearts could understand.

Tender voices of the past time and the days forever done,
Days divinely sweet and holy when their love had just begun,
Hopeful voices of the future whispering of the joys to be,
When the clanging bells of battle hushed to the hymns of victory.

Sank the day into the sunset, and there came the tread of feet
Marching to the sound of music, up the length of level street.
Then he drew her to his bosom, parting backward from her face,
The long golden hair whose glory made a halo in the place.

Almost calm above his passion, then he whispered, "I must go—
You will send me letters often—kiss them where you sign them—so!
And if I no more come homeward—" trembling grew his lips and white,
"All these happy days together—you will not forget them quite!"

Answer none or word or gesture for a moment did she deign,
Save the mute pathetic promise of her eyes' remonstrant pain.
Then because her love sat higher than his doubts could lift their fronts,
She drew down his lips and kissed them as a woman kisses once.

"Would to God," she said, "my lover, that my life for thine might be!
But where'er God's voice shall call thee in His time I'll follow thee."
That was all. The soldiers' trampling passed and slowly died away,
And she knelt beside the pine tree all alone to weep and pray.

Came the solemn twilight gemming sky and stream with starry spheres,
Came the tender twilight dropping over all its dewy tears;
And she sought once more her duties and the dull routine of life,
Tenfold harder in the bearing than the battle's frenzied strife.

Days of forced and weary marches and of combat fierce and red,
Nights of bivouac around the campfire with the stars alone o'erhead,
Months of hopeless, hungry torture in a Southern prison-pen;
And a dumb dead face that never love should wake to life again.

On the frozen hills of Berkshire, white the snows of winter lie,
Scarlet red against the sunset where their summits pierce the sky,
In a little country churchyard, climbing up the side of one,

Where the first arbutus blossoms, and the grass greens first i' the sun,
Side by side two graves are showing—over one the flowers have grown,
Ten long years, have bloomed and withered, and the autumn leaves have blown;
On the headstone of the other the first wreaths have hardly dried,
Where—at last—the soldier's sweetheart slumbers by her lover's side.

Zack Chandler Wanted Grant Fired.

Henry Kieler, 92 years old, resident of Detroit for seventy years, who once made a uniform for Gen. U. S. Grant, when he was a lieutenant, stationed in Detroit, died recently from old age, at his residence, 349 Champlain street.

Mr. Kieler had retained wonderful health, considering his age, until a little over a week before his death, when he was obliged to take to his bed. From then on he broke down rapidly.

Born in Germany, Mr. Kieler was one of the oldest immigrants of his nationality in Detroit. Shortly after he came to Detroit he became a tailor's apprentice and later conducted a shop of his own. It was at this time that he made the suit for Gen. Grant. He told an interesting story in connection with the delivery of the suit. He says that when he took the uniform to Grant the latter was very much pleased with it, and donning it decided to ride to Grosse Pointe. His horse was restive and Kieler held the animal while Grant mounted. As soon as he was on its back the brute became unmanageable and dashed down Jefferson avenue with the general. He ran up over sidewalks and narrowly escaped going through the window of a millinery store.

Finally he jumped a fence and landed in the front yard of Zachariah Chandler's residence. Mrs. Chandler ran out of her house very angry, and demanded that Grant, who was then an unimportant lieutenant, take his horse from her premises and cease trampling her lawn. Kieler said that Chandler afterward wrathfully announced that he would have Grant dismissed from the army.—Detroit Free Press.

A Double-Barreled Cannon.

It was invented and cast almost half a century ago, and still stands, the only double-barreled cannon in the world, in the little city of its birth. The queer brain of its maker, a native of the university town of Athens, Georgia, conceived the thought that since one cannon-ball can commit much devastation, two, ingeniously chained together and projected simultaneously from the twin barrels, would work incalculable destruction.

Having convinced a number of friends and adherents that the idea was a tremendous one, he had the gun cast and set up. The invasion of Athens by the Federal forces was just then regarded as imminent. Calm and confident, the home forces got ready to test their wonderful cannon. They ran it up to the summit of a barren hillside, commanding several empty fields. The fuse was lighted.

Naturally one projectile came out a shade ahead of the other. But that shade's difference! A strange, whirling motion was imparted to ball and chain, and the errant projectile darted about in a quite unpredictable path. Acres of ground were torn up in every direction. Fortunately, in spite of the faith everybody had in the invention, all had taken care to reach safe cover. Besides some well-plowed fields, there were no casualties worth relating.

Still, Athens takes unabated pride to this very day in the quaint invention, as well as in the episode of its one-time firing; and in all municipal pageants and occasions of importance, the historic gun continues to be a feature, to omit which would seem the violation of a much respected tradition.

He Got the Brick.

General Rosecrans tells the following story: The battered old fort (Sumter) was in possession of the Confederates, and one night a Union soldier of the force that was holding Morris Island said he believed he would pull over to Sumter and get a brick for a relic. He had been hitting the commissary bottle pretty frequently, and was in condition to do anything. Taking an old water-logged skiff he pulled out and was lost in the darkness. It was a long way, and he was beginning to think himself gone up when he suddenly entered under the shadows of the walls, and heard click, click, "Who goes there?" Standing up as well as he could in the boat, he threw up both hands and cried "Yank."

"What do you want, Yank?"

"Want one o' them bricks."

"You've got one in your hat now."

"You bet I have, but I want another."

"All right; come ashore and get one."

He landed, walked up a short distance, and, sobered up by this time, took the first brick he found, and started back in quick order for the boat.

"Say, Yank, are all you'uns drunk over there?"

"Pretty much; how is it with you?"

"Some of us air and some of us ain't. Good-night, Yank."

"Good-night, Johnnie?"

"That man," continued the General, with a quick twinkle in his eyes, "that man, if he is alive to-day and has the brisk imagination of some men I know, is telling his children how he arrived at Fort Sumter one stormy night, and, in a terrific single-handed combat with forty rebs, killed thirty-nine and brought the fortieth away badly wounded."

Sickles at Gettysburg.

Lee's defeat at Gettysburg has been held most often to be due to his failure to allow Longstreet to turn the Union flank and get possession of the strategic hillocks known as the Big and Little Roundtops. A temperamental weakness for frontal attacks is said to have determined Lee against Longstreet's plan and to have turned a possible victory into a sure defeat.

Now there is a movement on foot to make Daniel E. Sickles a lieutenant general on the retired list, because Sickles is the man who as a corps commander assumed the responsibility of attacking Longstreet on July 2 and thus prevented him from taking possession of the hills he coveted. Sickles, it was claimed for years, should have been censured instead of praised, because he moved without orders. But he never was censured, because as a corps commander he had the right to interpret some emergencies as calling for battle without consulting the general in command.

But if Longstreet did not take possession of the Roundtops because Lee disapproved, how did Sickles prevent him by making an attack? Possibly Longstreet was going ahead without orders, too. There is no historical evidence of this, however. Longstreet obeyed orders and Lee afterwards admitted he had lost the fight because he did not let Longstreet alone.—Minneapolis Journal.

He Qualified.

During the spring of 1864 a company of Virginia soldiers was encamped near the home of Mrs. Sawyer, a woman noted throughout the neighborhood for her charitable deeds. One day, driving by the camp, she saw a poor, sick soldier lying by the roadside, and stopping her carriage, talked to him for some time, asking about his health, and expressing her sympathy. She noticed while doing so that on each hand he had two thumbs.

Upon reaching home she was haunted by the recollection of the poor man, and although provisions of all kinds were very scarce, she determined to divide with him the few things she had in the house.

After preparing the basket, she remembered that she had not asked his name, but recalling his deformity, wrote on the cover, "For the soldier with two thumbs."

Giving it to a trusted negro, with minute directions, she sent him on horseback to the camp.

She was much surprised at his speedy return, and asked how he had managed to find the man so soon.

"He was de fust one I see," said Sam. "I was gwine 'long, and a soldier ask me what I got in dat basket, and I tole 'im a chicken and things for de man wid two thumbs, and he say he was de one, and I give him de basket."

"Did he have two thumbs on each hand?" she asked.

"Well, he didn't say nothin' 'bout whar he had 'em. He jes' say he got two thumbs."

Misleading Pronunciation.

"Who is that young man standing there by that horseless machine—the what-d-d'ye-call-it?"

"That's the shover."

"The shover! By gosh! Can he push such a heavy thing as that?"—Baltimore American.

Layman Finds Stomach Cure

Good Christian and Family Man, but Had Poor Digestive Organs—What Cured Him You Can Get Free.

It is a generally admitted fact that among ministers and their families Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the favorite laxative. It is not often that the layman has a chance to "speak up in meeting," and hence these words from Mr. Joseph Murphy, of Indianapolis, Ind., whose picture we present herewith:

Mr. Joseph Murphy

"All my life I had needed a laxative to cure my constipation and stomach trouble. I couldn't eat anything; I couldn't get what I did eat out of my system. I tried everything, because my work, engineer on a railroad train, makes it necessary that I feel strong and well. Finally it was my good fortune to meet up with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, through the recommendation of a friend. I took it and was cured. That is some time ago, but I am still cured."

It can be bought of any druggist for 50 cents or $1 a bottle. Send your address and a free test bottle will be sent to your home. What She Should Have Said.

Two colored women were standing on a downtown corner yesterday afternoon talking.

"Miss Williams have came home," said one.

The other laughed. "Ma goodness!" she said. "Why don't you leahn yob grammah?"

"What did I say that wah grammahless?" asked the other.

"You said 'have came.'"

The first speaker was provoked. "Well, yo' knows so much about grammah, now tell me what should I a-said," she demanded.

"Yo' should a-said 'Miss Williams HAS came home,'" replied the other.—Denver Post.

PRACTICALLY HELPLESS.

All Broken Down with Backache and Kidney Troubles.

Mrs. Matilda Lindemann, 4423 Wentworth Ave., Chicago, Ill., says:

"Twelve years kidney disorders distressed me. My back ached, my appetite was poor, my eyesight failed me and nervousness and dizzy spells afflicted me. Finally my hands and arms got practically paralyzed, and I was so weak I could hardly drag myself across the floor. Doan's Kidney Pills have done wonders for me. I feel strong and sound since using them, my back hardly ever hurts and the other troubles are gone."

Remember the name—Doan's. Sold by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Too Deep for Tears.

The milkman's horse had run away, and the contents of the wagon had been distributed impartially over a territory two blocks long and one street wide.

"No," said the driver, as he surveyed the wreck, "I'm not going to do any crying over spilt milk, but——"

Thereupon he sat down on the edge of the sidewalk, and his subsequent profanity, according to the testimony of everybody within hearing, established a new record.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten-fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Sold by Druggists. Price, 75c. per bottle. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

Riding Away With the Bride.

In many of the border counties of England the quaint old bridal customs of hundreds of years ago are still in vogue. The parents carefully abstain from appearing at the marriage ceremony, clinging to the idea that the bridegroom still rides away on a foaming steed with his bride behind him as in the good old days. The brides prefer the custom to the modern method of being given away at the altar in the orthodox fashion.

Indigestion and Stomach Remedy.

The well-known specialist on indigestion and stomach troubles, Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 202 Caldwell Building, Monticello, Ill., will send, free of charge, a sample treatment of his celebrated Pepsin Syrup remedy for the relief and cure of these painful troubles by addressing him as above.

Thirst for Knowledge.

"Father," said the small boy with the thoughtful, intellectual face, "how do you differentiate between an ambassador and a minister?"

"Differentiate!" gasped the father, struck all of a heap, but recovering himself, "we pay the ambassador about $5,500 more salary, my son, that we do the minister."

The Wand of Sleep
OR
The Devil-Stick

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER XVI.—(Continued.)

After this enigmatical remark he hurriedly left the room, for the purpose, without doubt, of escaping further questioning. His demeanor completely puzzled Jen, who could not make out the meaning of his conversation. Evidently David knew something which he was unwilling to reveal—something which might lead to the solution of the profound mystery which enwrapped the death of Maurice, and the extraordinary disappearance of his body.

The more Jen thought about the matter the more perplexed did he become. The recovered devil-stick found in the grounds of Mrs. Dallas, the saturated handkerchief found in the bedroom of the dead man; and now the unaccountable hints of David that he knew something likely to throw a light upon these mysteries, joined with an equally unaccountable refusal to afford such revelation, all these things puzzled him: but as it was impossible, in the absence of actual knowledge, to come to any reasonable decision, Jen determined to seek Jaggard, and see how he was. If Jaggard could only recover his senses, argued the Major, he would be able to say who had stolen the body. Moreover, in Jen's opinion, the person who committed the second crime would most probably, by the force of analogous reasoning, have committed the first.

To the Major's surprise, he found that Jaggard had recovered his senses, and although still weak from his accident and long insensibility, he was able to talk fairly well. Jen was puzzled by this sudden recovery; and he expressed himself forcibly to the housemaid Anne, who had been watching for so long by the bedside of the sick man. The woman—with the shrewdness of her class—gave her opinion as to its reason.

"Ever since that handkerchief has been removed, sir," said she, earnestly, "Jaggard has got well. I do believe, sir, that the scent on it kept the poor dear stupid."

Another light was let in on Jen's mind. Here was the handkerchief again—perfumed with the devil-stick decoction of poison by Dido—applied by the hand of Etwald, and its design was evidently to keep Jaggard in a state of stupor, and prevent him from making dangerous disclosures. Dido and Etwald once more in partnership. Jen was more convinced than ever that the pair were at the bottom of the whole terrible affair.

"I am glad to see that you are better, Jaggard," he said, while standing by the bed.

"Yes, sir, thank you, sir," replied the man, in a weak voice. "I'm sorry, sir, but I couldn't help myself. I was drugged, sir."

"I guessed as much," said Jen, grimly. "And who drugged you?"

"Dido, sir," replied Jaggard, faintly. "I guessed as much," said the Major, once more.

CHAPTER XVII.

Exhausted by the few words he had spoken, Jaggard fell back on his pillows in a dead faint. Jen left the patient to the tender attentions of Anne, and withdrew to seek David. He found him in a melancholy mood, pacing up and down the lawn before the window of the smoking-room. On perceiving his guardian, Sarby turned pale, for he thought that Jen had come to continue their previous conversation, and to force his confidence.

"Well, David!" said the newcomer, with significance, "I have made one discovery without your help. I know who drugged Jaggard. I have learned who stole the body of Maurice!"

"Then you know more than I do," replied David. "My knowledge extends only to the death; not to the seizure of the body."

"And you refuse to aid me," said the Major, reproachfully; "well, keep your secret. I may be able to do without your help. But," added Jen, fixing a piercing glance on the young man, "I notice that you do not ask me the name of the person who drugged Jaggard."

"Because I guess the name."

"Ah!"

"Mrs. Dallas," said David, faintly. "It was Mrs. Dallas."

Jen drew back a step and looked at his ward with marked surprise.

"No," he said, at length. "Mrs. Dallas has had nothing to do with it."

"But I thought from what you said of the handkerchief dropped in the room——"

"That being the property of Mrs. Dallas, she had lost it there," interrupted Jen, smartly. "No. I told you also that Isabella had confessed to having dropped it at the time of her midnight visit. But now I know that she told me a lie!"

"Isabella! A lie! Impossible?"

"Not at all," rejoined Jen, coldly. "I can understand her reason for telling the lie. She wanted to shield——"

"Her mother!" cried David, quickly interrupting in his turn.

"Your mind seems to run on the mother, David. Can you prove by any chance that she committed the crime?"

"No, Uncle Jen, I can't. I have my suspicions."

"It pleases you to be mysterious, David. Shortly I shall insist upon an explanation. You owe it to me—your second father—to tell the truth. You owe it to your dead brother's memory—for assuredly Maurice was your brother."

David stared sullenly at the ground, but in a moment or two he lifted his head in a defiant manner.

"I owe you much more than I can ever repay," said he, in hard tones. "At the same, Uncle Jen, I cannot reveal even to you, what I know. If I did so, you would be the first to blame me."

"I don't understand you."

"I don't understand myself," said the young man, despondently, "save that I am the most miserable man alive."

"You must be, if you know who killed Maurice, yet refuse to confess," retorted Jen, with some heat. "Will you not tell me the truth? I ask you for last time."

"And I answer for the last time that the truth is not mine to tell," replied David, coldly. "If you doubt me question Etwald."

"What! that criminal? I believe that out of jealousy, he killed Maurice."

"Oh," said Sarby, sardonically; "and out of jealousy he stole the body?"

"No. Dido did that. Jaggard has just informed me that it was Dido who drugged him. Why did she drug him? To steal the body of my poor lad. Why did she steal the body? To conceal the crime committed by Etwald. I firmly believe that Etwald stole the devil-stick, and with it killed Maurice."

"From a motive of jealousy?"

"Precisely. As you know, the body was stolen before the post-mortem examination could be made. Why was this? Does not your own reason find an answer to that question?"

"No," replied David, still obstinately unconvinced.

"Why," said Jen, with a nod, "if a post-mortem examination had been made, traces of poison would have been discovered. The poison would have been proved as identical with that of the devil-stick. Thus, beyond all doubt, we should have learned that Maurice had been killed by the devil-stick. To avert the discovery, and to prevent the analysis of the poison in the body, Dido, under the direction of Dr. Etwald, committed the third crime. The man has some power over her. What that power may be, I know no more than you do. Although," added Jen, with an afterthought, "you may be able to explain."

"No. I have no idea why Dido should serve Etwald."

"Take care, David. You are forcing me to believe that you are acting in this way from an unworthy motive. It is your duty to aid me in discovering and punishing the murderer of Maurice. Yet you leave me to do all the work, and refuse your assistance in any way. Unless you alter your manner, and take me into your confidence regarding the reason of this strange behavior, a breach not easily mended may occur between us."

He paused, waiting for his ward to make some reply in defence of his conduct. The young man neither moved nor spoke, but, paler than usual, he stood before the Major with his eyes on the ground. More in sorrow than in anger, Jen looked at him, then turned on his heel and walked into the house. David looked after him with quivering lips.

"If he only knew the truth," said he, wiping the perspiration from his face, "what would he say? What would he do? He blames me now; would he blame me then?"

In the meantime, while Sarby was indulging in this enigmatic soliloquy, Major Jen was pursuing his way towards the room of Jaggard. Despairing of obtaining information from David, he thought it possible to learn the truth from Jaggard. Honestly speaking, the Major was puzzled by the conduct of his ward. Hitherto, he had always considered David to be an honest man, but at the present time his conduct savored of duplicity. Did he know of anything relative to the triple crime which had been committed? If so, why did he not speak? Finally, was David also under the fatal influence of Dr. Etwald—the man who, Jen verily believed, was the source of all these woes?

Jen found that Jaggard, having had a sleep during the long absence of his master, was much better. Finding himself alone with his servant, Jen addressed himself immediately to the business in hand.

"Do you feel stronger, Jaggard?" he asked. "I wish you to tell me what took place on the night you were drugged."

"After you left me, sir, I remained seated in my chair beside the bedside of my poor master. If you remember, there was only one candle in the room, which was placed on the table, some little distance away. I examined the window and found it closed. It was bolted and barred. The door was simply closed, for I never thought of locking it, as I fancied, sir, that you might return after midnight to see if all was right."

"I did not, however, Jaggard. I fell asleep in the library, after Mr. Sarby had gone to bed; and, of course, I had every confidence in you."

"Please, don't say that, Major," said Jaggard, imploringly, "as I did my best. It was not my fault that Dido drugged me. I'm sure I don't know why she did so. I never did her any harm."

"Do you know what occurred during the time you were insensible?"

"No, sir. I've only got my wits about me now."

"Well," said Jen, seeing that the man spoke in all good faith, "the body of Mr. Maurice was stolen on that night."

"The body stolen!" repeated Jaggard, in amazement. "For why, sir?"

"I can't tell, nor can anybody else. All we know is that at that at 3 o'clock in the morning we entered Mr. Maurice's room and found the window open, the body gone, and you insensible."

"The window open," said Jaggard, thoughtfully. "Then it must have been opened from the inside, sir."

"By Dido, no doubt."

"I'm certain of it, Major; and it was that black witch who stole the body. She was hidden under the bed, sir."

"Under the bed! Are you sure?" said Jen, greatly startled by this information.

"Yes, Major. It was this way. I was seated by the bed, at the foot of it, with my face to the door. The window, as I said, was locked. She could not have got in at the window, and had she entered by the door, I should have seen her. Besides," added Jaggard, in a faint voice, "she grabbed me from behind."

"From behind?"

"Yes, sir. I was not quite asleep, but a kind of dozing in my chair. I don't know what it was made me sleepy, as I was wide awake when you left, sir. But there was a kind of heavy, sleepy smell about."

"I know, I know—the devil-stick perfume."

"Well, sir, the smell made me sleepy; and though I heard a noise behind me I could not turn my head. I was just as if in a nightmare, sir. Then the black arm of that witch came from behind me and grabbed at my throat, and she held a handkerchief with that stuff on it to my nose."

"Ah," said Jen to himself, "I knew that Isabella was speaking falsely. * * * Go on, Jaggard," he added aloud. "Why did you not call out?"

"I couldn't, sir. I felt as in a dream; but I turned and tried to fight her. She pushed me over, and I fell like a log. I think I must have hit my head on a corner of the bed, for I felt a cruel pain at the back of it. I don't know what it all means, sir, but I am sure I know how Dido god into room."

"Ah! That is what I wish to learn. Well?"

"If you remember, sir, Dido called to see you that day."

"Yes. To ask if I would see her mistress; a most unnecessary question."

"It was a blind, sir; and when she left the room I don't believe she left the house."

"What makes you think so?"

"Sir, I took Dido out to the door, and while I was telling her to go away, Dr. Etwald came out. He told me he would see after her, and I left them alone. Now, sir," said Jaggard, with emphasis, "I do believe as Dr. Etwald took that black jade to the room of Mr. Maurice and hid her under the bed."

MARRY AND ENJOY LONG LIFE.

Dr. Jacques Bertillon's Advice Is Backed Up by Statistics.

On the subject of matrimony, Dr. Jacques Bertillon, the French statistician, differs in his advice from Punch, which summed up its counsel to those about to marry in the one word, "Don't!" Dr. Bertillon, on the contrary, explains his reasons for believing that marriage and longevity go hand in hand.

He calls in the aid of statistics to prove his contention that a married man or woman has three times as much chance to attain a ripe old age as a bachelor or a spinster; and with regard to men he shows that the mortality among widowers is greater than among married men, the New York Sun London correspondent says. Dr. Bertillon says that his father went thoroughly into the question and obtained statistics from other European countries which completely support this opinion, while he himself has studied later figures in France. So his advice to young men runs:

"Marry; you will do well even from a selfish standpoint. But watch carefully over your wife's health, as even from this egotistical point of view her loss will be a terrible misfortune, for your life depends in a great measure on her own."

Addressing himself to young women he says:

"To you I give the counsel to marry in your most selfish interest, as married women have less mortality than spinsters of the same age, at least after the age of 20; but the difference is less for women than for men. The mortality among spinsters is much greater than among married women, but it is not twice as great, as in the case of men."

Dr. Bertillon does not take a cheerful view of the lot of the widow. He says:

"The mortality among widows is distinctly much greater than among married women of the same age. 'The sweet state of widowhood,' is, on the contrary, fatal to young widows. Their death rate from 20 to 25 years of age is twice that of married women at the corresponding age."

He gives the reason why matrimony conduces to longevity thus:

"Married people lead a more regular life. They are more surrounded and therefore more controlled, discreet though this control may be, and it must be discreet if it is to be useful. Their physical life, like their moral life, is healthier, quieter, more natural."

In the French statistics of one year which Dr. Bertillon has selected the deaths in a thousand men among bachelors between the ages of 35 and 40, were nineteen, while those of married men were only eight. Between the age of 55 and 60, the figures were forty-one for the former and twenty-three for the latter.

With women the mortality was twelve to eight, between 35 and 40, and twenty-four and eighteen between 55 and 60. The death rates among widows and divorcees were respectively twelve and twenty-one women a thousand.

It Went Too Fast.

Mrs. Wabacke (whose husband has just returned from his first visit to the city)—Did yer go inter Kashner's department store, Abner?

Abner—Yes, Susan, I went inter the store, but I didn't buy nothin'.

Mrs. Wabacke—Warn't ther' no barguns?

Abner—Wall, I didn't see none. I seen one man buyin' a pair of socks, an' he give the gal behin' the counter a ten-dollar bill fer 'em.

Mrs. Wabacke—Fer the lan's sake, Abner. A ten-dollar bill?

Abner—Yas; an' the gal put the bill inter a litul roun' box, an' pulled a string, an' the next thing I seen war thet box an' the ten-dollar bill in et whizzin' through the store like Towser chasin' a rabbit. Then I says to myself, "Abner Wabacke, you'd be a plumb big fool to buy enything in a store whar money goes as fas' as that." An' then I gits out.—The Housekeeper.

Had Met Before.

"Hello, there!" exclaimed the cheerful man. "Glad to see you. Howdy do?"

"Why—er—howdy do? Howdy do?" returned the absent-minded man, somewhat dubiously.

"How are you?"

"Pretty well, pretty well; er—"

"You don't seem to remember me."

"Why—er—your face is familiar, but—er—"

"Don't remember my name, eh?"

"Why—er—I hope you'll pardon me, but I must confess I don't," said the absent-minded man.

"You'll find it on the handle of that umbrella you are carrying," remarked the cheerful man. "You borrowed it from me six months ago."—New York Times.

A Department For Women

Why Do Men Wait on Women?

Irreverent persons suggest that man's only object in life is to please woman and to serve her. Slightly exaggerated this statement, perhaps, yet there must be some truth at the bottom of it. Otherwise, why should man wait on woman at all? Why take pleasure in being agreeable to her? Why go out of his way to assist her? In other words, why should he be chivalrous?

Chivalry is the expression of man's real, instinctive deference for woman. Although, like other instinctive feelings, it is being modified or rooted up by education and civilization, the chivalrous instinct nevertheless still makes itself felt in modern man. It impels him, when confronted with woman, to pass through three different stages. In the first one he strives to attract woman's attention; in the second to please her; finally, to serve her.

The unconcerned are highly diverted by the first. There is no end to the things a man will do to attract woman's attention. Nothing is too absurd. One man found it necessary to spoil his patent leather shoes. He was being rowed across a lake when a girl passed by in her canoe. Without a moment's hesitation he plunged both feet into the rippling water, letting them dangle there, stupidly.

Other men use other methods; some grow spry and climb fences, stumble over their own feet; some imagine themselves the proud possessor of a voice and exercise it; others whistle out of tune or twirl their mustaches. Still others grow disconcerted and forget where they are going or lose the thread of their conversation.

So much for the desire of being noticed. When it comes to pleasing women, men are more particular. Then they strive for personal perfection. The intellectual ones go about with poetry in their breast pockets and learn it by heart, ready to repeat it at the first occasion. Or they dabble into art or literature or some "ism" in order to acquire the correct pose. The more matter-of-fact puzzle over material things: whether the hair is parted in the right place; whether the red or blue tie will make the better impression. For men are vain and dress to please.

Woman and the Ballot.

A woman from Colorado has brought rejoicing to the cohorts of the anti-suffragists. "The really feminine women," she is quoted as saying, "as a rule are content to leave the governing to the men." She herself is fond of outdoor sports, is an expert with the rifle and has slain bears and other beasts. All these, of course, are truly feminine accomplishments. Your truly feminine woman should be prepared at an instant's notice to drop the knitting needle or the baby's bottle, seize her trusty rifle and sally forth to slay. Yet this modern Diana from Colorado shrinks coyly from the ballot, we are told. Knowing that her husband was staunch for McKinley, when her time for suffrage came she ran right out and voted for—Bryan, of course, and whimsically signed her name so that the ballot became void. Reasonable doubt may exist as to whether all this really is a feather in the "anti" cap, and the answer hinges upon a definition of "the really feminine woman." This woman, when found, will be prepared to state whether or no she would have the ballot, and to her the manly man will at once doff his hat, swept low, and exclaim, "At your service, madam." Suffrage will be hers for the asking.—Baltimore Star.

New "One-Sided" Jabot.

Everything laps over from right to left this year. Even the jabots show more trimming on the left hand edge, some of them being merely a frill attached to a straight strip of insertion; the frill, of course, falling off to the left side. This jabot of fine batiste and lace is attached to a high stock and there are cuffs to match—this being one of the new fads. At the left side of the jabot is a frill and on the left side of the stock above it is a strip of the lace on which are three fancy buttons.

Old Laces.

Old laces, when good, may be turned to good account. Small pieces of coarse or Italian lace can be used to cover hatpins. These are pretty when worn in lace hats. A careful needlewoman can use fine lace to cover satin slippers, making the pieces fit closely over the satin. These make beautiful bedroom slippers and, when fine laces are used, may be used for dress occasions. Practically all laces of set pattern can be appliqued to net and so become excellent shirt waist or lingerie dress trimmings.

Needlework Notes.

Belts, bags and purses embroidered in raffia are making a good showing among the displays of fancy work.

Butterflies, beetles and dragon flies, conventionalized and worked in brilliant iridescent colors, are wonderfully beautiful in embroidery.

One or two handsome embroidered buttons are an addition to the evening coat of light cloth. The button may be worked in dainty Dresden coloring, giving a charming effect.

The simple cabin stitch, done with heavy silk, is used more than ever as a finish for dressy gowns. This is particularly effective for outlining panels and revers and collars and cuffs as well.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Yokes feature the young girl's separate skirts, the remaining portions are plaited.

The Dutch neck with frill and jabot promises summer comfort and short sleeves assert themselves even more than they have during the winter season.

Seed pearls, mixed in with embroidery, put on bodices of evening gowns and used for dainty floral patterns on the edges of tunics and sleeves are again in style.

A pretty and economical idea for a petticoat to be worn under dancing frocks is to have a foundation of white silk with flounces of white washing net edged with lace and run with ribbon.

On many of the handsomest dinner and evening gowns the decolletage is modified to something not far from a low Dutch neck, the low neck being now considered by some authorities as outside the mode.

Moire and bengaline have been so successful during the past season that it is likely they will continue in popularity until the warm weather. Then come the foulards and rajah weave silks for the summer suits.

Wrapped, swathed and draped effects, with huge flat or flapping bows, are at present the fad in millinery, and only broad ribbons can be used.

Dotted goods are much used just now, not only for dresses, but as coat trimmings and the like. Many handsome coats of the season are made of tussah, linen and other spring goods, with deep facings of dotted foulard.

Coquettish little bonnets of shirred materials are worn by debutantes. They are in rich colors and give additional color to the very youthful face. The cord shirring adapts itself nicely to this particular style of bonnet.

There is a decided fancy for white frocks this season for other than evening wear. Tailor coat and skirt gowns and afternoon frocks on princess lines are contrived of rough-surface white woolens, of corduroy and of broadcloth.

Health and Beauty Hints.

Iced water and eating too fast are the two chief causes of the so-called "American dyspepsia."

A medical journal says that if a few drops of carbolic acid be added to the tincture of iodine the iodine will not stain the human skin.

When a burn is caused by alkalies, as caustic potash or lime, then the application of acid is the proper treatment. Water and vinegar or diluted lemon juice is a near-at-hand remedy.

If your digestion is bad starve yourself for a day or two, then go on a sensible diet; that is, avoid rich and greasy foods, and eating overmuch meat and sweets. Coffee is often ruinous to the digestion, as it makes many persons bilious.

If the circulation is at fault, first seek to improve it by exercise in the open air, avoidance of tight clothing and deep breathing. Massage is also helpful. If all these remedies fail, seek advice from a physician, as you may need digitalis, nitroglycerin or some other heart tonic.

Woman Wins High Honor.

Constantina Elizabeth Maxwell is the first woman to become a member of the teaching staff of Trinity College, Dublin, one of the most venerable and conservative institutions of learning in Europe. She has been elected assistant to the professor of modern history. She was graduated only a few months ago with the first senior moderatorship. She won a gold medal in history and political science, easily taking first place in a class of more than forty and in which she was the only woman.

The Passing of the Old Bachelor.

The typical old bachelor—crusty, irritable, solitary—seems to be passing away, if, indeed, he is not already extinct. Nowadays there is every encouragement for bachelordom, until it has developed from a single state to a united kingdom, with royal palaces in all great cities.

There was a time when the typical bachelor was pictured seated alone in a sadly neglected room, pushing a reluctant needle through unyielding cloth, as he strove awkwardly to sew a button on his coat, using the side wall of his room for a thimble. That is all done away with now, when the Universal Valet Company, Unlimited, sends its motor to the door of the bachelor apartments and carries away the garments of Benedick, returning them at nightfally, every button reenforced, every spot and stain effaced.

And in what careless comfort does Benedick live! Unhampered by feminine niceties, he sets down his pipe where he will, and swings about his room in easy half dress, shouting the "Stein Song" at the top of his voice, without let or hindrance.—Atlantic Monthly.

Snap Shots At Women

Mrs. L. C. Rawson is the only woman member of the Association of Life Insurance Presidents.

Mrs. M. R. Hodder was the only woman member of the Massachusetts commission of old-age pensions which reported to the legislature.

Mrs. Lucia Ames Mead will present the subject of peace and arbitration at the next biennial session of the general Federation of Women's Clubs.

The state universities of Louisiana and Texas have chosen woman suffrage as the subject for their intercollegiate debate. Texas takes the affirmative.

Through the work of the Woman's Progress Association of New South Wales $300,000 has been voted to increase annually the salaries of teachers in the public schools.

The queen of Norway, King Edward's youngest daughter, shoots well and as a child practiced daily at a target. The duchess of Sutherland is a good shot and so is her sister, Lady Angela Forbes, and her half-sister, Lady Warwick.

BARBARIC HAIR STYLES POPULAR.

Some New Hair Dressing Fashions.

Since the huge pompadour rat has gone the way of all freak fads, women wear their hair any old way their fancy dictates, and are in style just so long as they add a lot of unsanitary hair switches in the form of braids and swirls. Each woman chooses her own becoming (?) style, and then emphasizes it until one wonders how the roots of the real hair manage to stay where they belong. Some even confess to wearing $25 switches and a few extra curls besides.

Oriental decorations are in high favor. Strings of semi-precious stones are wound round and round the head, tiara-like arrangements are worn any time of day or evening, bands of ribbon with dangling ends, gold and silver galloon embroidered in barbaric designs and colors, and huge hairpins of intricate device are all worn by faddy women. The prettiest of all—and it can't be denied that many of these oriental fashions in hair ornaments are pretty—is the simple ribbon bandeau.

Occasionally one sees a woman with a beautifully groomed head of hair, softly coiled in a graceful, becoming way, fastened with a few pretty shell hairpins, and absolutely free from false hair, rats and the like. And how welcome a sight it is—and how rare!

Graceefully Draped Turban.

Black silk plush, artistically draped and trimmed on left side, near front, with plaited white chiffon, makes a handsome turban suitable for day or evening wear. Our sketch gives an idea of the smart effect.

To Whiten Kerchiefs

Handkerchiefs which have become discolored through careless washing may be whitened by dissolving some pipeclay in warm water and leaving them to soak in the solution all night. Next day wash and boil the handkerchiefs in the usual manner, and they will be wonderfully improved in appearance.

Do His Cuffs Need a Shave?

Ever notice sometimes a man's cuffs have whiskers? His collar, too? Know what does that? The shirt and collar have been washed with yellow soap, full of rosin and strong caustics, and between them they can eat and rot the finest linen ever made. Try a cake of Easy Task Laundry Soap. It is a friend to fabrics and an enemy to dirt. It doesn't cost a whit more than the bad kinds of soaps, but it pays for itself ten times over in the saving of clothes and trouble and health.

TO CURE MALARIA.

Army Medical Officers in Panama Make War on Mosquito.

Malaria may be stamped out of the Panama canal zone by the American army medical authorities on duty there by the same methods substantially by which yellow fever has been banished from the zone.

The work of abolishing malaria is going ahead steadily, and should it prove successful it will revolutionize the work of digging the canal. That is to say, if the thousands of men engaged in construction of the great waterway were relieved from the ravages of malaria and the effective strength of the force thus increased, the task of completing the canal would be made much simpler and easier.

The effort to cope with malaria consists in the destruction of the mosquito, of the variety known as the anopheles, which carries the malaria germ.

Should the canal zone be freed from the curse of malaria, there is no doubt the sequel would be that efforts would be undertaken seriously in this country to rid some of the malaria-stricken regions of the United States of the disease.

The reports of the Isthmian canal commission show that wonderful success has been achieved on the canal zone in combating yellow fever. Since 1905, yellow fever has been banished from the canal zone. Lately, a single case has appeared there, but thus far there has been no infection from it.

ROSY COLOR

Produced by Postum.

"When a person rises from each meal with a ringing in the ears and a general sense of nervousness, it is a common habit to charge it to a deranged stomach.

"I found it was caused from drinking coffee, which I never suspected for a long time, but found by leaving off coffee that the disagreeable feelings went away.

"I was brought to think of the subject by getting some Postum and this brought me out of trouble.

"It is a most appetizing and invigorating beverage and has been of such great benefit to me that I naturally speak of it from time to time as opportunity offers.

"A lady friend complained to me that she had tried Postum, but it did not taste good. In reply to my question she said she guessed she boiled it about ten minutes. I advised her to follow directions and know that she boiled it fifteen or twenty minutes, and she would have something worth talking about. A short time ago I heard one of her children say that they were drinking Postum now-a-days, so I judge she succeded in making it good, which is by no means a difficult task.

"The son of one of my friends was formerly a pale lad, but since he has been drinking Postum, has a fine color. There is plenty of evidence that Postum actually does 'make red blood,' as the famous trade-mark says."

REAL LIVE WASHINGTON GOSSIP

(BY TAVENNER)

Senator Aldrich's announcement that he will not be a candidate for re-election is being regarded with increasing suspicion here in Washington as a manifest political trick.

It is doubtful if a single one of the genuine progressive republicans really believes that the Rhode Island boss intends to relinquish his control of legislation a moment sooner than he has to. Even a few "regulars" have privately expressed the belief that Aldrich might consent to a re-election, basing this conclusion upon what they characterized as the "enormous pressure" which will no doubt be brought to bear upon Aldrich to cause him to change his mind.

Aldrich does not say anywhere that he will not accept a re-election. He says he will not be a "candidate." It would be no surprise to senators who know Aldrich if the words "I am not a 'candidate' for re-election" should turn out after the fall congressional elections to have been but another of his famous "jokers," with which the Payne-Aldrich tariff law is overloaded.

The corporation interests served by Aldrich can best maintain the excessive tariff rates, which give them monopolies on American markets and make it possible for them to collect enormous profits from consumers, through a republican administration. Therefore it is but natural that Aldrich's primary object at this time is to keep the republicans in power.

What move on Aldrich's part could relieve the republicans of so heavy a responsibility in the approaching congressional elections as the announcement of his retirement? Realizing that his long representation of big business has earned for him the enmity of the American people, and that his name is to be one of the main issues in the fall campaign, it is but giving due credit to Aldrich's resourcefulness to assume that he figured it out he could not serve the special interests better at this time than to announce his retirement, if such announcement would help the republican party over dangerous shoals.

Aldrich is taking no chances in announcing that he will not again be a candidate. He can change his mind easily, or he can have re-election "forced" upon him. Should the next house be democratic, however, Aldrich might not care to come back to the senate, for it would then be obvious that he could put through none of his own peculiar style of legislation.

The ship subsidy bill is beaten so far as this session of congress is concerned. It goes to destruction on the rocks of scandal. The Merchant Marine League, the organization which is backing the bill providing for the annual payment of $5,000,000 of public funds to a few private ship owners, is being exposed before a special investigating committee of congress as being backed by men who would profit directly or indirectly through the passage of the proposed legislation. These men, most of whom are millionaires, have contributed to the funds of the league, and the funds have been used in turn to attack and terrify members of congress opposed to the subsidy grab. Although officers of the league testified contributors to the league treasury were interested in the passage of a ship subsidy bill merelp as American patriots anxious to see the merchant marine built up, a cross examination of the very witnesses who made such assertions brought out the fact that two of the vice-presidents of the league were directors of the steel trust, and that another vice-president was the general manager of a Newport News, Va., shipbuilding company, concerns which might easily profit through the opening of the pork barrel by the passage of a ship subsidy measure.

Brushing Cobwebs off the Schools

The appearance at Harvard University of an eleven-year-old boy, who lectures to members of the faculty on "fourth dimensional bodies," is probably unimportant so far as the young man himself is concerned. The assertion of his father, a professor in the university, that his son's powers are due, not to unusual mental endowment but to the manner of his education, is, however significant. The father has apparently devised for the boy a system of education best fitted to bring out his latent energies. Instinct tells us that he has succeeded too well; but the fact remains that by a carefully-thought-out method this ordinary youngster has been developed into an intellectual giant.

If such extreme development is possible in one boy through individual attention to his mental needs, the question arises as to just how much harm we are working to our own boys and girls when we submit them to the deadly leveling routine of the public schools. By the present system of grade promotions, the deficiency of one child in one subject may retard a whole class-room. The class must be promoted in all subjects or not at all.

Individual method, like that applied to the eleven-year old prodigy, is impossible in a large school; but individual time allowance per child per subject is possible and, for the child's highest development, imperative. The time is here when we should brush the cobwebs off the public schools, abolishing, to begin with, the present archaic system of promotion by grade and substituting the normal one of promotion by subject. This one step will do much to check two great evils in the present schools, "cramming" and "retarding.—Woman's Home Companion.

A BIT OF ADVICE

First—Don't Delay. Second—Don't Experiment

If you suffer from backache; headaches or dizzy spells; if you rest poorly and are languid in the morning; if the kidney secretions are irregular and unnatural in appearance, do not delay. The kidneys are calling for help. Slight symptoms of kidney trouble are but fore-runners of more serious complaints. They should be given attention before it is too late.

Doan's Kidney Pills cure kidney trouble—they are recommended by thousands. Can residents desire more convincing proof than the statement of a citizen of this locality, who says that the cure Doan's Kidney Pills effected years ago has proven permanent?

Philip Oherlin, Route No. 1, Waterloo, Ind., says: "The principal symptom of kidney trouble in my case was a lameness across my back and sides. Whenever caught cold, it settled in my kidneys and made my trouble worse. Finally I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and they completely and permanently cured me. I have previously endorsed this remedy and at this time I am glad to confirm my former statement."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

A WAY TO WOO SLEEP.

Watch a Light Spot on the Wall Till Slumber Comes.

Some months ago a friend informed me that he was a great sufferer from sleeplessness. He had experimented with all manner of remedies—baths, drugs, exercise, dieting—but could find no relief, writes H. Addington Bruce in the Delineator.

"How about the 'spot on the wall' cure?" I asked him.

"I haven't heard of that. What is it?"

"It's very simple," I told him, "yet very efficacious. I presume that some light from the street lamp or the moon usually gets into your bedroom? Well, where it strikes the wall you will be pretty sure to find spots that seem to stand out vividly from the dark background. Select one of these patches of brightness, one preferably not much larger than a silver dollar. Settle down comfortably in such a way that it will be within easy range of your vision without straining to see it. Then gaze at it steadily.

"Do not, however, try to stare it out of countenance, so to speak. Instead, let the muscles of your eyes relax until the spot appears to have a confused outline. At the same time, if possible, think of nothing but the one idea—'I am going to sleep!'

"Before long your eyes will begin to feel tired, and they will gradually close. Open them and once more gaze at the spot on the wall. Again they will close. Again open them. Presently you will find it impossible to open them, and the next instant you will be asleep."

Recently I again met him and found him full of enthusiasm.

"That was a splendid scheme," said he. "I sleep like a top nowadays—am asleep almost as soon as I touch the bed."

HE GUESSED RIGHT.

Now See if You Can Tell Which Fair One He Selected.

A certain Turk, according to the story, was once married to a veiled lady in white in the presence of the sultan. As soon as the ceremony was concluded the bride mysteriously disappeared.

The groom was led into an adjoining room, where stood twelve ladies all dressed in white, but without veils. "Choose from the twelve," exclaimed the sovereign, "her that is your bride." As the man had never seen her face the command bewildered him.

"If you make a mistake," added his majesty, "your life shall pay the forfeit."

The poor man walked up and down the row of beauties, but saw nothing whatever to aid his choice.

"You have only a minute left!" yelled the sultan in anger. "Choose at once!"

Ten of the ladies, the man noticed, gave him nothing else than a stony stare. One of the remaining two frowned, the other smiled. "The frowning one," he thought, "is my bride, for she expresses her displeasure and impatience at my ignorance. "No," he said to himself; "it must be the smiling one, for she desires to invite me to her."

After debating the subject in his mind until his time was up he boldly made a selection from the two. He was successful. He had regained his bride. Which was she—the one who frowned or the one who smiled?

Taste and Smell.

Physiologists have long known that many sensations ordinarily ascribed to taste are in reality due to smell, but this fact has been made clearer than before by the investigations of German savants. Air enters the olfactory chamber, where the nerves connected with the sense of smell are centered, both through the nostrils and through an inlet leading from the mouth. In consequence a breath of perfumed air manifests its odor not only when it is breathed in, but when it is breathed out. For this reason we are sometimes deceived as to the source of the pleasure we derive from things taken into the mouth, the agreeableness of the impression being due, in some cases, rather to smell than to taste.—New York Herald.

Pre-Columbian Voyages.

Concerning the subject of the discovery of America John Fiske says: "Nothing can be clearer from a survey of the whole subject than that these pre-Columbian voyages were quite barren of results of historic importance. In point of colonization they produced the two ill fated settlements on the Greenland coast and nothing more; otherwise they made no real addition to the stock of geographical knowledge. They wrought no effect whatever upon the European mind. In no sense was any real contact established between the eastern and western halves of our planet until the great voyage of Columbus in 1492."

Nature's Work.

There is not a moment of any day of our lives when nature is not producing scene after scene, picture after picture, glory after glory, and working still upon such exquisite and constant principles of the most perfect beauty that it is quite certain that it is all done for us and intended for our perpetual pleasure.—Ruskin.

Considerate.

"Young man, I'm sure I heard you kiss my daughter."

"Did you, sir? Next time I'll tip over a chair or shuffle my feet."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Man's Life is full of trouble and temptation, pleasure and anticipation, success and disappointment. He comes into this world without his consent. He goes through life without getting what he wants and leaves without being asked if he is ready. His journey through life is beset with strange and contradictory experiences. In infancy he is an angel and the big girls kiss him. In boyhood he is a devil. In manhood he is all sorts of things and the little girls kiss him. When he is a boy he wishes he was a man and when he is a man he wishes he was a boy again. His father has control of him until he is twenty-one, then his wife takes charge, he is never free. In his duties he is a fool. If he has a large family he is a chump, if he has no family at all he is committing race suicide. If he raises a check he is a thief and they raise cane with him. If he is poor he is a poor manager and hasn't any sense. (Oh my, isn't it awfull.) If he is rich he is dishonest but considered smart. If he is in politics he is in it for graft, if he is not in politics he is an undesirable citizen. If he gives to charity de does it for show, if he don't give he it a "stingy cuss." If he ipends his money he is profligate and if he does not he is a tight wad. If he is friendly and pleasant he is a hot-air artist. If he is not friendly and pleasant he is an old grouch. If he belongs to church and attends he is a hypocrite, if he does not he is a hardened sinner. If he dies young he had a bright future before him. If he lives to be old, he is too contrary to die and lives to save funeral expenses. Now, what the thunder is the use of a man trying to please anybody. Just kwitcherkicken and say nothing about anybody and and try to please yourself all the time.

Salesmanship.

A salesman in a furnishing store displayed to a friendly customer a gentleman's plain linen handkerchief at $5. The man had always thought he was doing well to pay 50 cents and questioned the salesman about it.

"How can a man figure it that he gets his money's worth when he pays $5 for a handkerchief? It doesn't serve the purpose any better, and he couldn't afford to tell any one that he was big enough fool to pay that price."

"He gets his money's worth," said the salesman, "from the added force of self respect that comes with his own personal assurance that he has the best that can be produced. That conviction helps him in urging his point and in swinging the big deal his way, and the $5 is a mere item of incidental expense."

Ever afterward that customer gladly paid more not only for handkerchiefs, but for every item of his wardrobe.

Corfu's Queer Laws.

Corfu can boast of the most peculiar land laws in the world. The landlords are nearly all absentees, and their tenants hold the land on a perpetual lease in return for a rent payable in kind and fixed at a certain proportion of the produce. Such a tenant is considered a co-owner of the soil, and he cannot be expelled but for nonpayment of rent, bad culture or the transfer of his lease without the landlord's consent. Neither can his rent be raised without his permission. Attempts have been made to alter the law, but both landlords and tenants are apparently satisfied with a system that dates back to the time of Homer.

Absolute Equality.

The ears were on the neck. In color it was black but in place of wool its skin was covered with hair. The deformed lamb was about two feet in length.—Edgerton Earth.

We are advised the brokerage firm of F. A. Larkin & Co., Evansville, Ind, have purchased the sewer improvement bonds issued by this city, and for the purpose of having as many of these bonds paid June 1, as is possible they have agreed to rebate the interest matured amounting to three per cent, provided a sufficient number avail themselves of the offer to warrant the expense. While this is a particularly large discount for a six per cent bond, it is not all that those effected save, as these are ten year bonds, and those whose property is encumbered with these bonds will necessarily have to pay interest for the entire time, which if allowed to run will amount to more than thirty per cent of the amount of the assessment. It is understood a considerable number will avail themselves of this saving.

IN BUTLER CHURCHES

Church Reception

The members of the Christian church gave a reception for their pastor, Rev Konkle and family on last Monday evening.

After an entertaining program of music and recitations Mr. Shaw in behalf of the church extended greetings. Rev. Albertson also gave a fine talk and tried to impress on the people that while they were asking each other "How do you like the new pastor," he perhaps was wondering "How do I like my people."

Miss Muriel Baker most ably extended a welcome from the C. E. Mrs. Cora Bowman spoke in behalf of the Ladies' Aid, after which their treasurer read a report of over $300 raised in the past year.

Rev. Konkle and wife both gave most pleasing responses to these hearty greetings, and after a most informal and pleasant social evening the company repaired to the basement where a fine luncheon was served, with coffee piping hot, which every one thoroughly enjoyed.

The company departed for home highly pleased with their new pastor and family who have already received several new members into the church. The members are confident of a banner year for "Christ and the church."

Church of Christ Items

Great interest is being manifested in the revival conducted at the Church of Christ by Evangeltsts Hamilton and Haley. Last Lord's day the invitation to accept of Christ was given for the first time and eleven persons responded. Evangelist Hamilton is preaching the gospel with power and Song Evangelist Haley is at his best. On Tuesday evening a manly young man came forward to confess his faith in Jesus Christ.

On Saturday evening of this week the evangelist will give his illustrated lecture on, "His trip around the world" Admission: A free will silver offering.

Lord's day May 1st the evangelist will preach at both the morning and evening services.

At 3 p. m. Sunday there will be a mass meeting for men only. Every man in the city and boys over 12 years of age are invited to this service.

Butler needs these meetings, you my brother man need these meetings, so come with a prayer in your hearts and a song upon your lips that Butler may be wonderfully blessed in these meetings.

Methodist Church Notes

Sunday school at 9:30, L. C. Buehrer superintendent. At 10:30, the minister will preach. Text, II Cor. 3:18, "But we all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory unto glory as by the spirit of the Lord."

The gospel of Christ treats of the most common and practical interests. The more we know about it, the more we practice it, the more complete and contented will our lives be. Those who do not honor Christ by obeying Him are sustaining a tragic loss. All His commandments are made for our own profit, for our instruction. Make religion the chief concern of your life. Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness. In all this be even mindful of the fact that our heavenly Father loves you and seeks to help you. Base your conduct upon this and you will heed His words.

The evening service will be a union meeting at the Lutheran church. The baccalaureate sermon will be delivered by the pastor of the Methodist church.

The Aid Society will be entertained at the home of Mrs. Dunten on Friday. The monthly "coffee" will be served. All are cordially invited.

E. F. ALBERTSON, Minister.

Church of God Notes

There will be Sunday school and preaching at the Church of God Sunday morning at the usual time. No service in the evening, as the church will join in the union service at the Lutheran church.

H. G. HERRENDEEN, Pastor.

U. B. Announcements

Sunday school next Sunday at 9:30 followed by preaching at 10:30. Junior endeavor at 2:30, Y. P. S. C. E. at 6 o'clock. No services in the evening on account of the baccalaureate services.

The general church extension in connection with home mission board meets at Lafayette May 1, 2 and 3. On account of the repairing and improving of the church here the pastor will not be able to attend.

EDITOR HERALD:

Having read the plans and specifications for the proposed court house, two questions have arisen in my mind, and these questions I should like to have answered through your paper either by the county commissioners or the architects. First—Where is foundation for sub-basement? Second—Does the proposed cost include payment for the furniture? These are fair questions that the taxpayers ought to know.

Geo. W. Geddes sells and recommends Campbell's Varnish Stain for staining and varnishing all kinds of Interior Woodwork, Furniture, etc. A 25c can will do three chairs. A 75c can will cover an average floor. Dries hard, very durable. Why not try it?

THE KNISELY DRY GOODS CO.

For Your Sake

as well as ours, we ask you to keep posted on the offerings of this store. The Dress Goods, Silks, Staple Dry Goods, Hosiery, Underwear, Waists, Skirts, Suits, Coats, Men's Clothing, Hats, Shoes, Men's Furnishings, Carpets, Rugs, Curtains, etc., and all other departments are very inviting in their display of all that is new and stylish in merchandise for spring and summer—qualities that are right, styles that are the latest, prices that will please.

Hoeiery and Underwear Dept.

It has always been our aim to have this department a trade winner. We have seen lots of lines and have selected the best from the lot, and have no hesitancy in saying that what we have selected will give entire satisfaction. The line comprises all the new shades and colorings as well as a full line of blacks. Underwear of all kinds for men, women and children. We have anything you want and will be glad to show you.

MUSLIN UNDERWEAR

Every woman takes great delight in dainty lingerie. The demand for the ready-to-wear in Gowns, Skirts, Corset Covers, Combination Suits, Princess Slips, etc., has grown considerably in the past few years, and we have for this season a variety comensurate with this increased demand. You will find here all the staple numbers made to retail from 25c up, but you will also see the daintiest of creations in both single piece and match sets.

Men's Furnishing Goods

Men of class and men of fashion like to be distinctively dressed to-day just as much so as the women of our country. There is just as much style to a man in his shirt, tie, hosiery, underwear, etc., as there is in his outer garments. It's these little things which round off the finishing touch of the costume proper.

You will find here all the new ideas in this class of merchandise.

Ties of the latest weaves and colors. Shirts made in the very latest mode. Hosiery of distinctive types, yet serviceable.

In lines especially designed for the working man, you will find brands that are a guarantee of fit, comfort and the best of service.

EVERY SALE we make is intended to win APPRECIATION and instill CONFIDENCE

How many men stay in the same business for fifty years as has Edward May, the tailor, on North Broadway. He informs the writer that this is his record, the first day of May being the fiftieth anniversary of his business venture in the tailoring business. Of this time twenty-eight years has been spent in Butler. How long he will continue in business is of course not known, but the HERALD wishes him many years of health and prosperity. He is still in good health and does his work like a young man, and is ably assisted by his good wife, who has also worked at the tailoring business with her husband for thirty-nine years.

How Uncle Sam Makes Weather

FEW persons realize what a great and useful service the Weather bureau of the United States government is performing for the general public, writes Horace Fredericks in that excellent family paper, the Williamsport (Pa.) Grit. No one doubts that a knowledge of the coming weather is of inestimable value to a great majority of the people both on business and pleasurable pursuits. That the Weather bureau is furnishing this useful knowledge, that it is constantly striving to improve the service, is, perhaps, not so well known or appreciated. Like several other useful governmental departments, the Weather bureau has not been sized up at its real value. It seems to be a trait of human nature to regard with contempt or indifference anything or any service offered gratis. The public has joked at the bureau's mistakes; and scorned its accomplishments.

But if the service of the Weather bureau were to be discontinued the unappreciative public would doubtless be brought to a realization of its real value. The great commercial and agricultural interests of the country have been kept fully advised of coming adverse weather conditions, and even those who have professed to have little faith in the bureau's ability to accurately forecast the weather have been wise enough to keep on the safe side and made preparations for the worst. The service has been of special value in giving warning of dangerous gales along the sea coasts and the Great Lakes. A storm which is observed to be heading toward the lakes is preceded many hours by the bureau's telegrams, which give warning of its severity, and the parts of the country it is likely to visit. By the time the storm has reached the lakes the sailors are ready for it, and have not been caught asleep. With wireless telegraphic service in operation these storm warnings are now communicated to vessels far out on the sea, and by the same means of communication the vessels at sea send warnings of storms which are headed toward the coasts.

The bureau has 200 stations, scattered throughout the country, and at each station daily observations are taken. The bureau also owns and occupies 41 buildings used exclusively in its study of the science of the weather, and altogether the bureau is maintained at an expense of $1,500,000 annually. There are over half a million subscribers who receive daily forecasts from the bureau by means of the telephone. The forecasts also find their way to the general public through the columns of the newspapers. Outside of Washington there are 105 of the stations which issue an aggregate of 25,000 weather maps or bulletins each day.

As much as the bureau has already accomplished it realizes its weakness and comparative inefficiency. It realizes that if the forecasts are to be of any great value to the public it must be enabled to make them for a longer period in advance. With the knowledge of the atmosphere heretofore on hand this has been impossible. Now the bureau has undertaken to vastly improve the service by a more thorough study of the pure science of the problem. It can do this only through experiment, study and research, and there is at least promise that in the near future the Weather bureau service will be vastly improved.

Other leading countries are endeavoring to obtain a better understanding of the causes of the weather, and a commendable feature is the apparent willingness of all these nations to work in unison, and to exchange with each other the discoveries they have made. The Weather bureau in this country has established an observatory in Virginia, known as the Mount Weather Research Observatory. A thorough study of the upper atmospheric conditions will be made. Heretofore knowledge of the temperature, pressure, humidity and wind pressure, velocity and direction has been wholly based upon observations made at or near the surface of the earth or upon mountain peaks. The bureau realizes that its forecasts in the past, based on such observations, were often inaccurate, and that if a knowledge of conditions in the upper atmosphere were obtainable much more useful and accurate forecasts could be made. And to make such observations and study them is the work outlined at Mount Weather. Recently ingenious forms of kites and specially designed forms of balloons for lifting self-recording instruments high into the air have been invented, and these are all being experimented with at the Virginia observatory. The kite enables the scientists at the observatory to bring down observations from a height of from two to three miles, and in some instances records have been made by means of the kite at a height of four miles. The balloons, however, have proved of much greater value. They are small and made of rubber, but they have been known to carry the marvelously light recording instruments to a height of from 11 to 15 miles. These instruments brought back records of low temperatures, and high wind velocities which astounded the meteorologists.

The balloons are from two or three cubic yards in capacity and are filled with hydrogen gas in order that they may have a strong and sure lifting power. The instruments they lift weigh from one to four pounds. These balloons have also been sent up from various stations o fthe Weather bureau at one and the same time with the object, of course, of endeavoring to learn of the relations of the upper atmosphere at widely separated points. For instance, on a certain day last fall, 30 balloons, each carrying a recording instrument, were released from stations scattered all over the country, at exactly the same moment. Much valuable information was obtained from a study of the records thus obtained. It was discovered that storms, cold waves, etc., work out like an intricate piece of mechanism, and that an understanding of this mechanism will enable the forecasters to tell days ahead the coming weather conditions. To discover all possible concerning the workings of the weather at high elevations is now the object of the earnest investigators at Mount Weather Observatory.

Some of the instruments sent ballooning for observations have recorded a temperature of 100 degrees below zero. Of course this record was obtained at a height of many miles. In order that an accurate registry be made by the instruments when far up into space the thermographs are first tested with liquid air to ascertain if they will actually record extreme degrees of low temperature. The observatory has a splendid plant for the manufacture of liquid air for the purpose.

To the scientifically inclined, or for that matter any one interested in a really fascinating study, the Mount Weather observatory is a most attractive point. At Mount Weather there is a power house and balloon shed; revolving kite shed; administration building and magnetic observatory building. Among the appliances in use is the specially constructed Siegsfeld kite balloon, and the Hergesell meteorograph with its protecting basket; Marvin kite meteorograph with anemomoter; Marvin meteorograph with record; Hargrave-Martin box kites; the magnetometer and the declinometer and theodolite. These instruments are in almost constant use, and a visitor to any one of the bureau's buildings at Mount Weather would regard it as an exceedingly busy spot.

FASHION HINTS

A jaunty tie is drawn through the slash in the blouse front, giving just the required dash to the whole.

The Wag and the Wagger.

"Fountain pens," snapped the wife whose tongue had found out the secret of perpetual motion, "remind me, Horace, of some husbands!"

"Why?" responded the meek little man.

"Expensive, can't be depended on, won't work, and half the time they're broken!" she snorted.

"That's pretty rough, Maria!" bleated Horace. "I call it most unkind, in fact. Really! But you couldn't compare a fountain pen with some women."

"Of course not!"

"No, Maria. You see, a fountain pen will dry up, and some wives won't."

And then he made a bee line for the Underground.—Life.

Don't Spank Your Children.

A little boy on a side street in Fort Wayne says he always counts on getting a spanking every Monday, because his mamma does the washing and is so tired and cross she won't overlook his pranks. No wonder she is tired and cross, but it is hard on the boy. If his mother would use Easy Task soap she would have her washing on the line before 9 o'clock, because Easy Task Soap does half the work for her.

Community of Interest.

Profiting by the mistakes of others the two explorers, each of whom had found the south pole unknown to the other, held a conference.

"What is the use," they said, "of wrangling over it? We will write our book jointly, and will travel and lecture together. One of us will do the oratorical stunt and the other will throw the pictures on the screen."

So they divided the spoils, which turned out to be quite satisfactory.

Pleasant Conversations.

The barber was a trifle more talkative than usual, and the customer, having come directly from the dentist's chair, was perhaps hardly in an affable mood. The knight of the razor opened fire in blissful ignorance of this, however, passing glibly from the weather to foreign politics, the rival barber opposite, the practical value of religion, and was just beginning to explain in detail his views on current educational topics, when the customer suddenly growled, "Look here, where's that assistant of yours—the boy with the red hair?"

"Why, he's left me, sir. We parted Saturday night—on friendly terms and all that, you know, sir—but—"

"Umph!" groaned the other. "I liked that fellow. He was one of the most sensible talkers I ever met. I was going to ask to have him shave me always. We've had so many pleasant conversations—"

"Excuse me, sir," interrupted the barber, in amazement, "but—you mistake, sir, surely! If you'll remember, sir, poor Jim was deaf an' dumb—"

"Umph! He was, was he? Well, perhaps that explains it."

Stops Lameness

Much of the chronic lameness in horses is due to neglect.

See that your horse is not allowed to go lame. Keep Sloan's Liniment on hand and apply at the first sign of stiffness. It's wonderfully penetrating — goes right to the spot — relieves the soreness — limbers up the joints and makes the muscles elastic and pliant.

Here's the Proof.

Mr. G. T. Roberts of Resaca, Ga., R.F.D. No. 1, Box 43, writes: — "I have used your Liniment on a horse for sweeney and effected a thorough cure. I also removed a spavin on a mule. This spavin was as large as a guinea egg. In my estimation the best remedy for lameness and soreness is

Sloan's Liniment

Mr. H. M. Gibbs, of Lawrence, Kans., R.F.D. No. 3, writes: — "Your Liniment is the best that I have ever used. I had a mare with an abscess on her neck and one 50c. bottle of Sloan's Liniment entirely cured her. I keep it around all the time for galls and small swellings and for everything about the stock."

Sloan's Liniment will kill a spavin, curb or splint, reduce wind puffs and swollen joints, and is a sure and speedy remedy for fistula, sweeney, founder and thrush.

Missing Ships.

Men go down to the sea under billowing canvas in fewer and fewer numbers, the "tin kettle" tramp now doing the old clipper's work, but Neptune still exacts his toll from the square-rigged ships that are fated to float out upon the oceans, bound 10,000 miles or more, and never again be heard of. Ten big sailers thus vanished in 1908. Last year eight wind-jammers of large burden were recorded on the world's log of missing ships. One was an American, the four-masted Fort George of 1,770 net tons, and there are few enough of ours left. Most of them are swallowed on Cape Horn voyages.—New York Press.

The Romance of the Wires

"George, if I haven't done anything else in my life, I've succeeded in making the Western Union be decent."

That was the characteristic utterance of the late John W. Mackay, whose backing made possible the success of what is now the Postal Telegraph Cable Company, many years ago to George J. Gould, who succeeded Jay Gould as the dominant power in the Western Union.

Mr. Gould laughed at the remark, as did Mr. Mackay himself. Then both men told of the episode and it was flashed over the country by the wires of the rival companies commanded by the two captains of industry.

The story of why it is that we have in this country two great competing telegraph companies is the story which lies back of the Mackay utterance. It is the story of a determined, successful man of action who had already made millions in mining and turned to the telegraphic field as a personal issue between himself and the one dominant force in the field at that time. It is also the story of perhaps the only successful business enterprise on record which was founded on motives of revenge.

Mr. Mackay as a banker had much telegraphing to do. The only way to do it was over the lines of the Western Union. This company, enjoying a monopoly, gave to its patrons in those days a service which stood at the other pole of efficiency from the excellent Western Union service to-day.

"The Western Union service is so slow and rotten," said Mr. Mackay once in his banking days, "that I can beat it by letter. Besides that, they're so discourteous and insolent that it makes me mad every time I have anything to do by telegraph."

He saw several smaller and weaker companies attempting to do battle with the Western Union giant. None of them were making any very important headway. A number of smaller companies had already been absorbed by the Western Union, which had been doing business under that name since 1856, and since 1851 under the name of the New York & Mississippi Valley Printing Telegraph Company.

The Western Union had hungry eyes set on those companies which it had not yet gobbled. One of these was the Postal Telegraph Company, as it was then called, a corporation formed under the laws of New York, June 21, 1881. Mr. Mackay decided that this company was the one which stood the best chance of successfully "bucking" the Western Union, and he bought a large block of its stock. The company was capitalized at $21,000,000.

A two-line wire was very thoroughly constructed between New York and Chicago and thence to St. Louis. A two-line wire was also built to Washington and other big centers. This construction cost over $3,000,000, but Mr. Mackay never faltered.

By this time the Western Union officials realized that they were facing their first really serious competitor. They knew of the Mackay anger against the company; they knew of the Mackay business acumen; they knew of the Mackay millions. And with this realization of what they were "up against" came a betterment of the Western Union service.

One by one the Western Union kept swallowing the small competitive companies, and by 1884 the Postal found itself and the Baltimore & Ohio to be the only Western Union opponents on the telegraph map of the United States. By 1887 the Baltimore & Ohio had been absorbed, as the result of financial troubles experienced by the railroad of the same name, which had backed it, and then the Postal found itself alone to fight its competitor. That fight has gone on in lively style during all the intervening years to the present.

The number of miles of wires and the number of messages sent annually by the two big telegraph systems may be an eyeopener to some laymen as to the extent of these systems. The following are the figures:

	Miles of wire.	Messages sent annually.	Offices.
Western Union	1,382,000	68,000,000	24,760
Postal	370,000	25,000,000	25,507

While the elder Mackay and the elder Gould were building up the two telegraph companies which in late years have been under the general direction of their sons, Clarence H. Mackay and George J. Gould, they were being aided by two men who now hold posts of much prominence in the telegraphic world and who started their careers together.

Mr. Mackay did something more than found one of the great American fortunes. He took a leading part in the making of the Pacific Coast States, and the name of Mackay will always shine out on the scroll of early coast history as one of the pioneer fathers of that splendid expanse of territory. First he had a large share in the founding of Nevada as an orderly community, and then he had an important influence in the welding of California into a great State. At the time of the Civil War he did much to preserve the Pacific Coast States to the Union.

First he went to California. He tried placer mining at Alleghany. But it was not in California that he was to find his initial wealth. He was soon swept into the tide of prospectors and adventurers which set toward Nevada. With the small amount of money he had made at Alleghany he began development of a prospect north of the Ophir at Virginia City. He failed to strike pay rock, however, before his money ran out, and then he again found himself penniless.

A little thing like that did not discourage a man of Mackay's resolution. He had gone west to make a fortune, and a fortune he proposed to make.

Not being able to do anything in mining for the moment, he took employment as a timber man at $4 a day. By the hardest kind of a fight he finally succeeded in getting together enough money to start mining on his own account again.

Years passed. He made some considerable sums of money; then "played back" the money into the ground. Finally, in 1863, the turning point came, when he formed a partnership with J. M. Walker, brother of a former Governor Walker of Virginia. Mackay had, a short time before, made a "clean-up" from his Kentucky mine in Gold Hill, and this money he put into the partnership. In 1864 the firm was enlarged by the taking in of Flood and O'Brien. Four years later Mr. Fair took Walker's place in the firm, which later became known all over America as the famous "Bonanza firm."

The first strike of the original partnership of Mackay, Walker, Flood & O'Brien was made in 1865, when several hundreds of thousands of dollars were taken out of the Hale and Norcross mine.

In 1872 the Mackay judgment and the Mackay "hunch" made good. In that year the whole world was startled by the news of the discovery of the Comstock lode, one of the marvels of mining history. The ore was of high grade—that is, it carried large values in mineral to a ton of ore—and was in gold and silver.

Of the interests of the Bonanza firm Mr. Mackay owned two-fifths. Thus the value of his personal share of the Comstock lode must have been in the neighborhood of $60,000,000.

In the early years of Mrs. Mackay's appearance in Europe there was a great deal of ill-natured gossip as to who she was and where she had come from, with stories of her early years, which were calculated to do her harm in her social campaigns.

"Mrs. Mackay used to be a laundress, a keeper of a boarding house for miners, and she is the daughter of a journeyman barber."

The facts appear to be that Mrs. Mackay in the early years of her marriage to her first husband, Dr. W. C. Bryant, was obliged to do her own housework and do the family washing, as many another woman who has pioneered in the mining country had to do. Her father was Colonel Hungerford, of a good California family, who fought in the Civil War.

NEW YORK WOMEN BURNED $500,000 IN CIGARETTES LAST YEAR.

Do women smoke? Listen! A notable example of a combination smoking stand and humidor recently sold by a New York City jeweler to one of his Fifth avenue women customers is made of rosewood, inlaid with gold. Far handsomer was a table or cabinet in hammered silver, encrusted with jade and delicately tinted crystals, in cloudy pinks, grays, blues and violets. These little cabinets with their fittings cost from $200 up, and a real cigarette faddist has one table upholstered in chintz or brocade for her boudoir, and another of sterner stuff like mahogany, rosewood or silver, for her drawing room.

Do women smoke? Just imagine yourself in one of the "smartest" New York drawing rooms. Here a charming young matron is giving a luncheon in honor of a woman decorator just back from Paris. Here is the very latest in luncheon effects. Pink roses amid ruchings of pink ribbon in the center, pink roses in frozen cream for the dessert, and absurd little log cabins built from slim sticks of pink candy. But the sweets are neglected. The candy log cabins stand untouched, and the guests trail off to the drawing room, where a fascinating scene is unfolded before their delighted eyes.

The afternoon is closing in darkly, but the electricity has not yet been turned on, and at the side of each easy chair there is a tabourette, on which stands an ash tray and a small candlestick of heavily chased silver, in which burns a slender pink candle. These strange little spots of light throw the rest of the drawing room into deep shadow and, presently from the shadows emerges a black-gowned maid, carrying a candle-lighted tray with coffee and cigarettes in two lengths.

The guests include several single girls, a couple of young matrons and several who have reached the age of white hair and mauve gowns. But no one declines cigarettes. The maid slips in and out with cigarettes and almost one might close her eyes and see the figures in semi-tailored frocks melting into the swathed and veiled forms of the Oriental harem. Do women smoke? They do—lots of them. Yes, Women smoke.—Utica Globe.

Kansas Takes 1,000 Overland Cars

Our agents in Kansas have ordered for this season 1,000 Overland automobiles.

Nebraska takes 750—Iowa 1,000—Texas 1,500. Thus has the Overland—after one year's experience—captured the farming states.

It has captured the cities, too. New York City takes 1,000 Overlands this year. Boston takes 500—San Francisco 500—Washington 500—Philadelphia 460.

Our agents have contracted for 20,000 Overlands—for $24,000,000 worth of Overlands—to supply the demand for this year. That's a larger sale than any other car commands.

Yet, two years ago few had ever heard of an Overland. This sensational success is due to the creation of a remarkable car.

The Simple Car

The success of the Overland is mainly due to its amazing simplicity. A 16-year-old child can master the car in five minutes. Push a pedal forward to go ahead, and backward to reverse. Push another pedal for high speed. There is nothing else to do but steer.

Any man with the simplest instructions, can run an Overland a thousand miles and back.

There was never a car so easy to care for—so easy to keep in order.

20 Per Cent Reduction

The Overland's success is also due to its price. No other maker ever gave nearly so much for the money.

Yet we have cut our costs this year about 20 per cent through enormous increase in production.

The Overland we sell for $1,000 this year is better than the $1,250 Overland last year. It is a 25 H. P. car with a speed of 50 miles an hour.

So with the $1,250, $1,400 and $1,500 Overlands. Each offers a fifth more than ever before for the money.

All prices include Magneto and full lamp equipment.

Ask for the Story

The Overland story is one of the greatest business stories ever told. It tells how this car—the creation of a mechanical genius—has in two years reached the topmost place in this field. And it tells all about the car. Send us this coupon today for this book.

ERRORS OF HISTORY.

Coriolanus never allowed his mother to intercede for Rome.

Nero did not kill his mother or fiddle over burning Rome.

Wellington, at Waterloo, never cried, "Up, guards, and at them."

Curious Remedies.

In some parts of England one of the best cures for a swollen neck is to draw a snake nine times across the throat of the suffering one, after which the snake is killed and its skin sewed in a silken bag and tightly sewed around the neck. Another way, almost as good, is to put the live snake in a bottle, which is tightly corked and buried near the roots of a rosebush, and as the helpless snake decays the swelling in the neck of the patient will disappear.

AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her

Knoxville, Iowa. — "I suffered with pains low down in my right side for a year or more and was so weak and nervous that I could not do my work. I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, and am glad to say that your medicines and kind letters of directions have done more for me than anything else and I had the best physicians here. I can do my work and rest well at night. I believe there is nothing like the Pinkham remedies." — MRS. CLARA FRANKS, R. F. D., No. 3, Knoxville, Iowa.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills, and suffering women owe it to themselves to at least give this medicine a trial. Proof is abundant that it has cured thousands of others, and why should it not cure you?

If you want special advice write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. It is free and always helpful.

WESTERN CANADA

What Governor Deneen, of Illinois, Says About It:

Governor Deneen, of Illinois, owns a section of land in Saskatchewan, Canada. He has said in an interview:

"As an American I am delighted to see the remarkable progress of Western Canada. Our prosperous farmers flocking across the boundary in thousands, and I have not yet met one who admitted he had made a mistake. They are all doing well. There is scarcely a community in the Middle or Western States that has not a representative in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta."

125 Million Bushels of Wheat in 1909

Western Canada field crops for 1910 will easily yield to the farmer $170,000,000.00 in cash. Free homesteads of 160 acres, and pre-emptions of 160 acres at $3.00 an acre. Railway and Land Companies have land for sale at reasonable prices. Many farmers have paid for their land out of the proceeds of one crop. EXCELLENT TRADE IN WESTERN CANADA.

Splendid Crops, Big Prices, and Prosperous Outlook for the Future.

Throughout all of Canada, and especially in the western provinces of Canada, there is a buoyancy in every line of business that is fully warranted by every condition. The crops of the past year were what was expected, and the prices for grain of all kinds put the farmers in a class by themselves. Many of them are independent, and many others have got well started on the road. The latest reports are that seeding is well under way in almost every district, and the prospects are that a vastly larger area than that under crop last year will be seeded early this spring. In the Lethbridge district, in Southern Alberta, steam and gasoline outfits, hundreds of them, are breaking up the prairie at a tremendous pace, but they work night and day. As soon as it becomes dark gangs are changed, a head light attached, and on, on through the night until the first streak of dawn, these giant monsters with their seven or eight gangs of breaking plows, keep up the work. Then the more modest farmer is putting in the longest hours possible with his teams of horses or oxen. And what will the country be like in August, when these fields have become yellowed with the literally golden grain. There will be one vast expanse of wheat field. And there will be a market for it, because it is the best grain grown, and the demand will be everywhere. As previously intimated, business throughout Western Canada is sound and good. The grain production of 1909 has been the great factor in establishing the reputation of Western Canada, and it is worth talking about. It surpassed all previous records, both in regard to quality and quantity, and such an achievement was by no means easy. The limit has not been reached, and a large average increase may be expected during the next ten years. There will be odd seasons when a falling off will occur, and it is the falling off that causes alarms and panics in the commercial world. The plains have done their duty so far in the output of grain and it would be reasonable to make occasional allowances for slowing up. The faster the rate of increase is now, the sharper will be the check when the production diminishes. But there are some unreasonable people who wonder why the growth of one year is not continued during the next, and at an even faster rate. These same unreasonable people are the ones who see flaws in the situation as soon as an indication is given that the startling advances have not been maintained.

Afraid of Ghosts

Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper. It is not a secret nostrum but a medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION and with a record of 40 years of cures. Accept no substitute—there is nothing "just as good." Ask your neighbors.

FARM NOTES

Spraying for Apples.

Experiments at Tragg Orchard, located at Rockford, Ia., have proven that it pays to spray. In an orchard of 2,900 trees two small plots were sprayed. The average yield for the orchard was less than one-fifth bushel per tree, while in one of the plots under experiment the yield averaged two bushels per tree. This is proof conclusive that if the whole orchard had been sprayed, and it could have been done at but little more expense, the result would have been 5,000 bushels instead of 500, or even less.

The benefits of the treatment were not confined to increasing the yield. Not only was there more fruit and finer fruit where the trees were sprayed, but the fruit hung to the trees better. The great superiority of the sprayed fruit over corresponding grades of unsprayed fruits was apparent to every one who examined the crop. The treatments may be given in this order: When the leaf buds are opening, just before the blooming, just after blooming, about two weeks after the third treatment, the last of July or first of August. In all this work it is best to use liquid Bordeaux mixed with paris green or some other effective poison.—S. A. Beach in Agricultural Epitomist.

Box for Sitting Hens.

I have often been troubled by having hens fighting over their eggs. The hen that wishes to lay always prefers to get on the same nest with the hen that is sitting, and the result is several broken eggs. I have fooled them by making a box like the one shown in the cut. Each door opens into the nest where the hen is sitting, and from this nest there is a little covered runway in which the hen can exercise.

The nests are made 14x16 inches and the affair will accommodate six hens. When a hen wishes to sit I put her in one of the nests and give her three or four china eggs until she has demonstrated that she is willing to incubate in this new place.—Mrs. M. K. Anderson, in Farm and Home.

KEEPS HENS FROM FIGHTING.

Hog Makes Meat Quickly.

No animal on the farm is better adapted to turning good feed quickly into marketable meat than the hog, and none can better repay, from a market standpoint, a discriminating system of feeding. This is particularly true as to first costs, for the hog is by nature planned to utilize the least expensive feeds and will manufacture into toothsome pork much that might otherwise be reckoned of little value, if not waste. In any phase of farm economy the hog is a feature, and his proper feeding has in innumerable instances been the factor that kept a farm's profits on the right side of the ledger.—From Coburn's "Swine in America."

Alfalfa for Cows.

Where there is an abundant supply of alfalfa, do not feed the dairy cows any timothy hay, but let them have all the alfalfa they can consume without waste. A mixture consisting of 400 pounds of ground corn, 300 pounds of bran or oats supplements the alfalfa very well. Seven or eight pounds of this combination is sufficient to produce one pound of fat when fed with all the good alfalfa hay an animal will consume. If the droppings of the animal seem somewhat dry, do not hesitate to recommend the use of one pound of oil meal per day.—Farmers and Drovers' Journal.

Roup and Cholera.

Of the two diseases, says a poultryman, we fear roup more than we do cholera. The best remedy for a bird in the advanced stages of roup is the hatchet. Upon the first appearance of any disease, the ailing birds should be isolated and the poultry house thoroughly renovated and disinfected. It is always well to have some good roup remedy at hand, as the time lost in sending for a remedy after the fowls become affected only gives the disease a chance to get firmly established.

Selling Eggs.

A real "poultryman" in the East sells his eggs in a sealed package, on the outside of which is printed the following: "If the seal of this package is unbroken, I guarantee the eggs contained therein to have been laid on the date stamped on the seal. The eggs are guaranteed sterile and to be the product of hens in perfect health, kept under the most sanitary conditions and fed only sound, wholesome feed."

Corn Silage the Cheapest.

Corn silage is about the cheapest and most efficient to supplement the winter rations for dairy and beef cattle, horses, calves and sheep. It is cheaper to handle the corn crop in the form of silage than any other way. And should there be another summer of little rain the well stocked silo furnishes sufficient succulent green feed and comes as a great relief to the husbandman.

Getting Seed Corn in Fall.

If you made proper selections of seed corn last fall and have kept it well, you are among those to be congratulated and undoubtedly are the envy of improvident farmers, who by hit or miss methods are forced to use most anything that is left for planting.

Benefit From Cowpeas.

It is interesting to note just how the cowpea crop benefits the soil upon which it grows and increases its productive capacity. In the first place it does so by increasing the supply of nitrogen, which it transfers from the air to the soil by means of the bacteria which live on the roots of the plant. This added supply of nitrogen serves also to increase the growth of the plant as well as enriching the soil during its growth.

Good Grubbing Hoe.

A light grubbing hoe for use about the garden or truck patch is shown in the accompanying illustration from Popular Science. Secure a leaf of an old buggy spring, about eighteen inches long, and cut the ends off square and grind them sharp. Two short pieces of strap iron with holes for rivets and one end of each upset and threaded for a nut will be needed to fasten the spring to the handle, which should be of wood. Assemble as shown in sketch and you will have a very handy little tool for light work.

BUGGY-SPRING GRUBBING HOE.

Wonderful Work of Cow.

According to modern standards of measurements of a dairy cow, one that gives 6,000 pounds of milk a year, is but an ordinary milker. And yet to elaborate this amount of milk, this cow must manufacture not less than 780 pounds of milk solids. The cow may weigh more than 800 or 900 pounds, and the dry matter of her body is only the half of this amount, so we see the cow may manufacture new material annually amounting to more than twice that contained in her own body. To do this wonderful work she must be in the best of physical condition and must have an abundance of material containing the elements she needs.

Milo for Feeding Poultry.

Many poltrymen prefer milo to corn for feeding poultry. The seeds are of convenient size for feeding, and the composition is nearly the same as that of corn. Dry-land farmers in eastern Colorado state that in an average season they can raise a ton or more grain to the acre by planting carefully selected seed and giving it thorough cultivation. It is their surest feed grain crop.

Growing Spanish Onions.

An experiment carried out by the New Mexico experiment station shows that Spanish onions may be grown with good success in that region. A clear profit of over $150 was realized from one-half acre of ground the past season, the product being shipped to the Chicago market. This does not take into account about 5,500 pounds of culls that would have brought at least 1 cent a pound.

A Removable Clothespost.

For the resident, proud of his lawn, there has been designed a removable clothespost which may be taken up after use on wash day and thus the lawn is freed from any unsightly obstruction. The post and the socket base in which it is held are separate. The latter is 2½ feet long and is driven flush with the ground, a driving cap being provided for this purpose. When in position the post is inserted and can be lifted out again, leaving the lawn free of obstruction to the lawn mower or other uses. The posts are made of special high carbon steel tubing.

Brief Farm Hints.

Celery is getting to be the best paying crop the garden grows.

It is a great mistake to feed pigs sour milk when they are learning to eat.

Milk the cows clean every time if you would keep up a uniform flow of milk.

The man, the cow, the feed, are three essentials to successful dairying.

Choose for the breeding mare a solid color—dark bay, black or chestnut.

The disposition of a horse has a great deal to do with his value on a farm.

A farmer's wife will not find it hard to get private customers in town for genuine fresh eggs.

Do not keep cows for a side issue; make it a business, like any other branch of farm work.

Examine seed potatoes to see they have not sprouted at the bottom, although the top may look all right.

Get a garden. Make up your mind to live well this summer. Life is too short to live on the husks of the farm.

The fact that a hog will eat almost anything and turn it into meat does not imply anything will do for the hog.

Stick to the old stand-bys for the main crop, and touch the novelties lightly. Some of them are fine, however.

Put in an ornamental or other tree in the front yard. They will double the value of your property in a few years.

A cow that gives rich milk and is kept in good condition will produce a butter that does not need coloring matter at all.

If after churning the butter is not firm try leaving it in the buttermilk a few hours. This often makes a wonderful change.

An inexperienced man with a pair of sharp pruning shears will do more harm in an orchard in one day than all the insects combined could do in a year.

THE HOUSEHOLD

Salmon Turbot.

Cook together a pint of milk and three heaping tablespoonfuls of flour, stirring steadily. At the end of three minutes' cooking add one-half cup of butter and, as soon as this is blended, take the mixture from the fire. When nearly cold add well-beaten eggs, salt and pepper to taste and stir in the contents of a can of salmon flaked into bits. Turn into a buttered pudding dish and cover with bread crumbs. Bake for one-half hour and serve hot.

Eggs a la Golden Rod.

Boil two eggs for half an hour, remove the yolks and cut the whites into small bits. Season one-half cup of cream with a little salt, put it over the fire to boil and thicken with a little flour uet with cold milk. When thick and smooth, stir in the whites of the eggs and pour over two slices of toast. Put the yolks through a potato ricer and sprinkle over the whites. Garnish with lettuce leaves.

Creamed Corned Codfish on Toast.

Let one cup of corned codfish stand in cold water an hour or more. Prepare a cup of cream sauce; when boiling add the fish, wrung dry in a cloth, half a teaspoonful of black pepper and one or two "hard-cooked" eggs, cut in small cubes. Have ready four slices of toast; dip the edges in boiling salted water, set on a low dish, spread lightly with butter, pour over the fish and serve at once.

Macaroni Cutlets.

Break one-half package macaroni into very small pieces and cook till soft. Drain. Make a cup of milk sauce with a beaten egg stirred in, and season with pepper, salt and butter. Add macaroni and allow it to cool. Shape into cutlets, roll in cracker crumbs, then in beaten hot fat. Serve with tomato sauce.

Small Angel Cake.

Whites of six eggs beaten stiff, two-thirds of a cup of granulated sugar, one-half cup of flour sifted five times, one-half teaspoon of cream of tartar, sifted with flour and sugar the last time, vanilla. Put into a round angel cake tin and bake forty minutes. Do not open oven door until cake has been in fifteen minutes.

Tripe in Milk.

This is excellent for invalids. Cut one pound of tripe into dice and simmer for two hours in sweet milk. Take the tripe up in a hot dish, thicken the milk with a little flour, add a dash of salt and black pepper, pour over and serve hot. This is especially nice served on very dry buttered toast.

Salt Codfish Fritters.

Let one cup of corned codfish stand overnight in cold water. Drain and remove all water by squeezing the fish in a cloth; add four beaten eggs, a cup of milk and half a teaspoonful of black pepper, and mix thoroughly. Cook by spoonfuls on a hot, well-oiled griddle. Serve from the griddle.

Yeast.

To one cup of grated raw potato add half cup of salt and half cup of sugar; pour over all one quart boiling water, stirring well; it will thicken like a starch; when nearly cold, add one cup of good yeast. In about twelve hours it should be light; put in jug or bottle and cork tightly.

Baked Onions.

Peel the onions and boil them in salted water. When tender drain and place in a greased pudding dish, sprinkle with salt and pepper, pour over them a good white sauce and set in the oven until lightly browned. Serve in the dish in which they were baked.

Nut Cake.

One and one-half cups of sugar, one-half cup of butter, two cups of flour, whites of four eggs, three-quarters of a cup of milk, one teaspoon of cream of tartar and one-half teaspoon of soda.

Sunshine is destructive to mirrors. The glass assumes a milky appearance and cannot be restored to its original appearance. Place the mirrors in position so that the direct rays of the sun do not fall upon them.

Hints About the House.

Potato water is excellent for cleaning mud stains from nearly any kind of cloth or garment.

A teaspoonful of ginger in two gallons of cider will, it is said, keep it sweet for several months.

Vegetables soaked in a steamer are actually more nourishing than those boiled in the ordinary way.

To heat dishes quickly don't put them into a hot oven, but let them lie for a minute or two in hot water.

When frying mush, it is said that dipping the slices first into the white of an egg makes them crisper.

When serving hot mince pie place a thin slice of cheese on each piece. It gradually softens from the heat of the pie.

Celery roots, boiled in plain water, chilled and dressed with French dressing, make excellent and cheap winter salads.

If gelatin must be softened quickly, pour cold water over the gelatin and heat over boiling water until it is dissolved.

Scorched fireproof dishes should be soaked in strong borax water till the unslightly brown marks upon them can be rubbed off with a cloth.

When starching colored clothes either put them in a cheesecloth bag or else make the starch very blue, and then no starch will show on them.

To remove hot-water marks on japanned trays use sweet oil. Rub it in well till all marks disappear, then polish the tray with dry flour and soft cloths.

Salt and vinegar make an excellent mixture for cleaning water bottles. Put a dessertspoonful of rough salt into a decanter, moisten it with vinegar, and then shake the bottle till the stains are removed.

Baby Sleepless with Awful Itching.

"When our baby was seven weeks old he broke out with what we thought was heat, but which gradually grew worse. We called in a doctor. He said it was eczema and from that time we doctored six months with three of the best doctors in Atchison but he only got worse. His face, head and hands were a solid sore. There was no end to the suffering for him. We had to tie his little hands to keep him from scratching. He never knew what it was to sleep well from the time he took the disease until he was cured. He kept us awake all hours of the night and his health wasn't what you would call good. We tried everything but the right thing.

"Finally I got a set of the Cuticura Remedies and I am pleased to say we did not use all of them until he was cured. We have waited a year and a half to see if it would return but it never has and to-day his skin is clear and fair as it possibly could be. I hope Cuticura may save some one else's little ones suffering and also their pocket-books. John Leason, 1403 Atchison St., Atchison, Kan., Oct. 19, 1909."

Untold Riches.

Wealth is merely comparative. One's possessions constitute a pittance or a fortune, according to one's point of view. The Rev. Frederic Denison tells a story of one of the inhabitants of old Westerly, Rhode Island, which shows there is no general standard of riches. The young man, prompted by patriotism and desire for gold, had enlisted in the uncertain business of privateering.

On returning home after many and various cruises, he was thankfully greeted by his kin and anxious friends. His mother, with maternal solicitude, inquired:

"Well, Harry, how have you made out? Did you get much money?"

"Oh, yes, mother," answered the adventurer, "I had good luck. I am rich. I shall have enough, with prudence and care, to carry me through life, I hope."

"I am glad, my son. How much have you?"

"Well, I don't exactly know yet, but I think when we settle up it will amount to thirty dollars."

Beautiful Wall Coatings for Homes.

In line with the progress of all other things in these modern days is the beautiful, perfect and sanitary wall coatings for our homes. Alabastine is the name of a rich, soft and velvety preparation for the decoration of walls and ceilings. It adheres to the walls of its own adhesive qualities. It is inexpensive, clean, artistic and so easily put on that any one can follow the printed directions on every package. Any shade or tint is easily produced. Alabastine is proof against insects or disease germs so prevalent in wall paper. It does not rub off and flake like kalsomine. A complete color plan for the walls of the home and stencils to help make the home beautiful, together with a book about home decorations and samples of color effects will all be sent free by the Alabastine Company, 482 Grandville avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich. This liberal offer to home decorators deserves careful perusal.

In Modern Times.

"Hang it all, Ethel, must your aunt go along?"

"Yes, George; but when everything's going nicely you can pretend that something's wrong with the machinery and that it's absolutely necessary to lighten ship so we won't be all killed, and then we'll drop auntie overboard with the parachute."—Life.

FREE TO YOU—MY SISTER

Free to You and Every Sister Suffering From Woman's Ailments.

I am a woman.
I know woman's sufferings.
I have found the cure.

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from women's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand women's sufferings. What we women know from experience, we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhoea or Whitish discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths; also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days' treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember, that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial; and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book—"WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER" with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young. To Mothers of Daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhoea, Green Sickness and Painful or Irregular Menstruation in Young Ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all women's diseases, and makes women well, strong, plump and robust. Just send me your address, and the free ten days' treatment is yours, also the book. Write today, as you may not see this offer again. Address

The HERALD is going to put the population of Butler at 2350. What is your guess?

After next Monday Dr. M. M. Acker and family will become residents of Fayette, Ohio. They are one of Butler's highly respected families and will leave a large number of friends behind. Dr. Kramer, his former partner, has purchased his property here and will continue to carry on the practice. We do not need to recommend the doctor and family to Fayette people, as that is his home town. They leave the best town in northern Indiana and locate in the best town in northern Ohio. The HERALD bids them god-speed.

The Epworth League class in Bible study completed the year's work in the Old Testament, last evening and celebrated the event with a special business meeting and banquet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. DEEP SEA LIFE.

The Deposits on the Surface of Submarine Mountains.

Whether or not the light of day penetrates the obscure depths of the sea has not been settled by scientists, and the fact that some animals found at a depth exceeding 700 fathoms have no eyes or a very faint indication of them, while others possess very large and protruding eyes, helps to make the dispute all the more sharp.

Another strange thing about the lower depths of the ocean is that when its inhabitants possess any color at all that color is usually orange or red or reddish orange—for example, sea anemones, corals, etc. The surface of submarine mountains is strewn with shells like the virgin seashore, showing that it is the feasting place of vast shoals of carnivorous animals. When a codfish eats it takes an oyster in its mouth, cracks the shell, digests the meat and ejects the shell. Crabs crack the shells of their smaller neighbors and suck out the meat. This accounts for the mounds of shells which are found beneath the waves. All fish bones discovered there invariably crumble at the slightest touch, so completely have they been honeycombed by the boring shellfish, and, further illustrating the constant destruction going on in the ocean's depth, it is said that if a ship sinks at sea with all on board it will be eaten by the fish, with the exception of its metal portions, and not a human bone of its crew will remain longer than a few days.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

MADE WAGNER PAY.

An Early Sonata That Cost the Composer a Lot of Money.

Wagner when a young man wrote a sonata which had a fair success, but in after life he made every effort to suppress it. Going to the publisher, he said, "Have you any copies of that miserable thing still unsold?"

"Yes," was the reply; "I have quite a number of them in stock."

"Send them to me at once, with a bill," said the composer.

A thousand copies were soon afterward delivered at his door. The bill was a big one, but it was paid, somewhat grudgingly, and Wagner thought he had done with the thing. What was his surprise, then, at receiving two or three months later another consignment, this time of 500 copies.

"I thought you had only a thousand of these things," he protested.

"That was all I had in stock," explained the dealer, "but these have been returned by my agents, to whom I wrote that you wished to have the sonata suppressed."

Wagner winced, but there was nothing for it but to pay the bill. And thereafter whenever business was dull with this crafty publisher a few hundred copies of the sonata would be struck off on shopworn paper and delivered at the composer's door with a memorandum to the effect that they had just come back from remote places where they had been sent for sale.

So light running that your "youngest" can now mow the lawn without help.

KEEN KUTTER Mowers are fast cutting and easy running because of the triple gear and the fine ball bearings. A KEEN KUTTER will last longer than any mower on the market and is easily kept keen and sharp. To sharpen, merely reverse the blades and they sharpen themselves. A cheap mower will cost more in the end on account of repairs, will not do the work properly and will require twice as much labor.

The KEEN KUTTER is a money saver, a time saver, a temper saver—and will keep your lawn looking like velvet.

We have just installed in our mill a new mahine for grinding chop. This machine is a product of The American Machinery Co., Port Huron, Mich., and is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction in every respect.

We can grind in any manner desirable. Kindly state at mill door if chop is to be ground fine, medium or coarse. Although this machine has cost us several hundred dollars, we make no extra charge for grinding, and will grind at same old prices—5c per bushel, or one-eighth toll.

We are also prepared to crush cobs and then grind them, and price on this work is 10 cents per bushel. One bag oats, rye, etc., is considered two bushels, and one bag ear corn one bushel.

Give us a call and let us demonstrate what this machine will do.

MESSAGE FROM SENATOR BEVERIDGE

United States Senate,
Washington, D. C., May 2, 1910.

MY DEAR FRIEND:

Thank you for your good letter of April 28. As you suggest I am sending you a few lines to the graduating class of the Butler high school. Am glad to do this. With kindest regards,

I am sincerely,
ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE.

REV. E. F. ALBERTSON,
Butler, Ind.

Message from United States Senator Albert J. Beveridge to the graduating class of Butler high school:

The problem of every young man and woman is how to be effective. Consciously or unconsciously the question you are asking yourself is, "How shall I make my strength count for most in this world of effort?" And this is the question which every one of us ought to ask himself. But not for the purpose of mere selfish gain; not to get money for the sake of money, or fame for the sake of fame, but for the sake of helpfulness to those we love and of all humanity.

Fall in love with your work, that is the first rule for doing your work well. It is also the golden rule of happiness. Fall in love with your work and your labor will bring you joy as well as money.

All the happiness this life affords is found in three things: First—A true relation to God. Second—The care of other people. Third—The doing with all your might work which you love to do. There is no true and lasting happiness possible from any other source.

WOMAN DYING FROM BURNS

Dress Caught Fire While Burning Rubbish

GARRETT, Ind., May 3.—Burned from her lower extremities to her neck so that the charred flesh fell from her bones in chunks, Mrs. M. C. Parker, aged 52 years, is lying at her home at the point of death. A daughter, Mrs. E. A. Rapp, of Chicago, is also badly burned about the hands, while M. C. Parker, the husband and father, is suffering from a severe attach of heart trouble received after learning of his wife's terrible misfortune.

Mrs. Parker's skirts caught fire while she was burning paper and dead leaves in the rear yard of the Parker home on Britten street about 2 o'clock this afternoon. Her screams were heard by her daughter, Mrs. Rapp, who is here on a visit from her home in Chicago, and she rushed to the yard. Neighbors also heard the shrieks and together they rolled the burning body upon the lawn and used carpets and rugs in extinguishing the flames.

By the united effort the flames were finally extinguished but not until the victim had become unconscious and horribly burned. Dr. F. A. King was hastily called but little could be done and death will undoubtedly result.

Mrs. Parker has resided in this city nearly all her life and is an esteemed and well known lady. C. M. Parker, a son, conducts a cigar store opposite the local postoffice, while another son, A. W. Parker, resides in Chicago. The latter was notified of the accident and arrived to-night.—Journal Gazette.

The military drama which was given under the direction of Miss Nora Brown on last Friday evening, at Thompson's opera house, was so well received by the public that Miss Brown has been urged to repeat the entertainment which will be done on May 17.

It was the central topic for several days, and so well did the actors execute their various parts in the drama that not a single criticism has been heard by the HERALD editor, while on the other hand there was much favorable comment from those who attended.

For this reason the post office appropriation bill provides that after June 30, 1911, carriers shall not deliver mail at any house not provided with a suitable mail box accessible from the outside.

How the government encourages gambling in land homesteading is shown by the Belle Fourche irrigation project in South Dakota. Here are only 10,000 acres, rendered very valuable and immediately productive by irrigation, forty acres of which with water rights cost only $1,200, payable in ten yearly installments. Yet all claims have not been taken. Per contra, when a like amount of an Indian reservation in Idaho was opened under the gambling plan last year in Idaho, there were ten claimants for every tract, and each claimant spent enough to pay two years' installments on a real irrigated farm, while only one in ten got anything at all, and what he got was not so valuable per acre. It is the gambling feature of the Indian reservation openings which attracts, and not a home-making opportunity on a sensible business basis.

Life holds many pleasant surprises for even those whose fate is not the most fortunate. That fact was discovered by a Michigan woman the other day, who began a search for her brother and sisters. They had all been put in an orphan asylum on the death of their parents, and had been adopted by families in different parts of the state. In the course of her search, the woman learned that a little girl with whom she used to play when she was small, and of whom she was very fond, was her own sister. Her foster-parents had moved to the town in which the family dwelt that had adopted the sister, and they lived side by side. Whether the families knew the girls were sisters does not appear, but the girls were unaware of the kinship. And now comes the delightful knowledge that these childhood friends were sisters, and had known each other for years—how delightful only those who have vainly longed for intimate association with their own kin can understand.

While preparing recently for their examinations, the young men of a Western university voted not to shave until after the examinations, on the ground that growing beards would serve to remove temptation to neglect their work for social diversions. About the same time the newspapers told of the solemn decision of the young ladies in another institution to enforce a social boycott against the male students who were wearing, or coaxing into existence, mustaches. The two incidents illustrate the present attitude of the social world toward shaven and unshaven men. Not that a bearded man is ostracized by the world at large, whatever may be the case in undergraduate circles, but that clean-shaven faces among men of all ages are now becoming the rule. It was not always thus. In ancient times the beard was the badge of manhood, the insignia of dignity and authority. This is still true in the Jewish race; and the strongest oath of the devout Mohammedan is "by the beard of the prophet." Note the long braided beards of the kings of Assyria and Babylon, as indicated by the sculptured images which have survived. In those days slaves were compelled to be smooth-shaven, and the beardless youth was an object of scorn. In Greece and Rome the custom varied with the periods. Most of the great Romans of later times were beardless. In the middle ages and in the Elizabethan era beards were generally worn, although occasionally a beardless monarch led a change in style which made the barbers happy. In Great Britain and this country the beard was almost unknown in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. In the nineteenth century it came into general favor. Most of the young men of a college graduating class of the fifties and sixties wore all the beard they could raise. Then the young men took to the moustache, which is now far less common. When man accuses woman of being a creature of the arbitrary whims of fashion, she may well retort by pointing to his beard—or to the place where it might be.

POPULAR SCIENCE

The Simplex system of driving concrete piles, which the British admiralty is trying at Rosyth, is the invention of an American, F. Shuman. A steel tube, having a loose point or a pair of hinged jaws at the lower end, is first driven to the required depth. Then, as the tube is withdrawn, concrete is introduced, and this passes through the now opened lower end and fills up the hole made by the tube. The concrete is filled up to a level several feet above the finished head of the pile, in order to allow for sinking as the tube is withdrawn. The plan has been successfully tried in many places.

In an English review of the progress in aeronautics during 1909 the first place in the list of unsolved problems is given to that of obtaining a certain degree of automatic stability at slow speeds. It is recognized that the high velocity of flight required to enable the aeroplane simply to keep afloat must be lowered before the machines can become truly useful and safe. Another question is that of the engine. In order to make this certain in operation, it is suggested that the weight must be still further reduced, so as to permit either of a duplication of parts, or of the employment of two complete engines, each under normal conditions working at only a fraction of its full power.

A remarkable photograph of half a dozen porpoises, playing under water, just ahead of the bow of a steamship traveling at the rate of 13 knots an hour, has been published by a correspondent of Knowledge, C. H. Gale. The sea was calm and the photograph was made by leaning over the bow of the vessel. Mr. Gale calls attention to the singular fact that the porpoises, while easily maintaining their position ahead of the ship, showed no apparent effort or motion of body, tail or fin. Yet he thinks that they were not carried along by movement of the water in front of the vessel, because air-bubbles were seen rushing from their backs, and the photograph shows the effect of these bubbles by the white streaks on the backs of the animals. Sometimes they rolled over sidewise, but always maintained their position.

In a recent book about ants, Rev. H. C. McCook gives some surprising facts about the mound-making ants of the Alleghenies. He has measured some mounds more than 30 feet in circumference, although rarely more than three feet in height. But around these there are many new mounds, in course of construction, only a few inches in height. They are found in groups, one of which, near Hollidaysburg, Pa., contains 1,700 mounds within a space of 50 acres. Their total population is enormous, and each group of mounds appears to constitute a community—an insect kingdom or empire. In regard to their numbers, Doctor Forel is quoted as saying that these ant kingdoms have in all probability from 200,000,000 to 400,000,000 inhabitants, "all forming a single community, and living together in active and friendly intercourse."

Ruskin's Grave.

Ten years ago John Ruskin passed peacefully away at Coniston. A grave in Westminster Abbey was immediately offered by the dean, but was refused out of respect for Ruskin's frequently expressed wish that he might be buried wherever he chanced to die, says the Westminster Gazette. He was laid to rest in Coniston churchyard on Jan. 25. In poets' corner there is a medallion of him by Onslow Ford, immediately above the bust of Sir Walter Scott. In his native Camberwell the master's memory is perpetuated by the bestowal of his name upon the finely wooded park on Denmark hill, within a stone's throw of his old home.

LOVE AND LIVE.

All my past, life is mine no more;
The flying hours are gone.
Like transitory dreams given o'er
Whose images are kept in store
By memory alone.

The time that is to come is not;
How can it then be mine;
The present moment's all my lot;
And that, as fast as it is got,
Phyllis, is only thine.

Then talk not of inconstancy
False hearts and broken vows;
If I by miracles can be
This live-long minute true to thee,
'Tis all that heaven allows.

Wedding Gifts

"Oh, Ferd!" exclaimed the engaged girl to the engaged young man who had just entered the hall door. Then she threw herself into his arms and burst into tears.

"Why, Kathie," gasped the mystified Ferd, "what's up?"

"Oh, Ferd!" moaned Katharine amid strangled sobs. "Did you ever see anything more hideous in all your life?" She held up something round, smooth and pearly white in color. "Think of wearing it! Think of it, Ferd! Oh, of all spiteful creatures, girls are the worst!"

Katharine sniffed recuperatively and dabbed a bit of lace upon her discolored eyes. Presently she was in a condition to tell her story.

"The Alpha Zeta girls did it just because it makes them jealous to think that I'm about to marry such a splendid man as you. They are, Ferd," she insisted, as the young man smiled a bit incredulously. "Though, in fairness to them, I will admit there is the smallest chance possible of their having actually imagined that I'd like this frightful thing.

"You see," began Katharine confidentially, as she settled herself comfortably beside the young man, "When Clara Frazier was married last June the Alpha Zetas decided to give her a handsome bracelet. And I gave in my little $1.50—I, who love Clara as I should love a viper. Do you remember, Ferd, when you both happened to be on the same train going to Detroit a year ago? Of course, I know that you were merely polite to her, but she actually made so much out of your attentions to her when she told about them that the girls thought you and I were on the point of quarreling. Since then Clara and I have kept up a perfect fiction of friendship. If we meet as often as three times a day she always kisses me on both cheeks and, opening her eyes wide, inquires sweetly, 'How's Ferd?'

"Well, to get back to Clara's wedding present. I was one of the committee of three appointed to select the bracelet. For some rason or other we put off making the purchase till the last day. By that time Carrie had sprained her ankle roller skating and Helen had to help her mother pack for a trip to New York, so I was left to choose the gift all by myself.

"I had a perfectly miserable time, Ferd. All the way downtown I juggled possible and impossible designs up and down in my mind. By the time the salesman began bringing out tray after tray of bracelets for my inspection I was utterly confused.

"Of course, some of them were dreams. There were gay Parisian designs and hand-wrought orientals. I saw a silver bracelet set with turquoise, native drilled and warranted never to fade. There was a beauty in rose gold with enamel flower tracings and studs of pearls. But did I select one of these? Never!

"I waved aside all the lovely ones and chose a silver beaded affair. It was an ugly Wall of Troy pattern set with eight lapis lazulis and three cream jades. There wasn't a bit of high light on the article. Altogether it was the ugliest bracelet I ever saw in all my life—except this one here.

"I was ashamed to think what the handsome young salesman might conclude about my intellect, so I told him that the bracelet was not for me but for an elderly person of peculiar tastes. Of course, 25 is elderly, and if Clara weren't odd she never would have dreamed that she could make that sweet-minded Billy Thompson happy for life.

"As I exected, the girls all looked rather shocked when I opened the white velvet box for their inspection; but though the praises were tame, no serious complaints were lodged, so the bracelet was sent to Clara."

Tears were in Katharine's voice as she went on. "Ferd, we received a wedding present to-day!" She crushed tightly in her hand the white velvet box. Inside was an Alpha card. There were also the same beaded silver and the same Wall of Troy, with eight lapis lazulis and three cream jades! A twin monstrosity to the bracelet I selected for Clara!" Tears rolled down her cheeks.

"Oh, I'm nearly through crying," she declared, "but I want to tell you, Ferdinand Augustus Milton Stoll, that you can just make up your mind to use this bracelet to chain on the cover of the ash can or bolt the kitchen door. It may do to tie up the bull pup. As for my wearing it ——"

She rose impulsively and the white velvet box went spinning across the room. The bracelet rolled out and lay on the rug.

"Oh, Ferd," sobbed Katharine, as she sank pathetically back on the divan, "wouldn't you be awfully afraid

Still Learning.

Three weeks before his death, when he was nearly 80 years old, Corot, the painter, said to a friend: "You have no idea of the things I could paint now. I see what I have never seen before. It seems to me that I could never before have been able to make a sky. That which is before me is much rosier, profounder, more transparent. Ah, if I could show you these immense horizons!" In "Corot and His Friends" Everard Meynell gives Albert Wolff's picture of the aged artist. He wrote in 1884:

Only nine years ago one could still, on summer days, see one of the most touching spectacles an artist has ever given to his time.

An old man, come to the completion of a long life, his white hair aureoled in reflections, clothed in a blouse, sheltered under a parasol, sat, attentive as a scholar, trying to surprise some secret of nature that had escaped him for seventy years, smiling at the chatter of the birds, and now and then throwing them the bar of a song, as happy to live and enjoy the poetry of the fields as he had been at 20.

Old as he was, this great artist still hoped to be learning; for half a century he had been studying the works of creation, and every day they made a revelation to him; for, thought this old man, there can never be an absolute mastery in art, and a lifetime is not long enough to study all the expressions of the face of the earth.

"Two good studies must be made," he said, "or I will break my palette and brushes." And, later on, "I hope with all my heart there will be painting in heaven."

Dear Money.

Mrs. Anthony Hope, American wife of the well known English novelist, is as celebrated as her husband for her bon-mots.

At a dinner in New York on her American visit, the young lady expressed her disapproval of mercenary marriages.

"Never marry for money," she said. "You can borrow cheaper."

AN INTELLIGENT REPTILE.

Do animals possess the power of logical judgment, or, as we oftener say, reason? Naturalists—and others—have long debated the question, and are still divided. A writer in Science, without committing himself on the point, tells what he saw on a country road in Georgia, and every reader will agree with him that it was remarkable.

A commotion in the underbrush beside the road attracted his attention. He investigated the cause, and saw a coachwhip snake about four feet long struggling with a lizard less than a foot long. They were not fighting; the snake was trying to eat the lizard.

Occasionally the lizard would get away, but the snake would at once give chase and recapture him. The snake invariably caught his prey by the body; he acted as if he knew that if he seized him by the tail the lizard would break off the tail and escape.

Finally the lizard, escaping from the snake, darted up a tree; the snake followed. Here the four jointed legs of the lizard gave him the advantage. After darting up the tree a short distance he paused and glanced backward. As often as the snake approached he would again dart forward, stop, and look backward; this happened several times.

Then all of a sudden the snake dropped to the ground. The lizard continued to gaze downward. About a foot from the tree on which the lizard was resting, head downward, there stood another tree. Spirally up this tree the snake climbed until it was a few inches above the level of the lizard, which was still gazing scrutinizingly downward.

Quietly and quickly the snake extended the front of its body, and with a sudden thrust of its head knocked the lizard to the ground, and before it had time to recover from the unexpected blow the snake had dropped to the ground and recaptured it.

MEDICINE AND THE PRESS.

Good Deal of Unjustifiable Talk About Newspaper Blunders.

One of the medical journals devotes a long and scornful article in its current issue to the anatomical and pathological blunders of newspapers. Some of those blunders, it must be admitted, have no little richness of humor. A small western paper, for example, recently accused a man of dying of "pleurisy of the brain." Another announced that a sick man, locally prominent, was recovering from a bad attack of staphlocous (staphylococcus?) A third paper, this time in the south, recorded a case of "petrification of the heart." News of other hair-raising marvels, of incredible maladies and impossible operations crops up every day on all sides.

It is to be lamented, of course, says the Baltimore Sun, that newspapers are not more accurate in their medical and chirurgical reports, but the fault, we believe, is not always theirs. Too often the doctors who laugh so loudly are to blame. Many of them still cling to the ancient hocus-pocus of the mediaeval leeches. Medicine, as it is practiced, is still marked by meaningless incantations, absurd circumlocutions, unintelligible dog Latin. The young doctors like to roll sounding words upon their tongues that they may cause the vulgar to marvel, and too often they are never cured of the vice. Just observe the bulletins issued by the learned consultants while a great man lies dying. Very often they are entirely incomprehensible, despite the fact that the information they ordinarily convey might be expressed very well in language easily understood by any layman.

No; the newspapers are not always to blame for their medical errors and when they are their blunders do a great deal less harm than those of the doctors themselves. A newspaper never gouges out the wrong eye or cuts off the wrong leg. Its mistakes in diagnosis fill no graveyards. It may be comic, but it is never homicidal.

Mr. Taft's Blunders.

President Taft should not be misled by the explanations offered by party newspapers of his loss of popular confidence. The esteemed Tribune, for example, assures him that the criticism now passed upon him comes only from Democrats who are always in opposition, professional independents who are hostile to the tariff, professional insurgents who delight in advertising themselves, and a small coterie of professional Rooseveltians.

While there is some truth in all this, the complaints that count, the influences that have chilled popular sentiment and the doubts that have seriously weakened the President's hold upon the people are to be found elsewhere. They are not professional in any sense. They spring from the discriminating intelligence of Mr. Taft's fellow citizens without regard to party or locality.

The President has identified himself unnecessarily and inconsistently with a tariff law which is intensely unpopular. He has gone out of his way to praise the men who made this law. A moderate protectionist before his election, he has become the principal champion of extreme protectionism. The men and the measure are alike hateful. He is now their chief apologist.

Great and well deserved as was the popular regard for Mr. Taft, it could not stand such a shock as this. Most Americans believe that the new tariff act was a deliberate betrayal of their interests and a well-calculated violation of party pledges. They acquitted Mr. Taft of blame in the beginning, but he has convicted himself out of his own mouth. His defense of the work of Payne, Aldrich and Cannon has awakened suspicion even of him, while it has not helped them in the least.

One vital mistake on his part has led to others. The rocks on which his administrative ship is now pounding are those of party. He has thought more of party than he has of himself, of his pledges, of his place in history. He has thought more of party than he has of country. To save the party he has embraced the congressional leaders who betrayed him, he has indorsed a law which is generally execrated, and he—the last man in the Republic to do such a thing—has stood forth none too wisely or successfully to cry down a nation's angry protests.

Mr. Taft's true friends will tell him that there is nothing professional or casual in the criticism which now assails him. It is based on a sense of wrong and injustice. It rests on a conviction that greed and trickery have once more triumphed. There is a painful belief that the President himself has not been entirely frank in his actions or candid in his utterances.

It will not be easy for Mr. Taft to retrace the steps that he has taken or to recover the favor that he has lost, but at least he can come to a halt in his blundering. To assume the odium attaching to Payne, Cannon and Aldrich is to share their fate.—New York World.

Central Bank Danger.

An important duty of the state in any civilized country is to provide security against bad banking, and perhaps the greatest opportunity for profit by bad banking has been found in the profit on circulation at times when it was possible to issue paper money far in excess of specie reserves.

When paper money is issued by commercial banks the public is protected, simply because the bank must pay specie for all bills presented, and excessive issue of bills very soon causes a movement of bills toward the bank of issue for redemption.

When political paper money is issued by a government or a government bank specie payment can not be enforced. As a medium of exchange paper money is adequate, but, because it is also the standard for deferred payments, the power to vary arbitrarily the amount in circulation may be used most unjustly to the great injury of trade and commerce.

This is exactly the power that was exercised by the ill-fated United States Bank, which once controlled the banking of this entire country and caused national commercial disaster. This is the power that will be held by a politically controlled central bank if Senator Aldrich can effect his purpose.

Does anyone doubt what will happen if the entire banking resources of the United States are legislated into the hands of a few Republican grand dukes and the money kings of Wall street?

Give the Figures.

There is not a congressional district in the United States where simple figures will not prove a better vote-maker than oratory.

Let the people have the plain, unvarnished truth about the artificial high cost of living in the United States.

It was this that enabled Foss of Massachusetts to change a Republican majority of 14,000 into a Democratic plurality of 5,000. He simply showed the people, item by item, how they were being robbed in comparison with prevailing prices for the same articles in Canadian cities.

Foss had no difficulty, with his two sets of tables, in proving that sudden artificial "boosts" in the commonest of life's necessities in this country immediately followed the passage of the Aldrich-Taft tariff law. He did not need oratory—he simply used facts.

Let the result be an inspiration to the managers of other congressional campaigns—east and west.

The Ballinger Investigation.

With Gifford Pinchot in Europe and the evidence in the case practically all in, the Ballinger investigation is somewhat at a standstill. Every effort has been made to detract from the accusations against the secretary of the interior. If Mr. Ballinger is not cleared, it will not be the fault of the attorneys, who have so valiantly defended him.

But there is one question which can not be driven out of the public mind, and which will do more to foster suspicion that all is not right than all the charges of the Pinchot forces.

If Mr. Ballinger's skirts are clear, if he has acted honestly for the public good, if he is not tainted by implication in the Guggenheim schemes to plunder public property, why was he afraid to go on the witness stand, make a statement of his position and submit to cross-examination?

Driving Away Our Customers.

What should we think of the management of a store or factory that drove away its customers by continually putting up prices and saw its revenues decline from year to year, in spite of the fictitious increase of the book value of its stock? Obviously we should think the management foolish or demented.

What should we think of such a management besides, if all of the paper profit of its increased prices were absorbed in payment of larger wages to its employes, made necessary by the increased cost of living put upon them by being compelled to do their trading in the store or factory, so that the only compensation for declining outside trade was a generous rake-off for the benefit of officers and directors? Obviously we should think the management corrupt and dishonest and suggest a general attendance of stockholders at the next election.

This parable represents with rough accuracy the situation of the people of the United States under "the best tariff the country ever had." Prices of all things the American people have to sell at home or abroad have risen so that foreigners will not take our goods, while our own citizens, who must take them or starve and go naked, are driven into labor strikes to get money enough to pay their weekly bills.

Revenues from foreign trade are falling off, export of gold last year was the greatest since the Cleveland panic and we are staving off new exports only by sticking foreigners with our second-grade securities. The old excess of exports has run down steadily for a year until in February it became a four million dollar excess of imports for the first time in fifteen years.

Meanwhile any book profit of the feverish increase of business is absorbed in increased expenses, so that nobody gains but the industrial trusts and protected monopolies with their rake-off of special privilege. What are the stockholders of this national company going to do at the annual election of directors in November?—Minneapolis Farmers' Tribune.

The East's Sectionalism.

From academic writers in current magazines we learn that there is a grave portent in the growing economic independence of the American west.

Analyzed, this merely means that the great non-producing "interests" of the east are becoming alarmed because the great producing west shows symptoms of throwing off the shackles forged by the east.

The line of sectionalism is not drawn by the west. It is drawn by those astern "interests" that insist on holding the producing west in vassalage. The west represents individual opportunity and Americanism. The east represents the latent commercial feudalism that holds high tariff as its trustiest weapon.

The west controls the nation's food supply, which is galling to eastern non-producers. The fact that the affluent west now lends money to Wall street, instead of borrowing it, is an unforgivable crime. The east can only retaliate by taxing American consumers, particularly those of the producing west, by tariff jugglery.

The west's growing independence is also found in the rise of western industralism, which means that eastern manufacturers are finding a narrower market. Instead of open competition, the eastern mill bosses rely on their friends in congress to give them artificial tariff "protection."

It is the same in the financial world. The great banking reserves of the United States are slowly moving westward. Wall street is becoming more and more a circumscribed battleground for stock gamblers, whose operations are without the slightest permanent effect on the nation's industry and commercial power.

That is why the west's political power is also growing to keep pace with its industrial and financial power.

Democracy—Then and Now.

President Cleveland went to defeat once on the tariff-reform issue, but later was sent back, with a Democratic Congress to support him on a tariff-reform platform.

If Democracy ever had a clear mandate from the people it was to lower their tariff burdens at the time the Wilson act was passed. Yet the latter measure, when it came from the trust-ridden Senate, was so emasculated that Cleveland refused to sign it, though he allowed it to become a law without his signature.

The Wilson act, originally a real tariff reform measure, was mangled by the "interests," led by Gorman and Brice in the Senate and "Pig-Iron" Kelley in the House. It ceased to be a Democratic measure, though the Democratic party was responsible for it.

The moral of which is that Democracy's summons in the coming campaign, to prepare for real tariff revision in Congress, is as clear and as well defined as it was nearly twenty years ago. Also, that the same "interests" hope to thwart the people's will, even if Democrats take charge.

There is only one way that the American people can beat the "interests" into submission to their will—by sending to Washington a Democratic Congress, and keeping tariff traitors out of it.

This is Democracy's year, if all its candidates for Congress are "four square to the wind."—Chicago Journal.

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER XVIII.

This long conversation har somewhat exhausted Jaggard, who was yet weak, so, telling him to cease from talking, Jen recalled the housemaid, and left the room to think over all he had learned. The story of Jaggard convinced him more than ever that Dr. Etwald was the cause of all the terrible events which had occurred during the last few weeks. Without doubt it was he who had treacherously hidden Dido in the chamber of death. After drugging Jaggard, the negress no doubt had opened the window to admit Etwald, and between them this precious pair had carried off the dead body.

"Yes," said Jen to himself that night, as he retired to bed. "To-day I have learned sufficient to implicate Etwald; to-morrow I shall be able to convict him. Dido must confess or go to prison."

Angered by the selfish way in which David had acted, Jen did not communicate his discoveries to the young man. During the night he took counsel with himself, and the next morning he acted upon the plans which he had formed. These were to see Dido and force the truth from her; to send Battersea to Deanminster to fetch both Arkel and Dr. Etwald to "Ashantee;" and finally, to communicate his discoveries to the Inspector and get him to arrest Etwald.

After breakfast the Major wrote two notes—one for Arkel, asking him to be at "Ashantee" by noon, as the writer had important matters to discuss; the other for Etwald, requesting him to call and see Jaggard, who, added Jen significantly in the letter, had recovered his senses. Having thus prepared his trap for the doctor to walk into, Jen delivered the letters to Battersea, with instructions to set off at once for Deanminster. When the Major had seen him safely out of the gates, he took his way towards "The Wigwam" for the all-important interview with Dido.

On arriving at "The Wigwam," Jen presented his card, and was shown into the drawing-room, there to wait the arrival of Mrs. Dallas. On hearing that the Major had called to see her, she sent Dido to inform him that she would shortly accord him an interview. The negress, as gloomy and sullen as ever, delivered this message with folded arms and bent head. Then, without even a look at him, she turned to leave the room, when Jen placed himself between her and the door.

"Not yet, Dido," he said, in a cold voice. "It is true that I called to see your mistress; but I wish to speak to you also."

"What you wish, sah?"

"To ask you a few questions about the devil-stick."

"Massa, I say all I know of de debble-stick!"

"Indeed, you did not, Dido. You did not inform me that by Dr. Etwald's directions you filled the devil-stick with poison; or that you steeped the handkerchief found in the room of Mr. Aylmer in the same poison for the purpose of drugging my servant; or again, that you concealed yourself under the bed, and afterwards drugged him."

A kind of terror showed itself in the dilated eyes of the negress. She could not understand how Jen had become possessed of a knowledge of her crimes, and at first was struck with stupor by the recital. Speedily, however, she recovered herself, and with a dark smile of contempt and pity she was about to deny all, when Jen brought out his last accusation.

"Nor," said he, fixing his eyes on the woman, "did you confess that you opened the window of Mr. Aylmer's room, and aided Dr. Etwald to carry away the dead body?"

"De—de—dead—dead!" she stammered, shrinking back.

"Yes, the dead body of Mr. Aylmer, which you and Dr. Etwald took to his house at Deanminster. No denial, woman," said Jen, raising his voice, as she was about to speak. "I see by your face that you are guilty."

Dido trembled all over, whether from rage or fear Jen could not determine, and opened her mouth to give the lie to her accuser. Then she shut it again, as a heavy step was heard outside the door. A moment later and Mrs. Dallas, with a face expressive of astonishment, was standing on the threshold of the room; and Dido at her feet was making the room resound like a jungle with howlings like those of a wild beast. All the savage nature of the woman was now on the surface, and had broken through the sullen restraint of her impassive demeanor.

"What is the meaning of this?" demanded Mrs. Dallas, with an uneasy glance at the frantic negress.

"I shall explain when Dido stops her howling," said Jen, quite undisturbed.

"Oh, missy! missy!" wept the negress, getting on to her feet. "It all am a lie what dat massa say. Poo' ole Dido know nuffin'—do nuffin'."

Major Jen took Dido by the shoulder, and giving her a good shake, commanded her to be silent. At once the negress—who was evidently acting a part—ceased her outcries, and after casting her eyes significantly at her mistress, stared sullenly at the floor. Mrs. Dallas turned pale at this rapid glance, and was obliged to take a seat to prevent herself from falling. Jen recapitulated for the benefit of Mrs. Dallas the points of his accusation against the negress. Dido heard him in silence, but this time she made neither outcry nor denial.

Mrs. Dallas appeared to be horrified by the recital. Every now and then she cast a look of terror at Dido, while passing her handkerchief over her white lips. When the Major concluded, she could only shake her head and stammer a few words.

"It cannot be true," she murmured. "It is impossible."

"It is a fact," insisted Jen. "I have the evidence of Jaggard to prove that Dido was in the room on that night."

"Dido," cried Mrs. Dallas, in a trembling voice, "is this true?"

The negress raised her wild eyes slowly to the face of her mistress. What she saw therein evidently determined her reply. Without a word she bent her head.

"Ah!" cried Jen, "you admit your guilt."

"No," said Dido, bluntly, "I say dat I is de room, but I no kill dat man."

"But you filled the devil-stick with fresh poison?"

"No," said Dido again. "I saw no debble-stick."

"Woman," cried Jen, with energy, "no one but you could manufacture the poison with which the devil-stick was filled."

"Dat I know; but I no fill the debble-stick."

"Do you mean to say that Dido killed Mr. Aylmer?" asked Mrs. Dallas, nervously.

"No; but she supplied the means to the man who did. Dr. Etwald."

"Dr. Etwald!" repeated Mrs. Dallas, in what seemed to Jen to be a tone of relief. "Why do you think he killed Mr. Aylmer?"

"Because Maurice was engaged to your daughter, whom he wished to marry. Etwald killed my poor lad so as to remove a dangerous rival from his path. And Dido manufactured the poison which was used to drug the watchers of the dead."

"The watchers of the dead!" echoed Mrs. Dallas, with a start.

"Well, let us say my servant, Jaggard. He was drugged by Dido, and she stole the body, or, rather, she aided Etwald to do so."

"Dido, is this true?"

"Yis," said the negress, coldly; "de great massa tole me to do dat."

"The great master," repeated Jen; "you mean Dr. Etwald? He took away the body of Mr. Aylmer, and you helped him? Why did you steal the body?"

"Ask de great massa."

"Where did you take it to?" demanded Jen, baffled in one direction and trying another.

"Ask de great massa," said Dido, once more.

"The law will do that. I intend to have Dr. Etwald arrested. On three charges. First, that he thieved the devil-stick; second, that he killed Maurice; third, that he stole the lad's body."

Mrs. Dallas fell back on the sofa, with a white face. Dido laughed in a guttural fashion, and shrugged her shoulders contemptuously.

"Voodoo!" she said, and laughed again.

The Major guessed that she meant that African witchcraft would avert disaster from Etwald, and at once flung the word back in her face.

"Voodoo will not help the doctor," said he, quietly. "This is a civilized country, and we who inhabit it are above being influenced by such degrading superstitious. You believe in Voodoo, in Obi; let us see if such things will protect you."

"Do you mean that Dido is in danger of arrest?" cried Mrs. Dallas, in a terrified tone.

"Certainly as the accomplice of Etwald. She filled the devil-stick with the poison which was used to kill," retorted the Major, coldly; "and she confesses to having aided him in stealing the body."

"Ah!" murmured Mrs. Dallas, casting a haggard look around. "All is lost."

"Are you alluding to Dido?" demanded Jen, rather surprised at her tone.

Mrs. Dallas was about to speak, when the negress silenced her with a look, and raised her head proudly.

"Yis. It ole Dido," she said. "But ole Dido not lost. Dat great massa, he look after old Dido."

"If you mean Dr. Etwald, he will have enough to do to look after himself. Well, Mrs. Dallas, as I have learned what I wished to know, I shall now take my leave."

"You go to ruin us," wept Mrs. Dallas.

"No," said Jen, in an inflexible voice, "I go to punish the man who killed my boy."

Without another word he left the room. His last glance showed that Dido had gathered her sobbing mistress in her arms, and was staring after him in a defiant manner. At the front door Jen heard his name called softly, and Isabella, with a rich color in her usually pale cheeks, came flying after him.

"Major, Major, I have heard all! I have been listening at the window."

"Then you know that I am aware of your deception about the handkerchief?"

"Yes. I did not speak truly," stammered Isabella; "but I could not act otherwise. It was to save a certain person."

"Ah! you know who committed the first of the crimes," cried Jen, seizing the young girl's arm. "Confess. It was Dr. Etwald who stole the wand of sleep."

"No! No! Not Dido! Oh!" cried Isabella, in a tone of anguish, "it was my mother."

CHAPTER XIX.

Major Jen recoiled from the young girl in amazement.

"Your mother," he muttered, hardly believing the evidence of his own senses. "Your mother stole the devil-stick?"

"Yes, but she did not know what she was doing. Wait! Listen!" said Isabella, much agitated. "I told you falsehoods before to shield my mother. Now that I know you have discovered so much, that you are bent on punishing Dr. Etwald, I must tell you the truth, so that she may not be dragged down to ruin. Come with me, Major. Quickly!"

Without glancing towards the house, Isabella ran down a secluded path which led through a kind of shrubbery to the flower garden, and then disappeared into a light cane summer-house, which was constructed in the Chinese fashion and overgrown with greenery. Major Jen followed her as rapidly as his more mature age would permit him.

"Major," she said, when, somewhat out of breath, he had taken his seat beside her in the summer-house, "although I relate what inculpates my mother, it is to save her that I do so. Both she and I are in a net woven by Dido."

"Ah! poor Maurice always mistrusted that negress."

"He was right to do so. Oh, you do not know what a terrible woman she is. For years both I and my mother have been under her influence and have submitted to her will. Now, I see her in her true colors, and I am determined to speak the truth. Save myself and my mother, Major, for we are innocent. Dr. Etwald and Dido are the guilty persons."

"They killed Maurice. They stole the body."

"I can swear they did," said Isabella, with emotion. "I have only been certain of these things since our last interview. I lied to you then because Dido said if I told the truth she would accuse my mother of the murder."

"I see," said Jen, thoughtfully, "and I can understand their motives. Dido wished you to marry Etwald."

"Yes; and it was to force my mother into compliance with that desire that the whole of these crimes were committed. Dido——"

"One moment, Miss Dallas. What influence has Etwald over the negress?"

"He is the possessor of the Voodoo stone. It is a small black pebble of a peculiar shape," explained the girl, "and it was brought from Africa to Barbadoes over a hundred years ago. The negroes believe that a spirit dwells in this stone, and that when it is worshipped the indwelling devil can work woe to those against whom the possessor of the stone bears malice. You can have no idea how the talisman is venerated by all the blacks; they would go miles to look on it to adore it; they would burn down a city to possess it; to gain it they would murder a hundred human beings. Well, Dr. Etwald was in Barbadoes some years ago, and he gained possession of this Vodoo stone. He has used it while here to intimidate Dido. While he holds it, she will not dare to disobey him, and all this plotting and assassination, designed to bring about my marriage with Dr. Etwald, has been designed by him, and carried out by Dido, solely on account of his ownership of the Voodoo stone. You know that she calls him the great master! Well, now you can guess the reason for her servile worship of this man."

"And how about the theft of this devil-stick?"

"Oh, on the night it was stolen I was seated on the verandah after dinner, and I saw my mother come out with Dido. They did not know I was there, as I sat in the shade. I saw Dido speak to my mother and point towards your house. Then she waved her hands before my mother's face, whereupon my mother turned and walked swiftly past where I was seated. I saw her face; it was quite white, and her eyes were open and glassy. When my mother disappeared Dido re-entered the house. At once—terrified by my mother's action—I ran down the little path which leads to the gate, and followed her out on to the road. She went into your grounds by the postern in the wall. I saw her cross the lawn, and enter the smoking-room, wherein a lamp was burning. When she came out, it was with the devil-stick in her hand. I recognized it by the golden handle. I reached home before she did, and again hid on the verandah. Dido re-appeared as my mother came up the walk, and took the devil-stick from her. Then she led her indoors."

WONDERFUL RETRIBUTION.

An Incident of the Workings of Canada's Government Protection.

In September, 1904, two white men entered the Lesser Slave lake country, in the Canadian Northwest, ostensibly prospecting for gold. Subsequently the Indians reported that one of the men seemed to be traveling alone, an observant Cree boy adding, "The white man's dog won't follow that fellow any more." The answers given by Charles King of Mount Pleasant, Utah, regarding his lost companion, Hayward, were not satisfactory. King was arrested, and there began one of the most splendid bits of detective work of which Canada has record.

Sergeant Anderson turned over three ashes of a campfire and found three hard lumps of flesh and a small piece of skull bone. In front stretched a little slough, or lake, which seemed a likely place in which to look for evidence. Setting Indian women to fish up with their toes any hard substance they might feel in the ooze, Anderson secured a stickpin of unusual make and a sovereign case. He systematically drained the lake and found a shoe with a broken eyed needle sticking in it. The campfire ashes examined with the microscope yielded the missing part of the needle's broken eye and established unmistakable connection between lake and camp.

The maker of the stickpin in London, England, was communicated with by cable, and the Canadian government summoned a Mr. Hayward to come from England to identify the trinkets of his murdered brother. Link by link the chain grew. It took eleven months for Sergeant Anderson to get his complete case in shape. The mounted police brought from Lesser Slave lake to Edmonton forty Indian and half breed witnesses. The evidence was placed before the jury, and the Indians returned to their homes. A legal technicality cropping up, the trial had to be repeated in its entirety, and once more those forty men, women and children left their traps and fishing nets and came into Edmonton to tell their story.

The result was that Charles King was found guilty of the murder of Edward Hayward and paid the death penalty. The trial cost the government of Canada over $30,000—all to avenge the death of one of the wandering units to be found in every corner of the silent places, an unknown prospector.—Agnes Dean Cameron in Century.

A Hunter.

He never shot a lion,
He never hunted bear;
He never chased a glub glub
Or a boojick to its lair;
He never tamed a snortle
Or laid a yapper low.
And yet he is a hunter
Whom it's worth your while to know.

In breathless expectation
He creeps on hands and knees,
On unfamiliar pathways,
Afraid to even sneeze.
He is indeed a hunter,
A martyr of the chase,
Who hunts his collar button
Underneath the dressing case!

Good Rule to Follow.

What is worth doing is worth doing well; and with little more trouble at first, much trouble afterwards may be avoided.—Max Mueller, Letter to John Bellows.

Up to 1789 the chief water works of New York City was in Chatham street, now Park row. The water was carted about the city in casks and sold from carts.

Ways of Women

Employments Open to Women.

Fifty years ago there were but few employments open to women, and definite training in preparation for work was almost unknown. In every class of work to-day women with skill and training can command good salaries. Wages are undoubtedly higher than they were fifty years ago, but the cost of living is much greater. General averages of wages, in computing the absolute gain to men and women, are of little use. In almost every trade a few receive high wages, and therefore averages conceal the wages of a large number of workers. Again, the worth of wages depends upon the cost of living, and income from wages depends, not on what a woman receives per day, but upon the number of days in the year she works. Statements of wages are vitiated by the bias of opinion of those who interpret or collect data. Reformers often estimate wages lower than they are, to show the need for reform. Suporters of political administrations are tempted to statements as roseate as possible, and often misleading.

As to occupations, women are in the majority in only nine, viz., musicians or teachers of music, school teachers, boarding house keepers, housekeepers, laundresses, nurses, servants, stenographers and typewriters. Among the occupations in which there are about as many women as men, as nearly as can be estimated, are: Acting, architecture, journalism, music, government employements, janitor service, agencies, bookkeeping, salesmanship, stenography, typewriting, telegraphy, telephone service, baking, pottery, confectionery making and selling, clock and watchmaking, bookbinding and photography.

Many new vocations are being rather cautiously, but successfully, taken up by women. They are cutting and setting gems, hammering brass and silver, and working in gold. Beekeeping, mushroom culture and fruit anl poultry raising are profitably pur- and poultry raising are profitably pur- ald.

Girl Who Is "Too Good" for Him.

No man ever yet got married without proclaiming humbly, at least to his personal friends, that he had found a girl who was too good for him, and in a sense he is usually right. Nevertheless, to proclaim it is a left-handed self-compliment, for if he selected a girl who was not good enough for him, it would not speak very well for his judgment, good taste, and self-respect. Of course, such a statement is usually moonshine, and yet withal a perfectly proper ante-nuptial frame of mind.

It should not be overly persistent, however. Unless a man gets over the feeling that his wife is better than he is, there will be trouble sooner or later. A team to trot along steadily and without friction must be evenly matched. To insure a happy married life, it must be discovered reasonably soon after the ceremony, that one mate is just as good as the other. That ought to be admitted whether it is so or not, for the same inconsistency which will cause a man to marry a girl who is too good for him, will cause him to divorce her because she is not good enough. On the other hand, if she is really too good she should keep it to herself, for he will be sure to think she is not good enough if she insists upon being considered too good.

Anyway, comparisons are odious. As a matter of fact, no woman is too good for the man she consents to marry.

Variation of the Russian.

Accordion pleated chiffon cloth in the new, delicate, pinkish lavender shade forms the overdrapery of this gown. It is decidedly Russian in tendency, with its somewhat bloused, full bodice, its close-fitting belt at the natural waistline and its smock of chiffon ending well below the knees. The foundation is of soft pink satin, this use of lavender and pink together giving the two-toned cloudy effect which is one of the most distinctive touches of the season. Bands of dull, bronze gold trimming outline the neck of the bodice, forming the sleeve trimming and belt. A ribbon of soft gold mesh is run through the upturned satin facing of the smock and tied in a soft bow in the back.

Buttons and Buttonholes.

Even such simple things as a button and buttonhile require proper treatment to insure neatness. When buttoning or unbuttoning a garment, forcing the button across the width of the buttonhole will soon tear out the latter. For the same reason buttons with only two holes are better than those with four, and should be so placed that their holes will be on a line with the length of the buttonhole. Even with a four-holed button, one seamstress sews through only two—those on the farthest corners.

How to Fold a Dress.

To fold a dress skirt properly for packing and to avoid the crease down the middle of the front breadth, fasten the skirt band and pin the back to the middle of the band in front. Lay the skirt on a table or other flat surface right side out, with the front breadth down. Smooth out all creases and lay folds flat. Then begin at the outer edges and roll each side toward the center back until the rolls meet. In this way the hang of the skirt is not injured, there are no wrinkles and the front breadth is smooth and flat. If the skirt is too long for the trunk fold it over near the top and place a roll of tissue paper under the fold.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Nattier blue, that exquisite shade, bids fair to be most fashionable. One sees it in the newest dress fabrics and silks.

Tulle is to be worn not only as a foundation material of many dresses, but as the trimming and decoration of many others.

Some dainty shirt waists, fastening under a plaited frill in the center front, are made of printed bordure batiste in pretty colors.

With the double blouse of chiffon and a contrasting material a plisse or lace frill is worn when a jacket is slipped on for outside wear.

In ready-made petticoats modern jersey cloth is most used for tops, since it gives ample warmth without objectionable bulkiness.

Depth of color is one of the pronounced features of this winter. One sees it in deep blue blacks which have tried to steal the tone of Hamburg grapes.

Skirts of new corsets are long and close and they are pulled farther in the usual way by stocking supporters at the front and sides and often at the back.

Black satin gowns are smart this season, but they are veiled with tunics of embroidered net of chiffon, covered with a jerseylike bodice of heavy embroidery net and jet combined or silk with jet.

The American Woman.

The women of America are wonderful! Their versatility, acuteness, splendid mental energy, high ideals, firm grasp of subjects, added to their charming manners, tasteful dress, graceful deportment, are refined and feminine to a degree. We all know the brainy, masculine woman the world over.

But the American, while she may be masculine in brain and alertness, is also feminine—emotional, if you like—in her make-up. She is a truly charming type.

The American woman is also very practical, very inventive. She develops an idea, and she works out her idea to its utmost possibilities. It may be only a new sort of neck-band supporter, but she does not belittle her hobby. She brings her imagination into her work. She may be utilitarian, but the successful business woman is artistic to her finger tips. —London Express.

A Charming Girl.

The greatest charm in a young girl is her simplicity, and by simplicity one does not mean stupidity. The charm of real simplicity is an entire absence of boldness, cynicism and assumed worldly wisdom, so often met with in the modern girl. Absolute candor and sincerity are the attributes of true simplicity, and they are characteristics which invariably attract men when choosing their future wives.—Home Notes.

Frock for a Child.

Often we make the mistake of thinking frocks for little girls ought to be fluffy with lace and ruffles; but the truth is that almost every child shows to better advantage in simple clothes, and if, instead of spending money on yards and yards of trimming, a better quality of material is employed, the dress is sure to be a success.

Women and Their Hats.

Millinery has been much in vogue this past year. In the previous year, when the No Hat League was started, you used to see women with no hats. Of late, it has been the other way around. Lots of us have seen hats walking about, but no women.—Bystander.

Governing the Child.

Let children understand that disobedience is sure to be followed by punishment. A child seldom disobeys nature more than once in touching a hot lamp glass. It will soon learn to obey you as well. Never allow it to ask why. You know; that is enough.

Order in the Pantry.

Nothing is so unsightly in a pantry or closet as a number of tin lids pitched loosely on a shelf. One woman has overcome this effect by nailing a narrow strip of wood to cleats about ten inches under her high pot shelf in the pantry. In the space thus made the lids are slipped. The handles prevent slipping and they can be had at a minute's notice. Ranged according to sizes, hunting for the right lid does not waste one's time.

The Girl You'd Hate to Trust.

The girl who openly boasts of the married men who are in love with her.

The girl who says she "dotes on children," but whose small brothers and sisters shun her.

The girl who is horrified by calling a spade by its "right name," but whose taste in literature is lurid.

The girl who is careless to return small loans. This habit may spring from heedlessness, but it bears watching.

She who dresses lavishly on a small income. There is a distinction between looking well on a little and cutting a splurge on nothing a year.

The girl who gushes over her love for her parents, while she lets her overworked mother mend and launder for her, and spends more than her father can afford.

She who is prinked out for show views—and a sight when caught unawares. The man who contemplates matrimony should make it a point to see his Angelina off guard.

She who is sugary sweet until she thinks she is alone. Far better be like al alligator pear with the roughness on the outside than resemble the tempting wild plum with bitterness within.

She who has great tales of her prowess as a worker, but who never sees any work to be done. The real workers of the world rarely discuss what they do, and never need jogs for its doing.

What Makes the Charming Woman.

Woman is most charming when she is bright and animated. A tear may arouse pity, but it is a smile that commands admiration. She must not be always sparkling—that is, monotonous and wearing; the perpetual flashing of diamonds fatigues the eyes. She must have her sober moments, if only to throw into higher relief, by contrast, the moments when she is gay. A woman is always charming when she is tender and sympathetic. She may dazzle when she is merry, but when she is gentle and full of sympathy she enchants the man's heart. Probably she charms the most when she is most unconscious of her power. A woman is really amiable when she is good-natured. Sarcasm may amuse when it is directed against some one else, but it does not win any one's heart. Good temper is an attraction even in a plain woman. When a woman has that, in addition to her other winning qualities—when she is natural in her manners, not self-conscious, animated, tender, and gentle—then indeed she is charming to all the world.

THE NEWEST STYLES IN HAIR DRESSING.

CURLS, COIL AND TWIST. COILS AND FOUR PLAITS. COILS ONLY.

Fashion is replacing the huge turban coiffure with a softly marcelled crown, around which are wound soft flat coils or braids, and occasionally a curl or two, or maybe three. The parting on the forehead is not clearly defined, being merely formed by the undulation of the hair. Fancy hairpins, twisted ribbons, gold and silver tissue, and circlets of small leaves make a pleasing addition to these soft coils and plaits.

Attractive Evening Bodice.

This effectively designed bodice for demi-toilette occasions is of black ninon, with V-cut yoke and sleeves of cream net trimmed with narrow jet insertions. Hanging jet ornaments appear in front suspended from a band of jetted neck thickly spangled with small jet sequins. A blouse of this sort is not beyond the ability of a good home seamstress if she is at all capable.

Saving Is Earning.

Household economy does not consist in seeing how much a family can go without, for a certain amount, but rather how much they can have for the limited allowance. Have the meals just as palatable, the home just as inviting, the clothing just as good as the family purse will reasonably allow, but never buy foolishly or waste carelessly or thoughtlessly. Remember that the housewife who saves a dollar by wise management has earned that dollar just as surely as did her husband in office or workroom.

Mouth Wash.

An excellent mouth wash may be made by mixing 1 ounce of carbonate of soda with one pint of water. Bottle for use. After cleaning the teeth as usual, rinse with a little of this liquid. It has a fine preservative effect on the teeth and cleanses the tongue and gums.

To Make Frills.

In many cases the ruffler of the sewing machine is hard to adjust. To gather any goods, simply lengthen the stitch to seven or eight to the inch, and stitch. The thread can then be drawn tight and the frill made as full as desired.

Civil War Stories

"Who Is My Neighbor?"

Behold the happy warrior! He who, lifted high,
Conspicuous object in a nation's eye,
Looks forward persevering to the last
From well to better, daily self-surpassed;
And while the mortal mist is gathering, draws
His breath in confidence of heaven's applause.
This is the happy warrior.

For two days the battle of the Wilderness had been raging. Slowly but surely, every inch of ground contested, the Federal forces pressed the sullen rebel foe before them. The citizens of the village, Warren, pallid with anxiety for friends, scowled with bitter hate and muttered curses at the boys in blue, who marched slowly through the village to an advantageous position a few miles beyond, where they were to encamp for the night. Shortly after the main body of the army had passed, a group of officers, accompanied by a squad of cavalry, dashed through the village en route for the encampment.

They had proceeded scarcely a mile when a violent storm burst suddenly upon them.

An old farm house about a stone's throw from the road was the only building in sight. With a hasty order to their men to proceed to camp, the officers put their spurs to their horses, and in a moment were under the roof of the porch, which, after the Southern fashion, extended across the front of the house.

A gaunt woman appeared in response to their summons, of whom their spokesman requested shelter from the storm and something to eat, promising substantial payment.

Ushering them silently into a cheerless room, devoid of furniture, except a few chairs and an old pine table, she motioned them to be seated, while she placed before them a loaf of corn bread, some bacon and a pitcher of water, after which she withdrew to a corner of the room, where on a rude pallet, protected from the keen mountain air by a ragged coverlet, lay a sleeping child. Crouching on the floor, she seemed oblivious to all that was passing around her.

The weary soldiers partook gratefully of the coarse fare, seasoning their repast with reminiscences of the fight that day. They chatted, too, upon trivial subjects, and now and then a laugh rang out upon the air. True, they had beheld blood and carnage all day, but the strain was removed for a little while, and they thankfully accepted the respite.

One among the group, a plain, quiet man, whom all treated with deference, mingled but seldom in the conversation; but as his keen eyes roved around the humble apartment and its miserable occupants, upon whom biting poverty was so plainly depicted, his falcon glance grew dim, and his head drooped upon his breast in apparently sad reflection.

Having finished their repast the officers arose, and, producing their pipes, prepared to indulge in the soldier's luxury, a smoke.

Rousing from his abstraction, the quiet man spoke a few words to his companions in a low tone, pointing to a rude porch at the back of the house, protected from the fury of the storm. They having departed thence, he approached the woman, who still crouched on the floor.

"Madam," said he, gently, "you seem to be in trouble. Cannot we assist you in some way?"

Looking up with dazed, horror-stricken eyes, which seemed to have lately gazed upon some dreadful sight, the woman slowly shook her head and resumed her former position. "The Federal encampment cannot be far distant," insisted the firm, kindly voice. "If you will tell me your name, you and this little one," pointing to the sleeping child, "shall be provided for."

"All we want, Robby and me, is to die," answered the woman despairingly, "and that," laughing wildly, "we're likely to do before long. Come." Rising and passing swiftly through the room, she crossed the hall into another apartment, followed by the officer.

Pointing to a bed whereon was stretched the lifeless body of a man, she exclaimed:

"There's my grief. Can you help me? Can you give me back my husband, killed by your men this morning?"

Kneeling beside the dead man, she abandoned herself to grief. The little boy, awakened by his mother's lamentations, crept sobbing into the room, whither the other officers also came.

Motioning them to retire, the man, who looked into the cannon's mouth unflinching, with moistened eyes raised the grief-stricken creature from the inanimate clay to which she clung so fondly, and, by gentle questioning, ascertained the particulars of the tragedy.

With streaming tears she told how her husband, Powell Hunter, had been shot while on picket duty that morning.

"He was here last night," sobbed she, "cold and hungry, but he would scarcely eat a bite for fear of Robby and me starving. Oh, my husband," throwing herself on the heart that would never beat for her again, "take me with you."

Unable to induce her to speak again, the officer left the room and joined his companions. The storm having abated they rode rapidly away.

Early next morning a detachment of soldiers rode up to the farm house. All was quiet. Entering they proceeded to the room where the dead man lay, his wife in a swoon beside him, the little boy asleep on the floor.

With difficulty reviving the poor woman, they explained that they had been sent to bury her husband. In those sad times all was done with dispatch. A grave having been hastily dug, in it the mortal remains of the poor victim of insatiate war was laid to rest, his monument the everlasting mountains whose towering peaks pointed solemnly to heaven, as if invoking the vengeance of God upon the diabolical schemers who had wrought the bloodshed and ruin which devastated the land.

Who can fathom the despair of the broken-hearted woman, as she gazed upon that lonely grave? A widow, penniless, friendless!

With rough sympathy, the leader of the party informed her of his chief's commands to escort her in safety wherever she wished to go. She shook her head drearily.

"I have nowhere to go. I am a Northern woman. No one would take me in."

"Perhaps," suggested the soldier, "you had better come to the camp and talk to the General."

Acquiescing with the indifference of despair, the woman and her boy rode off with the men, and were shortly in the General's tent. Here, yielding to the kind questioning of the chief, she disclosed her sad story.

She was a Pennsylvanian by birth, wooed and won by the Virginia farmer eight years before. All went well until the rebellion broke out. "He never believed in secession," she said, "but when his State went he could not hold back. He said last night it was bad to fight against the old flag. Father and mother are old and poor, but I know they'd be glad to have the child and me, if we could only get to them."

The General's eyes brightened.

"Give me their address," said he, "and I will see that you reach them safely."

Entering an inner apartment of the tent he returned in a moment with a sealed envelope, which he placed in her hand, charging her not to open it until she reached her destination. Shaking her hand, he turned hastily away to escape her expressions of gratitude.

The widow and her child, amply supplied with food, started immediately on their journey northward, guarded by a strong detachment of soldiers, who accompanied them beyond the lines, and placed them upon the cars which would convey them to their journey's end.

Here, tenderly cared for by her parents, Mrs. Hunter lay for weeks in the delirium of fever. At length, however, reason was restored, and resignation and thankfulness for mercies remaining took the place of rebellious despair.

As soon as her strength permitted she recounted to her sympathizing parents the sorrows that had befallen her and the kindness she had received from those whom she had considered her enemies.

"Where is the envelope, mother, that the General who was so good to us gave me?"

The mother brought the little package which she had found secured in her daughter's dress, when she fell half-fainting at the door, and at the request of the invalid opened it.

A slip of paper in which were folded two bank notes, whose amount to the eyes of affluence might seem insignificant, to the impoverished widow betokened food and clothing for many a day. Inscribed on the paper (which has been carefully preserved) was: "For Robby Hunter, one of the orphans of this cruel war. Pray for peace."

No signature was attached. But the recording angel wrote the name on his book in letters of light, and He who said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me," will also say, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into thy reward." Modest and tender, brave and merciful, concealing his good deeds beneath the mantle of silence, when will the world find another like him, our own Grant?

The gallant old soldier has confronted his last foe—Death. But, though the "Great Conqueror" has seized all that is mortal of the hero, the immortal soul that shone from the steadfast eyes is beyond Death's power to grasp. Oh, may the prayers of the helpless and suffering whom he has befriended have ascended as holy incense to the "great white throne," lifting the shadows of the dark valley through which the nation's beloved hero, weary with earthly suffering, passed with unfaltering feet, looking forward to the land of Beulah—beyond.

Their General.

Nothing could better show the love of the Confederate army for their commander, General Lee, than the incident told by Prof. W. W. Smith in "Southern Historical Papers." At one time, during the Battle of Spottsylvania, the Army of Virginia was severed, and ruin seemed inevitable. A quick order was given, summoning two brigades from the trenches, a feeble force against the thick-massed foe.

As the regiments stood, ready to attack, an officer on an iron-gray horse was seen to ride to the front. He uttered no word, but pointing at the foe, advanced to lead the charge. As he did so, he turned his face toward the army. The sight of that face, full of calm resolve, sent a thrill of dismay through each heart, for there, amid the already whistling bullets, rode the idolized general of the army—Lee.

To throw their bodies in front of him was the involuntary impulse which seized the devoted soldiers. Gordon, commander of the charging column, saw the situation. Dashing up, he laid his hand on the bridle rein of the chief, saying:

"General Lee, this, sir, is not your place. We will drive the enemy back. This is the Army of Virginia. They have never failed you, and they will not now. Will you, boys?"

"No! No!" burst from the eager lines. "General Lee to the rear! We can't do anything until General Lee goes to the rear!"

An officer reverently led the iron-gray through the opening lines, while the ringing voice of Gordon sounded "Forward!"

The soldiers' faces set in grim determination. The word passed from mouth to mouth: "Remember that General Lee is looking at us!" and the army rushed on to successful attack.

Does Not Stimulate

Ayer's Sarsaparilla does not stimulate. It does not make you feel better one day, then as bad as ever the next. It is not a strong drink. No reaction after you stop using it. There is not a drop of alcohol in it. You have the steady, even gain that comes from a strong tonic and alterative. We wish you would ask your doctor about this. He knows. Trust him. Do as he says. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

What are Ayer's Pills? Liver Pills. How long have they been sold? Nearly sixty years. Do doctors recommend them? Ask your own doctor and find out.

Editorial Notes

Kern is All Right.

While the HERALD editor's opinion is not likely to cut much ice in state politics, yet we like to express it occasionally just so our readers may know how we feel, and we feel that the party turned a high card when it nominated John W. Kern for United States senator. Mr. Kern is a friend of the common people, and the common people should be his friends. We also believe he is a man with great ability, good moral character and cannot be bought, sold or traded by any ring or faction. If he is elected the whole people will be equally represented, not just the democrat party, but all the parties.

Enthusiasm Performs Wonders

WHEN the score is 1 to 1 in the last half of the ninth—your team at the bat—2 men on bases and no one out, there's something doing right away—you are up in arms yelling—rooting—doing all you can to rattle the pitcher—make him blow up—go ballooning—it's enthusiasm and it often turns the tide of battle from defeat to victory.

This same brand of enthusiasm directed towards Men's Clothes Perfection is pretty apt to turn out for YOU—Clothes that are right—that satisfy you as being right—It's the kind of clothes you want—the kind you get if made by

(BY TAVENNER)

A deficit of four million dollars for the first twenty-six days of April!

A deficit of more than nineteen million dollars so far this fiscal year!

A deficit of $190,057,887.86 since June 30, 1907!

These are features of Taft "cut-to-the-quick" economy, about which so much is heard everywhere save in Washington.

Here are more illustrations of a republican "business" administration:

Marble baths for senators!

Autos to carry them 100 rods between their offices and the capitol!

Touring cars for the president, vice-president and "Uncle Joe."

White house receptions which "rival the glory of Napoleon's court," at one of which, according to the Washington Post, "a dazzling ravine of gold blazed before the vision."

Another group of "cut-to-the-quick" economies includes:

More than $2,500 for appolinaris water for the senators.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars to keep the senators in vaseline, castor oil, olive oil, bromo quinine, hair tonic, costly perfumes, glycerine, bergamot, nail brushes, clothes brushes, traveling expenses in attending funerals, etc., etc.

Then we come to this item which stands by itself:

The addition in the last eight years of 99,225 federal officeholders to the pay rolls of the republic, at an increase of expense to the people of more than seventy million dollars. This item helps to explain why it is costing the Taft administration more than twice as much to run the government than it did Cleveland.

How does this riotous extravagance effect the treasury? is asked These figures tell us:

Since June 30, 1907, the total balance in the general fund has dropped from $272, 061,445.47 to $82,003,557.61. With an average daily deficit eating its way into this remaining eighty-two million dollars, but a short time can elapse before the government will have to sell more bonds to secure more money to meet more extravagances. Outstanding bond issues are national debts.

How does all this concern the average citizen? This is how:

The per capita appropriation by congress jumped from $6 in 1890 to $12.40 in 1909. Since the government raises the bulk of its revenue at the custom houses and internal revenue offices, you, Mr. Reader, are paying for republican extravagance in increased prices.

There is no use of your correspondent reporting further on the proposed investigation of the sugar underweighing frauds, or the alleged illegal sale of rich Philippine sugar lands to the sugar trust. The trust has shown itself powerful enough to prevent a probe by congress. Just how it was able to protect itself from an investigation the writer does not pretend to know. All that is known is the nine resolutions providing for a probe of this thieving trust have been introduced in this congress, and everyone of them has been chloroformed. The brother of President Taft was the attorney for the sugar trust, and Attorney General Wickersham was former a law partner of this brother. The attorney general says the sugar trust should not be investigated, and the president sustains this view.

Help for the Editor

Maybe the editor don't belong to your church or lodge or political party, but he is doing a lot more than you have dreamed of doing to keep your town on the map. And he can't paint it in glowing colors and buy venetian red to do it with forever, unless he is a man of independent fortune. If he's the right sort he won't ask you to advertise or subscribe unless you get one hundred cents for a dollar, but he can sing the town's virtues in a much cleaner tenor if his advertising columns are well filled and some good citizens occasionally help him by writing a little for publication themselves instead of telling him what to do.—Fairport Herald.

Moving Pictures in the Church

"Jane Addams says that on a Sunday night in Chicago one-sixth of the entire population is packed into four hundred and sixty-six places of entertainment," says Woman's Home Companion for May. "Churches? No—moving picture shows! The churches on Sunday night in Chicago, and, we fear, in many other places, are not conspicuously crowded. The problem is this: If the Chicago churches had presented an up-to-date moving picture show, instead of a sermon, would the crowd have followed the films? Inasmuch as the church admission is free and the theater admission is from five to twenty-five cents, it is a fair assumption that the churches would have been filled. Now, if the object of the Sunday night service is primarily to reach the crowd on the street, and if, as has been shown, the moving picture is a much more vivid and attractive way of reaching that crowd than is a sermon, why, in all seriousness, don't churches give us the thrilling stories of the Old Testament, its beautiful tales of the New Testament and its modern illustrations of christian heroism in this and other lands, in the up-to-date form—in moving pictures? They may answer that they cannot get hold of the films and the machine, but this answer is not a good answer. Excellent sacred pictures are shown in the present professional entertainments, and many illustrations of modern heroism, self-sacrifice and virtue are in every program. Moreover, a demand for films for church use would enlarge the supply. Moving picture machines are not expensive and can be easily operated. You can do it in your church. Why don't you?

"May 1 will be a favorable time for independent Democrats to move over into the non-Republican party."—Indianapolis Star (Rep.)

On the contrary, what is left of the non-Republican party shows an intention to move over among the Democrats.

Democrats will concede that the criticism heaped upon the regular Republicans by the insurgents is entirely proper and thoroughly justified. They are also naturally inclined to encourage the counter attack of the regulars upon the insurgents. It is certain that the two wings are going to fight and there are many reasons why the fight should be to a finish.

Some time ago Senator Aldrich, the Republican leader in the United States senate, declared that the government was costing the people $300,000,000 a year more than it should cost. And now Senator Beveridge, whose voice has never been raised against extravagance, pretends to be greatly tickled over the report that Aldrich is going to retire from the senate at the end of his term.

Jim Watson showed the Beveridge people last week that he was still something of a force in the Sixth district. He managed to secure an indorsement of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, and that is sufficient to keep him on friendly terms with the old guard, to-wit, Taft, Cannon, Aldrich and their adherents in Indiana.

The Ballinger-Pinchot investigation brings out many interesting things. For instance, Director Smith of the geological survey, testified that Pinchot had spoken of Ballinger as a "yellow dog." The same witness also testified that in a conversation with him, Governor Pardee "insinuated that Ballinger was either a fool or a knave and rather intimated the latter as his favorite hypothesis." Much more has been put in evidence to the same general effect. And yet Ballinger is Mr. Taft's secretary of the interior and a part of the "administration" which Mr. Beveridge's insurgent convention "indorsed."

Butler People Have Absolute Proof of Deeds at Home

It's not words, but deeds that prove true merit.

The deeds of Doan's Kidney Pills.
For Butler kidney sufferers.
Have made their local reputation.

Proof lies in the testimony of Butler people who have been cured to stay cured.

Mrs. Charlotte Steele, Pearl St., Butler, Ind., says: "I suffered from rheumatic pains in my back and sides and I was subject to dull headaches. I had but little strength or ambition and was all run down. When my attention was called to Doan's Kidney Pills, I procured a supply at Stone's drug store and began using them. In a short time they cured me." (Statement given April 10, 1906.)

On December 19, 1908, Mrs. Steele confirmed the above statement and added: "I have no hesitation in again endorsing Doan's Kidney Pills. The cure this remedy effected in my case has been permanent and at the present time I am free from every symptom of kidney complaint."

A WAY TO WOO SLEEP.

Watch a Light Spot on the Wall Till Slumber Comes.

Some months ago a friend informed me that he was a great sufferer from sleeplessness. He had experimented with all manner of remedies—baths, drugs, exercise, dieting—but could find no relief, writes H. Addington Bruce in the Delineator.

"How about the 'spot on the wall' cure?" I asked him.

"I haven't heard of that. What is it?"

"It's very simple," I told him, "yet very efficacious. I presume that some light from the street lamp or the moon usually gets into your bedroom? Well, where it strikes the wall you will be pretty sure to find spots that seem to stand out vividly from the dark background. Select one of these patches of brightness, one preferably not much larger than a silver dollar. Settle down comfortably in such a way that it will be within easy range of your vision without straining to see it. Then gaze at it steadily.

"Do not, however, try to stare it out of countenance, so to speak. Instead, let the muscles of your eyes relax until the spot appears to have a confused outline. At the same time, if possible, think of nothing but the one idea—'I am going to sleep!'

"Before long your eyes will begin to feel tired, and they will gradually close. Open them and once more gaze at the spot on the wall. Again they will close. Again open them. Presently you will find it impossible to open them, and the next instant you will be asleep."

Recently I again met him and found him full of enthusiasm.

"That was a splendid scheme," said he. "I sleep like a top nowadays—am asleep almost as soon as I touch the bed."

HE GUESSED RIGHT.

Now See if You Can Tell Which Fair One He Selected.

A certain Turk, according to the story, was once married to a veiled lady in white in the presence of the sultan. As soon as the ceremony was concluded the bride mysteriously disappeared.

The groom was led into an adjoining room, where stood twelve ladies all dressed in white, but without veils. "Choose from the twelve," exclaimed the sovereign, "her that is your bride." As the man had never seen her face the command bewildered him.

"If you make a mistake," added his majesty, "your life shall pay the forfeit."

The poor man walked up and down the row of beauties, but saw nothing whatever to aid his choice.

"You have only a minute left!" yelled the sultan in anger. "Choose at once!"

Ten of the ladies, the man noticed, gave him nothing else than a stony stare. One of the remaining two frowned, the other smiled. "The frowning one," he thought, "is my bride, for she expresses her displeasure and impatience at my ignorance. "No," he said to himself; "it must be the smiling one, for she desires to invite me to her."

After debating the subject in his mind until his time was up he boldly made a selection from the two. He was successful. He had regained his bride. Which was she—the one who frowned or the one who smiled?

Taste and Smell.

Physiologists have long known that many sensations ordinarily ascribed to taste are in reality due to smell, but this fact has been made clearer than before by the investigations of German savants. Air enters the olfactory chamber, where the nerves connected with the sense of smell are centered, both through the nostrils and through an inlet leading from the mouth. In consequence a breath of perfumed air manifests its odor not only when it is breathed in, but when it is breathed out. For this reason we are sometimes deceived as to the source of the pleasure we derive from things taken into the mouth, the agreeableness of the impression being due, in some cases, rather to smell than to taste.—New York Herald.

Pre-Columbian Voyages.

Concerning the subject of the discovery of America John Fiske says: "Nothing can be clearer from a survey of the whole subject than that these pre-Columbian voyages were quite barren of results of historic importance. In point of colonization they produced the two ill fated settlements on the Greenland coast and nothing more; otherwise they made no real addition to the stock of geographical knowledge. They wrought no effect whatever upon the European mind. In no sense was any real contact established between the eastern and western halves of our planet until the great voyage of Columbus in 1492."

Nature's Work.

There is not a moment of any day of our lives when nature is not producing scene after scene, picture after picture, glory after glory, and working still upon such exquisite and constant principles of the most perfect beauty that it is quite certain that it is all done for us and intended for our perpetual pleasure.—Ruskin.

THE TENANT'S TOAST.

It Carried Off the Prize at Lord Panmure's Dinner.

The following story gives a good idea of the drinking style in England early in the last century. This was what the men of that day took for humor:

Two young English noblemen were paying a visit to Lord Panmure at Brechin castle. One day he wrote a letter to Panlathie, a tenant of his, to come and dine with him, and at the same time he ordered him to bring a sum of money.

Panlathie was aware when he received the order that something was to be done and went prepared.

After dinner Lord Panmure gave the first toast, which was, "All hats in the fire or £20 on the table." Four hats were immediately in the fire.

One of the English noblemen gave the next toast, "All coats in the fire or £50 on the table." Four coats were committed to the flames.

The other English nobleman gave the next toast, "All boots in the fire or £100 pounds on the table." The whole of the boots were committed to the flames.

Panlathie's toast came next, which was, "Two fore teeth in the fire or £200 on the table," and Panlathie pulled his teeth out and threw them into the fire.

The English noblemen looked amazed. They didn't know he had false teeth, and Panlathie went home without hat, coat or boots, but with £600 in his pocket. Lord Panmure thought much of his tenant after that.—Exchange.

THE DEAD SEA.

Old Popular Beliefs About It That Are Not Founded on Fact.

The Dead sea is a remarkable lake, forty-six miles long and from five to nine miles wide, situated in the southeast of Palestine and known from the time of Jerome (340-420 A. D.) as the "Dead" sea, because no fish of any kind have ever been found in its waters. Its surface, which is lower than that of any other body of water known, is 1,292 feet below the level of the Mediterranean. At its northern end it has a depth of about 1,300 feet, while the water at the southern extremity is only from three to twelve feet deep.

The Dead sea is fed by the Jordan from the north, but has no outlet, the water being apparently carried off by evaporation. The water of the Dead sea contains a large amount of the salts of magnesia and soda; as a consequence its specific gravity is high, and bathers float in it with ease.

The popular notions that the Dead sea exhales noxious vapors and that birds cannot fly over its surface and remain unharmed are not founded on fact.

According to tradition, Sodom and Gomorrah, "the cities of the plain," stood on the site now occupied by the Dead sea. This view, however, is no longer entertained, and it is now considered certain that the Dead sea existed in its present state during the days of Abraham and even much earlier.—New York American.

The Oldest Death Sentence.

The oldest death sentence extant is found in the Amherst papyri containing the trials of state criminals in Egypt, about 1300 B. C. The criminal in this case was found guilty of magic, which his judges state "was worthy of death, which he carried out, and he killed himself," apparently by stabbing, as in the Japanese harakiri, which is also of very ancient origin.

Among less civilized peoples drowning would seem to have been the earliest method of legal punishment, for about 450 B. C. the Britons killed their criminals by throwing them into a quagmire. Of other than capital punishments the oldest recorded comes from Chaldea, where it was enacted some 6,000 years ago that when any one maimed a slave "the hand that thus offended should pay him each day a measure of corn."

Victim of Their Fear.

"One thing that makes me positively sick," remarked a young matron vehemently to her husband, "is to have guests sit all through a meal and merely toy with the food as Mrs. So-and-so did last night. And she is the third dinner guest we have had lately who did the same thing. They are afraid of getting stout, and, although they accept invitations to meals, they never eat anything that isn't on their regular diet lists, and the consequence is that the hostess sits up and sees portion after portion of her well prepared food going to waste. It almost spoils the evening for me, and I shan't ask any one of the three here again—unless, by chance, they happen to get so thin they won't mind eating a square meal."—New York Press.

The Noonday of Life

Married people should learn what to do for one another's little ills, and for the ills of children that may come. They are sure sooner or later to have occasion to treat constipation or indigestion. When the opportunity comes remember that the quickest way to obtain relief, and finally permanent cure, is with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the great herb laxative compound. A bottle should always be in the house. It is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed, and if you want to try it before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Illinois. It sold by all druggists at 50c and $1 a bottle. 18-1m writes Mrs. Ethel Newlin, of Liberty Center, Ind., "that I began to take Cardui, for it has cured me, and I will never forget it. "I cannot praise Cardui too highly for what it did for me. Before I began to take it, I was very bad color, suffered great pain and weighed only 105 pounds. Now I have a good color, do not suffer and weigh 125 lbs."

"I Am Glad"

Take CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

Beware of strong, noxious, mineral drugs, that sink into your system, like lead to the bottom of a basin of water.

Cardui is purely vegetable and contains no poisonous minerals, or dangerous drugs.

It is perfectly safe and harmless, for use by old and young, and may be taken, as a tonic, for months, without any possible harmful effect. Try it.

OBITUARY RECORD

BERKEY

Sylvia Lonedith Diehl was born at Hicksville, Defiance county, Ohio, June 9, 1888, moving from there with here parents to Butler, Ind., in 1900.

She gave her heart to God and became a member of the United Brethren church.

She was united in marriage to Dr. H. T. Berkey, July 23, 1908, which proved a short but happy union.

She fell asleep, April 29, 1910, at eleven twenty five p. m., aged 21 years, 10 months and 20 days.

Funeral services from the Methodist church Monday afternoon Interment in the Butler cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire to express our thanks to the neighbors and friends who assisted us during our sad bereavement, and to those who presented the beautiful floral offerings. Also to the quartette for their service and to Mr. Haley for the solo rendered.

DR. H. T. BERKEY,
MR. AND MRS. M. L. DIEHL,
MR. AND MRS. HARDY MYERS.

BAKER

Thomas Oren, youngest child of William and Della Baker, was born May 2, 1907, and departed this life April 29, 1910, aged 2 years, 11 months and 27 days.

He leaves father, mother, one sister and two brothers and other friends and relatives to mourn his early departure.

The funeral was held Monday forenoon at the home on Canal street conducted by Rev. Parker. Interment in the Butler cemetery.

ECK

Russell Earl Eck, son of Mr. and Mrs Fred Eck, was born in DeKalb county, Dec. 8, 1909, departed this life April 29, 1910, at an early age of 1 year, 4 months and 21 days.

Russell was sick but a short time and was patient to the last. Russell was loved by all who knew him. He leaves to mourn his departure father, mother, one sister and a host of relatives and friends. Burial in Clarksville cemetery.

A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is still.
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.

God in his wisdom has recalled
The boon his love had given,
And though the body slumbers here,
The soul is safe in heaven.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our heartfelt thanks to the friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted us during our sad bereavement.

MR. AND MRS. FRED ECK,
MR. AND MRS. B. L. WORTHINGTON,
MR. AND MRS. ERNEST WORTHINGTON.

HAYNES

Esther S. Haynes was born Oct. 29, 1850, in DeKalb county, Indiana, died in Hackly hospital, Muskegan, Mich., April 28, 1910.

She was married to Gotleib Rickley. To this union one child was born, Charles Rickley, of Toledo, Ohio. In 1888 or '89, she was married to John Zull, who died two years later. She was again married to Samuel Porter, who died in 1906.

The deceased was converted when fifteen years of age, uniting with the United Brethren. Moving to Fruitport, Mich., where there was no church of her choice she joined the Congregational church where she remained a faithful member until her death.

She leaves as near relatives beside the son, one brother and two sisters, with many others more distant.

The funeral was held at Zion church on Tuesday, May 3. Her pastor, Rev. Bloomfield, of Muskegan, preaching the sermon. Burial in the Eddy cemetery.

So passes from this time world one of God's children to be with Christ which Paul said was far better.

Card of Thanks

We desire in this humble way to express to our friends and neighbors who were so kind to us in the sad death of our dear wife and mother our sincere thanks. You were all so kind and helpful and we hope and pray when the time of death and sorrow comes to you, you may have sympathy of so many loving friends and neighbors. We also wish to thank one and all for your assistance about the home before and after the burial.

THE KNISELY DRY GOODS CO.

For Your Sake

as well as ours, we ask you to keep posted on the offerings of this store. The Dress Goods, Silks, Staple Dry Goods, Hosiery, Underwear, Waists, Skirts, Suits, Coats, Men's Clothing, Hats, Shoes, Men's Furnishings, Carpets, Rugs, Curtains, etc., and all other departments are very inviting in their display of all that is new and stylish in merchandise for spring and summer—qualities that are right, styles that are the latest, prices that will please.

Hosiery and Underwear Dept.

It has always been our aim to have this department a trade winner. We have seen lots of lines and have selected the best from the lot, and have no hesitancy in saying that what we have selected will give entire satisfaction. The line comprises all the new shades and colorings as well as a full line of blacks. Underwear of all kinds for men, women and children. We have anything you want and will be glad to show you.

MUSLIN UNDERWEAR

Every woman takes great delight in dainty lingerie. The demand for the ready-to-wear in Gowns, Skirts, Corset Covers, Combination Suits, Princess Slips, etc., has grown considerably in the past few years, and we have for this season a variety comensurate with this increased demand. You will find here all the staple numbers made to retail from 25c up, but you will also see the daintiest of creations in both single piece and match sets.

Men's Furnishing Goods

Men of class and men of fashion like to be distinctively dressed to-day just as much so as the women of our country. There is just as much style to a man in his shirt, tie, hosiery, underwear, etc., as there is in his outer garments. It's these little things which round off the finishing touch of the costume proper.

You will find here all the new ideas in this class of merchandise.

Ties of the latest weaves and colors. Shirts made in the very latest mode. Hosiery of distinctive types, yet serviceable.

In lines especially designed for the working man, you will find brands that are a guarantee of fit, comfort and the best of service.

THE whole doctrine of Devoe Lead and Zinc Paint turns on these three points:

1. It is all paint and true paint.
2. It is strongest, and goes farthest paint.
3. It is full measure.

Because these three things are true, Devoe Lead and Zinc Paint takes least gallons for the job; looks best all the time; lasts longer.

There is no such argument for any other paint; there is no other such paint; the man who uses Devoe gets the best he can get, in paint.

Soap Grows on Trees.

Side by side grow the soap tree and the tallow tree. The soap tree yields a product from which is manufactured the purest article of soap that is possible to be made. Indeed, the pulp of the berry is a natural soap, and will make a lather almost like the manufactured article. The soap berry tree is now creating widespread interest and the berries are being imported from Algiers and China.

It will pay to plant the trees and look after their cultivation. The product of the tallow tree also enters into the making of soap, and the two together make a nice combination, and their cultivation should be looked after by those interested in new industries. Besides soap, the soap berries make a very fine oil, and when the virtues of the tallow tree are fully known, it may also yield a fine and profitable oil. The young man who naw plants out a ten or twenty-acre orchard of these two trees may drop into an easy fortune.—Ocala (Fla.) Banner.

Thief Proof.

Some years ago a well known London solicitor, recently deceased, successfully defended a man charged with burglary, and a few days later there came by post a valuable gold hunter watch, with an inscription to the effect that it was a gift from a certain London society, presumably of doubtful practices. Years afterward the solicitor had the watch stolen from his waistcoat pocket, but it came back to him by post with a letter of apology, stating that "we never rob one of our pals."—London Answers.

For the Old Fashioned Coffee Was Killing.

"I always drank coffee with the rest of the family, for it seemed as if there was nothing for breakfast if we did not have it on the table.

"I had been troubled some time with my heart, which did not feel right. This trouble grew worse steadily.

"Sometimes it would beat fast and at other times very slowly, so that I would hardly be able to do work for an hour or two after breakfast, and if I walked up a hill, it gave me a severe pain.

"I had no idea of what the trouble was until a friend suggested that perhaps it might be caused by coffee drinking. I tried leaving off the coffee and began drinking Postum. The change came quickly. I am now glad to say that I am entirely well of the heart trouble and attribute the relief to leaving off coffee and the use of Postum.

"A number of my friends have abandoned the old fashioned coffee and have taken up with Postum, which they are using steadily. There are some people that make Postum very weak and tasteless, but if it is boiled long enough, according to directions, it is a very delicious beverage. We have never used any of the old fashioned coffee since Postum was first started in our house."

THE WRECKING OF AMERICAN HOMES

Divorce Evil Grows At A Rate Which Alarms Sociologists—United States Leads World In Marital Separations With Exception Of Japan

THAT the divorce rate is higher in the United States than any other country excepting Japan may no doubt surprise the many who have never given the matter any serious thought. During the years 1890 to 1900 the increase in our country was three times the rate of population, against two and two-thirds for the ten preceding years. This would mean that one out of every sixteen marriages was disrupted in the divorce courts, and to-day the average is even greater, one in every twelve. South Carolina is the only State in the Union that makes no provision in its statutes for divorce and it records fewer marriages. The west and the middle west are the divorcing states. The State of Washington reaches the highest mark of all, while Montana tallies second, Texas third and Indiana outranked Illinois between the years 1890 and 1900. The most frequent grounds are cruelty and desertion, and women do most of the divorcing. Back of these facts and figures lie the cause for this increase in the annulment of the marriage tie. Who is the most to blame, the man or the woman? The man, it would seem at first glance, since woman does most of the divorcing. She instinctively prefers the home and maternity to outside interests, despite statistics and figures that would seem to tell another story.

Woman is essenially volatile and plastic from years of necessary dependence. She is by instinct and training economical and conservative; so much depends upon her—the judicious management of the home, the wise control of the children and their proper training. Was it not an all wise Providence that made, protected and supported females, the mothers of children? Civilization and society were formed for woman, by man, in his desire to shield and protect her from stress of business and the conditions that differentiate her from her sex. There were three things woman used to take hard (like whooping cough in old age), and they were religion, matrimony and love. Something has transpired to change her ideas, for the old fashioned gospel of life is no longer fashionable. Matrimony is now considered an episode, a thing with which to juggle. Religion is a story of the past and love has as many names and guises as the fertile imagination can conjure. What has taken the place of the old-time friends that were more than anything else responsible for the character of the nation? For every gain there is a measured loss, as we outstrip the waiting things about us. Every desirable condition is attained at the expense of something less desirable, and vice versa. There is more of wealth, luxury, pleasure and more evidence of things material in the world to-day than ever before.

We all know what woman considers as her rights, absolute equality, but, the Chicago Inter Ocean asks, what of man? Has he any rights? Can they be found, and, if so, could they be determined in the present unsettled conditions? Will he continue to meekly support a hustling, voting, masculine wife? One who does not trust him sufficiently to let him care for her best interests without her interference? What has been the incentive for man's endless striving through the ages? Has it not been for the benefit of woman, to give her more of every desirable thing? If this be so, then what is the cause of the deplorable increase in divorce statistics? Man knows as well as woman that the cause of one means the ultimate cause of many, so closely has the human family been united. That woman should establish her identity by becoming a part of the great plan has been conceded from the beginning. That she should become a seeker along all the avenues of learning is as it should be, but the wild struggle for equality will reduce her to the ranks where romance, chivalry and the finer ethics of deportment will no longer be deemed a necessary part of man's training. Will he meekly continue to support a hustling, voting wife? One who does not trust him to care for her best interests without her supervision? Will he be agreeable when he brushes cheek by jowl with his wife, sister, mother or daughter at the polls?

A womanly woman has always been considered the fairest gift to man. A masculine woman is as bad, or even worse, than an effeminate man. When woman grows indifferent or unappreciative man becomes neglectful, then sooner or later deserts the woman who no longer appeals to him, or relies on him for anything but material support. When he does not do this he becomes cruel and resorts to brute force, the primitive method of subduing the weaker one. This may in a measure account for the most frequently named grounds for divorce—i. e., "deseration and cruelty."

The home has been and ever should be considered supreme. It has been the one substantial, tangible thing around which our present form of government, our civilization, has been built. When the home is divided it means disruption. If woman can adjust herself to the new conditions of her creating—the clubs, polls, etc.—it ought to be an easy matter to understand the temperament of the man she has chosen to be the parent of her children and a possible life companion. Her place outside the home, her economic value in the region of man's heretofore undisputed realm, has not yet been established, or, if so, it has been grudgingly conceded by man. Why?

He considers her a home product, a home producer. Lack of sympathetic understanding in each other's ambitions, endeavors, desires is the paramount cause for three-quarters of the unhappy marriages. The ambitions of one may increase while the other remains satisfied with old customs, old conditions. Sentiment, temperament, tastes, plans, even one's conception of love, life, futurity, death may change while the other one resolutely adheres to old theories. Under these conditions, any one of them is sufficiently strong to disturb the harmony of a perfect understanding. Thoughts become diversified, antagonism enters into the scheme of things and happiness, the one condition to which all humanity is forever striving to attain, becomes remote, temporarily, at least, and the divorce courts hear the plea of two more misunderstood creatures who desire to be freed from the irksome bonds of matrimony.

ANTI-PROFANITY CONGRESS.

A Remarkable Gathering to Be Held in Rome Next Month.

A most remarkable international congress against swearing and profane language will be held in Rome next month, when representatives from almost all the anti-profanity leagues in the world will meet. Strangely enough, Italy, which to-day is considered the country where swearing is most prevalent, boasts an institution against swearing which is seven centuries old and still flourishes in Florence under its old title of the Venerable Archconfraternity of Mercy.

Toward the middle of the thirteenth century the Florentine porters used to congregate to drink and gamble in a wineshop on the Via Adimari, and they swore so much and so loudly that one of them, an old man named Piero di Luca Borsi, in the hope of saving his fellow workers' souls and at the same time putting a check on their profanity, proposed to impose a small fine on the swearers. His proposal was accepted and within a short time a large sum of money was collected, which it was decided should be used in some work of expiation.

"In order that the money might benefit both the soul and the body," says an old chronicler, "six stretchers were purchased and destined to each of the six quarters of the city where a squad of porters was detailed to convey in them such persons as were ill to the hospitals or to carry the bodies of those who fell dead or had been murdered to the cemetery. And each porter was entitled to take a coin from the coin box for every trip."

The institution still exists and it counts among its members not only porters but the most prominent citizens of Florence, as well as the King of Italy and the archbishop. It is no longer supported by the fines imposed for swearing, but by voluntary contributions.

OLD AND NEW IN UNION

Modern Methods and Oriental Ways Side by Side in the Mexican Republic.

LEGENDS OF ANCIENT TOWNS.

Sleepy Tourists Awakened at 5 O'Clock A. M. by the Jangling of Sweet Bells.

Every high school girl knows that "Across the Alps lies Italy," but how many educated, well-informed Americans know what lies beyond the Rio Grande river in Mexico? I have now been a month in this wonderland—Old Mexico—writes an Omaha Bee correspondent from Guadalajara, and every minute of those thirty days has been filled with delight. Our eyes have feasted on a riot of color in sky in the tinted colors on old cathedral walls. Every morning tumultuous ringing of church bells din in our ears—not ringing slow—funereal— sedate or in Sunday chime as with us, but each individual bell ringing like our old-time fire bell, all at the same time. Little tenor bells that can be heard only in a quiet interval—ponderous booming brass bells brought from old Spain before our pilgrim fathers took ship on the Mayflower. The little bells swinging in exuberant excitement clear around the wooden beams to which they are strapped with bands of iron or with leather thongs. The great bells disdaining to move are struck with huge iron hammers on the outside rim or with ponderous clapper from within. Such a deafening hurly-burly of bell-ringing never wakened a sleepy tourist at 5 a. m. in any country but Mexico.

The scent of jasmine, of orange and lemon blossom and of roses and the new, almost overpowering odors of gorgeous tropical flowers fill the sun-laden air you breathe. The strange new fruit, sweet and luscious, that tickle our palates and the peppery dishes that surprise our conventional beef-eating Anglo-Saxon stomachs. All these pleasant, new surprises to our senses make the physical man happy. But rich as are these sensations, they sink into insignificance when compared with the appeal this old land makes to our imagination and to our sympathies. No town or hamlet but has its legend of old Aztec days or castle or church of Cortez, the conqueror.

This is Egypt over again. The Orient at our gates, and nothing charms the western mind as does the mystery that lies behind this old civilization. It is as if we saw our ancestors come to life again after 1,000 years. We can see here what was meant by the command, "Take up thy bed and walk," when we see the native unroll himself out of his serape—the garment of one piece—that is at the same time his protection against the weather and his bed by night. We know that to go up on the housetop to pray—here, as in Palestine, is to do the conventional—the flat roof of the house is intended to live upon as well as to shelter the one-story rooms below. The sandals on their feet, the bottle made of whole pig or sheep skins—to carry water or "pulque," the native beverage—are the same we hear about in the "lesson for the day" in our church at home. This is the simple life—and a more contented, carefree, devout people I have never seen.

Side by side with this oriental life, unhampered even with the rudiments of sanitary science, are evidences of the latest word in scientific mining and electrical apparatus, magnificent state and municipal buildings, enlightened provision in the way of state theaters, beautiful public parks, fountains and statuary and, mirabile dictu, we have a new Paris in the City of Mexico, with fine, wide asphalt streets that challenge any city in the world, most beautiful public buildings of the latest French architecture, costing from $2,000,000 to $12,000,000 each; model electric street car lines and cleaner streets than can be found elsewhere on this continent. A vigilant police administration that makes us ashamed of our great metropolitan cities in comparison.

confronting anyone in need of a laxative is not a question of a single action only, but of permanently beneficial effects, which will follow proper efforts to live in a healthful way, with the assistance of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, whenever it is required, as it cleanses the system gently yet promptly, without irritation and will therefore always have the preference of all who wish the best of family laxatives.

The combination has the approval of physicians because it is known to be truly beneficial, and because it has given satisfaction to the millions of well-informed families who have used it for many years past.

To get its beneficial effects, always buy the genuine manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

Stolen Joke.

The shade of the ice baron had introduced himself to Charon on the river trip.

"Quite a roomy bit of water, this Styx," he commented. "Never freezes over, does it?"

"Not so's to interfere with navigation," said Charon smilingly, "and, by the way, that very fact gave Mephisto the idea for his favorite joke."

Ants and Colors.

It was proved long ago that ants have the power of seeing the—to us—invisible rays of the ultra violet portion of the spectrum. They fear the light for their larvae and when allowed choice between different degrees of light always carry them to the darkest place accessible. When given the choice between a compartment lighted with yellow light and one dark to our eyes, but under the actinic ray, the ants unhesitatingly chose the yellow light, showing that to their eyes it was darker than the other, to man invisible.—Argonaut.

KING CUTS DOWN PRICE

Purveyors to England's Monarch Are Restricted to a Profit of 10 Per Cent.

EDWARD MAKES A SCHEDULE

His Majesty Sees Tradesmen Supply Wholesalers' Bills for Purposes of Comparison.

It may be hardly credible, but it is the fact that while the struggling citizens of America are being forced to pay exorbitant profits on the necessaries of life the King of England permits none of his tradesmen to charge him more than allows them a profit of 10 per cent, the New York World says. They can like it or leave it, but those are his terms.

In the days of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, who was given the reputation of being stingy, because she never gave anything away, the royal traders had an easy time. And they made hay while their sun shone. They little dreamed, though, of the severe day of reckoning that was coming.

The distance from the railroad station to the castle at Windsor is less than half a mile. The hill to the castle is rather steep, so most of the hotel carriages have two horses. The fare for such a vehicle is half a dollar. For the ordinary one-horse cab the fare is only 25 cents. The charge to her majesty when she ordered a carriage from a hotel to bring a guest from the station to the castle was $2.50.

Edward VII. allows instead of $2.50 just 81 cents. He says that is too much, but allows the extra few cents because he insists on the hotel keeping horses such as his master of the horse will pass as respectable-looking, and maintaining a stable of them all the year round, whether they are wanted or not. There is in England a great desire to supply the king. It is one of the best possible forms of advertisement. His majesty makes the tradesmen pay for it. A royal order is always given on large and beautiful specially engraved paper. But previously the tradesman is granted a "royal warrant," which is something to frame and preserve as an heirloom. That enables him to put the royal coat of arms up over his store window and everybody else rushes in, since what the king buys must necessarily be the best.

But his majesty has a schedule of profits. It was drawn up actually by himself. In that schedule is the amount of profit to be permitted to every class of tradesmen. On groceries the profit allowed is only 5 per cent. On meat it is 10 per cent. His majesty held that the grocer could keep his supplies without deterioration if they were not sold, but the butcher could not and so required the higher profit.

Ten per cent is, however, the limit. The jewelers waited on the lord chamberlain and protested that they had so few customers, compared with the butcher and the vegetable dealer, they were bound to have at least 30 per cent.

"Not from me," the king is reported to have said when the lord chamberlain urged the petition of the jewelers. And they didn't. Ten per cent is all they get.

His majesty takes care to see that his 10 per cent is only 10 per cent. Whenever a bill is presented for payment the tradesman has to produce with it his own wholesale bills. The price that goes on the royal bill has to be only just so much more than what the tradesman has paid himself as the rate on the profit schedule allows. If the butcher has paid 20 cents a pound for his prime American, Liverpool-killed beef, he can charge the royal household 22 cents a pound and not a fraction more, although in London the price is probably 28 cents a pound to other consumers.

The women of America cannot, perhaps, do what the King of England did so easily. But many of them express the belief that by combination they can do much to prevent themselves from being robbed by unfair profits that go only to swell the already overbloated coffers of the powerful trusts.

"S.O.S." Ambulance Call of the Sea

A SHORT time ago W. G. Maginnis, the wireless operator, stepped to his key on the sinking Kentucky, and sent out the signal "S. O. S.," the international wireless distress call. Before the water reached the dynamos his cry for help was heard. The Mallory liner Alamo, guided by information furnished by the operator, located the Kentucky and rescued her company just before the steamship went down. This happened near Diamond Shoals, down the Southern Atlantic coast of the United States, and before morning came the story of the rescue was told ashore, and "S. O. S.," the new ambulance call of the sea, was made famous. The story of that rescue has been duplicated a number of times since the wireless became a feature of the equipment of nearly every passenger-carrying vessel which puts to sea.

A decade spans the development of applied wireless, and even now, when it has not reached a perfected state, it has not only become a commercial factor, but it has robbed the sea of half its terror. Accidents which in the not so long ago were of the gravest sort and meant not only sleepless nights to the officers and passengers, but days of heart-breaking toil to the men, have become but exciting incidents of an ocean voyage.

The sinking of the White Star liner Republic made the distress signal "C. Q. D." a by-word around the world. "C. Q." is the call meaning to stand by or to give attention. In continental news services where several operators are on a loop the call "C. Q." signifies that a message is coming through for all operators to take.

It saves time. The Marconi Company uses it as a general call for attention. They added the letter "D" to the combination. This stands for danger and is the signal of danger demanding that every operator stop all business and prepare to receive message to follow.

The "S. O. S." is the wireless distress signal provided for in the service regulations of the International Wireless Telegraph convention adopted at Berlin in 1906. The combination of letters have no especial significance except that they are easy to sound and click out strong and are easily read.

What happens on a disabled steamship after the "S. O. S." call has been sent out? There is little of the hysterical terror of old-time shipwrecks, for there is always the assurance that help is coming, and the story as told by the wireless messages is one of calm seamanship which brings relief to passengers and inspires the men to work.

The story of the saving of the sinking Kentucky on Feb. 4 is a straight away tale of an operator who sat at his key until the water reached the dynamos and shut off the power. "S. O. S."—"S. O. S." was the call he sent through the air, while below him the men were working with might and main to keep the fast-filling vessel afloat until help came.

"S. O. S."—"S. O. S." Maginnis kept clicking away, and then, when hope seemed lowest, came the answer. The steamship Alamo, bound down coast, had caught the cry.

—"the trouble?"

was the fragment of the first call Maginnis got when he snapped the receivers on his ears.

It was enough. His call had been heard. Then, frantically, he told what had happened and that help was needed. The Alamo was ninety miles away, and the next message from her was for the Kentucky's position.

"We have changed our course," was the next comforting message, and soon after the water reached the dynamos, and the vessel, so low in the water that the winter seas broke over her, wallowed through the water with the crew at the rail waiting for the Alamo to come. She got there in time. The boats from the Kentucky were lowered at 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon. At 3:00 p. m. the Alamo was alongside. Ten minutes later the Alamo was under way and the Kentucky left a fast sinking derelict.

A FRANK MILLIONAIRE.

Says He Has No Right to His Money.

Joseph Fels, the millionaire Philadelphia soapmaker, was in Cincinnati recently on an inspection tour to see how his crusade on poverty, to which he is contributing $100,000 every year, is getting along. At a dinner in a fashionable hotel, at which he was the guest of honor, he said:

"A man cannot be a millionaire without being a beneficiary of this system of robbery. I am well protected. There is a tariff that keeps foreign soaps out of the country. I own stocks in street railway companies that are private property and are under public franchise and do not pay taxes on those franchises. I own stock in railroads that are private monopolies and should be public property. I own many things that I shouldn't.

"But I intend to hold on to these things in order to make more money with which to fight the system that has made me rich—at the expense of others. I believe I am spending my money better than Rockefeller is spending his."

Raising the Fallen.

"See that young fellow over there?" inquired the talkative stranger.

"Yes, what about him?" inquired Smithson fretfully.

"That young fellow, mister, is devoting his life to a noble cause. The best part of his time is spent in an endeavor to raise fallen humanity—to lift those who are down and set them on their feet again."

"Indeed!" replied Smithson. "And who is he?"

"Oh, he's the attendant at a roller skating rink!"

WORTH MOUNTAINS OF GOLD

During Change of Life, says Mrs. Chas. Barclay

Graniteville, Vt. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter."—MRS. CHAS. BARCLAY, R. F. D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

Poultry House for Five Dollars.

We have two poultry houses made from rough lumber, sawed from a tree out of the woods, and covered with shingles, but the cheapest one we have I made out of scraps of lumber found around the barn and lumber pile—such as can be found on most farms. Inside measurements are 10x12 feet, 5½ feet high in front, 4 feet at back and 7½ feet at the comb, which is 3 feet from front.

We like this shape and size of house very much and if we were building another, think we would build the same shape of roof, as it is convenient and easy to get around in it.

"Of course, there were cracks and irregular shaped boards in my house, but after I had covered the entire house with three-ply roofing paper these were covered up and we had a nice looking, warm and dry house.

The window in front is 3x4 feet and is hinged so it can be easily opened for ventilation. At the end of the house I made a smaller window of ten panes of glass. These window openings are covered on the outside with ½-inch mesh wire screen. We have an inside door of lath, which we can close and leave outside one open on mild days in winter when the ground is covered with snow and we don't want the chickens out, or at night in summer.

It required four squares of roofing paper to cover the entire house, which cost us about $3.75. We buy 8x10 glass by the box of 100 panes; so the 26 panes cost about 52 cents, and the wire netting for windows 75 cents. I built the house four years ago and it is as good as ever, excepting the roof, which was damaged by a very hard hail storm last spring. We put new paper on top of old, and it is now as good as new.—Mrs. J. E. Thompson, in Farm and Home.

The Quality of Butter.

The quality of butter depends to a great degree upon the food and drink of the cow. She should have clean, pure water and wholesome food. Much care should be taken in the selection of the ration. The individual cow has much to do in this regard. But with respect to the part that is played in handling the product of the cow too much carelessness is evident in the processes of butter-making. After churning is finished the butter and milk mixture should remain quiet for about ten minutes in order to let the butter come to the surface. A cup of cold water will hasten the process. An old recipe says:

The butter should be carefully skimmed off into a wooden bowl half full of water. The water should be repeatedly changed until it shows no indication of milkiness. It is important that the butter should not be pressed or worked during the process of removing the milk from the butter. After this the butter may be pressed into a mass and salt to the extent of one-fortieth its weight worked into it. The water should be well pressed out, but the less worked the more perfectly its granular character is maintained.

Catches All the Fruit.

One of the most ingenious of time-saving contrivances is the fruit gatherer designed by a Kentucky man. It collects all the fruit that falls from a tree and holds it where it can be quickly picked up and placed in a basket, also saving the apples, pears or whatever they may be from damage by falling. A circle of stakes is driven around the tree in a radius wide enough to include anything that falls from it. A circle of canvas, with a hole in the middle to receive the trunk of the tree, is fastened around the latter and also fastened to the stakes with the outer edge of the ring lower than the portion around the tree. Around the outer edge, too, is a wall to keep the contents from rolling off to the ground. The fruit falls from the tree into this canvas net and is thus saved from bruising. It rolls down to the outer edge and lies there until the picker comes along and collects it, thereby saving the latter time and trouble and keeping the fruit itself in good condition.

Smallest Cows in the World.

The smallest cows in the world are found in the Samoan Islands. The average weight of the males does not exceed 200 pounds. The females average about 100 pounds, they are very stockily built and are seldom taller than a merino sheep. In color these cattle are nearly all alike, a reddish mouse color marked with white. They have very large heads, and their horns are of exceptional length.

Stock Food Frauds.

On of the late frauds discovered by the state food inspector is a mixture of 100 pounds of common salt and 1 pound of lampblack, sold as a great cure for hog cholera and a general promoter of good health in live stock. The "list" price to the user has been $6 a hundred, while the cost to the "manufacturer" is only a few cents. What may we expect next?—Farmers' Mail and Breeze.

Cost of Producing Eggs.

A bulletin from Cornell University gives the results of a record of a few hundred hens kept in 1902 as 9.2 cents per dozen for the average feed cost of eggs throughout the year. Some figures published in Farm Poultry gave the record of a large number of poultry keepers, which shows the average cost of eggs per dozen in winter as 15 cents, in summer 8.7 cents. Under present prices the feed alone would be about 11 to 12 cents per dozen.

Rheumatism of Horses.

In the highly fed and pampered horse, inadequately exercised, a form of rheumatism, indistinguishable from gout, is met with, says Horse World. It chiefly affects the fetlock, but may attack the navicular joint when the patient experiences "those pains arthritic which infect the toe of libertine excess."

The lameness is peculiarly painful when the latter joint is involved, as no swelling can take place and give relief which is afforded by the puffing of a fetlock, a knee or hock. There can be little doubt that many of the intermittent foot lamenesses attributed to true navicular disease are rheumatic in origin, and that the so-called cures of navicular lameness otherwise than by the operation of unnerving are due to the disappearance of rheumatic athritis. Many navicular bones examined after the death of horses long suffering from disease have all the appearances of the rheumatic deposits.

The Milk Industry.

The milk producers of Northern Illinois have decided to resurrect a dormant industry in their fight against the milk trust. They are considering plants to re-establish their own creameries which were sold to the Borden Company ten or fifteen years ago. These will act as an outlet for their product if the association does not succeed in establishing its own distributing depot in Chicago, which is looked upon as more than a possibility. Fifteen years ago the Northern Illinois section was dotted with creameries established by the farmers, many of them being run on the co-operative plan. This was when the Borden Company was beginning to branch out. Offers of purchase were made to facilitate trading with the farmers and they agreed with most disastrous results.—Agricultural Epitomist.

Homemade Plank Harrow.

A good homemade harrow can be made by fastening together several planks so that each plank overlaps the one next to it like the clapboards of a building. It is said to be as good as a roller for smoothing and fining the surface soil on lumpy ground. It will be found to work especially fine in the lighter soils. It can be used also for broadcasting small seeds and in the planting of garden truck.

Fattening Fowls.

Buckwheat meal is very good to use in fattening chickens, but should be used in preference mixed, half of its bulk of other meal, choice being given to cornmeal or ground oats. To fatten a fowl you should commence doing so exactly eighteen days before the fowl or fowls are needed for killing or for marketing, as after eighteen days of fattening they begin to lose flesh instead of gaining it.—A. V. Meersch in Western Poultry Journal.

Slow Development Best.

When one is growing baby beef there are good reasons for forcing the feeding. With that class of animals forcing is necessary, but is not necessary with animals that are to stand at the head of herds. Development more than normally quick will be of no advantage to them. With them that style of development should be followed that will result in fullest and most vigorous growth when matured.

Necessity of Clover.

It is not possible to maintain our lands without clover, and it is best to sow clover and plow under. It is desirable to clip the clover two or three weeks earlier than it would be cut for hay, and let it lie upon the ground, and this helps the second crop, which may be cut for seed; then the straw should be put back on the land.

Fastening Wires to Small Posts.

If you are using hedge fence posts, especially small ones, the only sure way to fasten the barb wire to them is to wire it with hay wire. The staples might possibly stick at first, but the chances are that there will be a crack at that point and the staple will drop out or be pulled out sooner or later.

Utilizing Manure.

We have a small dairy of about fifty-six cows, mostly Jerseys, and sell milk, cream and butter. The manure from this herd is stored under shelter and applied with a spreader to wheat and young grass, says a writer in an exchange. We think that best results are secured by this method of applying.

Fat Sometimes Disadvantage.

Fat covers up weakness, a fact which purchasers do not duly consider. The ability does not seem to be cultivated by many, notwithstanding the great value of such ability. Even buyers of young dairy bulls are likely to give preference to young bulls that carry the most flesh.

Supplying Green Ration.

Start with the first warm days to grow green stuff for chickens. Peas will grow during the cool days of early spring and soon will furnish picking for the birds. Many other things may be planted early and a succession of poultry garden "sass" to be carried along as needed. It will pay to do it.

Earthworms and Alfalfa.

Where there are numerous earthworms there is plenty of humus in the soil. Where there is plenty of humus alfalfa will grow. Earthworms can thrive only where there is humus in the soil, and their presence will determine whether it would be likely to prove good alfalfa land.

Wheat as Chicken Feed.

Wheat furnishes more material for eggs than corn. A bushel of wheat contains about one-tenth more protein than corn, but about one-half less fat. So to fatten fowls feed corn and for eggs feed wheat.

Rice Griddle Cakes for Two.

Into one-half cup of thick sour milk stir thoroughly one-half cup of boiled rice; add one-quarter teaspoonful of soda and beat briskly. Add one-quarter cup sweet milk, three-quarters cup bread flour sifted with one-half teaspoonful baking powder and one teaspoonful of melted butter. Beat and cook on a hot, well-greased griddle, one large tablespoonful to each "cake." Pile on a hot plate, spreading each one with a little melted butter and a sifting of sugar. Cut the pile in quarters like a pie.

Southern Old-Style Biscuit.

The old way was to beat the biscuit dough with an ax, and to give it 300 blows by actual count. The well-bastinadoed substance was then made into small round cakes with the hands—a cutter is an insult to true beaten biscuit—each about half an inch thick. The top of each one is then pricked three times with a fork, and they are then baked in a moderate oven for from 20 to 30 minutes. After you have once eaten them you are hardly surprised at their favor with the natives.

Chocolate Glaze.

Put two squares of chocolate into a double saucepan. When it is melted remove it from the fire and stir into it half a cupful of sugar, then add a quarter cupful of hot water. Return to the fire, stir it until the sugar is dissolved and continue to cook it without stirring until a little dropped in water can be taken up and rolled between the fingers like a soft ball. Pour it over to the top of the cake.

Preparatoin of Rice.

Instead of washing rice half a dozen times in cold water to remove the starch, rinse twice in very hot water and the same results are gained. Few northerners succeed in getting the separated grains, such as are always seen on southern tables. To obtain them throw rice slowly into rapidly boiling, slightly salted water and cook twenty minutes uncovered.

Ginger Honey Cakes.

One cup honey, one-half cup butter or drippings, one tablespoonful boiled cider, one-half cup hot water or one-half cup sour milk will do instead.

Work these ingredients together, and then add one tablespoonful ginger and one teaspoonful soda with flour enough to make a soft batter. Bake in flat pan.

Baked Herrings.

Take the herrings, and after washing and drying, rub with ground cloves, pepper and salt. Place them in an earthen pan, cover with vinegar and tie them over with a thick paper. Put them into a moderate oven, and bake them for an hour. To be eaten cold.

Macaroni Soup.

Put 4 ounces of macaroni and a teaspoonful of butter, salted a little, into two quarts of stock; let it simmer for half an hour. As soon as tender cut into rings, and drop it again into boiling stock. Stew quarter of an hour and grate a little old cheese over it.

Fried Herrings.

Clean and dry. Very little butter is needed in which to fry them. They should be well browned. They are rich enough to be eaten without any kind of sauce. They will take three-quarters of an hour to cook.

Hints About the House.

Brush pie crust with cream to insure a rich, brown color.

Paint which sticks to glass can be removed with vinegar.

To cool a hot dish in a hurry place it in a vessel full of cold salt water.

Cutting onions, turnips and carrots across the fiber makes them more tender when cooked.

To singe chickens hold them over a saucer of burning alcohol. It does not leave soot on the flesh.

Slight stains can be removed from black cloth by rubbing with a freshly cut raw potato, wiping it with clean cloth.

When you make griddle cakes, beat the eggs and milk together with egg beater. They will almost melt in your mouth.

Chicken salad is delicious if mixed with small pieces of green pepper and mayonnaise. Press the meat into pepper cases.

A plateful of grated Parmesan cheese is served in many households with macaroni or spaghetti instead of cooking the cheese with it.

If you haven't a shoe horn, drop your handkerchief into your shoe before inserting the foot, then pull tight and it will slip on easily.

Medicine stains on silver spoons may be removed by a rubbing with a rag dipped in sulphuric acid and then washing it off with soapsuds.

The most hygienic duster is a damp fabric that is soft and free from lint. Cheesecloth and chamois dampened are both good for different purposes.

Woolen blankets should be placed in boxes lined with newspapers. Lay pieces of linen saturated with turpentine in the boxes to prevent an invasion of moths.

When the color of a dress has faded, owing to stains from lemon or other acid fruit juice, a good idea is to touch the spot with liquid ammonia, which usually will restore the color.

Vaseline will leave a stain that is hard to get out. Wash goods stained by vaseline first in warm water and soap, then a few drops of chlorinated soda rubbed on the spots will cause them to disappear.

To kill lice on any feathery plant, such as small ivy and the like, make a paper cone to cover the plant and burn a small quantity of sulphur under the cone. A pinch of sulphur will usually kill all lice.

THREE RUBENS UNDER HAMMER.

Art Collection of Eccentric Hermann Linde to Be Sold Soon.

It falls to the public administrator of the county of New York to scatter the collection of old masters on which Herman Linde so set his heart that he died in destitution rather than dispose of even one of his precious canvases.

Among the 121 pictures which are to be sold at the 5th avenue auction rooms are three attributed to Rubens, for which shortly before he died Mr. Linde refused $130,000, as is shown by a letter found among his effects. The entire collection is said to be worth half a million dollars, the New York Herald says, and once in an ecstasy of enthusiasm over some new find the eccentric owner declared that he would not take a million for his artistic possessions.

Of the three canvases which seem the most important there is good reason to believe that one, at least, "The Feast of Herod," is the work of the noted Flemish master, Peter Paul Rubens, while the others may be of his school or by students who filled in from his sketches. Several experts have even expressed the opinion that the head of "The Sorrowing Magdalen" was actually painted by Rubens himself.

It would be hard to get together a more variegated assemblage of worthies and unworthies than Mr. Linde collected in his life. He was a Shakespearean reader and he had been known to recite entire plays of the bard of Avon. He gave recitations in his palmy days at Steinway Hall and, despite the grotesqueness of his manner, his zealous appreciation of the genius of the dramatist drew large audiences.

Mr. Linde inherited a small fortune and invested it in pictures, good, bad and indifferent. Some he acquired in out-of-the-way shops, others at auctions and many in his trips to Europe. Occasionally he would make an important find.

Mr. Linde brought suit against the estate of the late Collis P. Huntington seven years ago for $6,000, the price of an alleged Correggio, but was unable to recover anything. He became fonder of his collection with the flight of years and cherished the ambition that he might establish a museum where it could be shown to those willing to pay a small fee for admission. His idol was the small Rubens representing "The Feast of Herod," which, whatever its origin may be, is certainly a meritorious work of art.

UNCLE JOE CANNON.

He Also Speaks Well of Canada.

No matter what may be the opinion of Mr. Joseph Cannon, no matter if he may be looked upon by some as a czar, and by others as a big, warm-hearted man, with many of the instincts that make humanity very bearable, all will admit that he is a man who has been advertised more than any other man in the United States. What he may have to say therefore on any subject, will have weight. Observant, he speaks his mind freely. He was interviewed the other day by the correspondent of a Canadian newspaper, he spoke of his admiration for Canada, and he is quoted in a way that pictures fairly well the personnel of the man. The correspondent says he launched out into personal biography, proverbial philosophy, political comment, cynical scorn, broad profanity and sentimental poetry such as one rarely hears in the space of an hour. He discussed the Canadian tariff, and then said: "People say I break the Ten Commandments, all of them. But I don't, at least not often. I did break one of them up in Canada two or three years ago. As I rode from Winnipeg to the Rockies over your great West and saw the finest wheatfields in the world, I thought of Virginia and a lot of our States, and I smashed the Tenth Commandment every hour of the journey. Yes, sir, I coveted my neighbor's land."

Coming from a man of the fame of Mr. Cannon, these were words that should have some weight with the Americans who may still have doubts of the advantages that are offered to them in Western Canada. A home amongst the wheat fields. Hundreds of thousands of Americans are adopting it. They go to Central Canada, to any one of the three Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, or to the coast Province of British Columbia, take up their homestead of 160 acres, and probably pre-empt another 160 acres, or it may be they do not care for pioneering twenty or thirty miles from an existing railway, and purchase a farm. Then they settle upon it and, having no clearing away of timber they begin at once to cultivate it, and make money. That they make money and much more than they could possible make on the high-priced farms they have left, is the evidence of hundreds of thousands. They do not leave civilized life, they but remove from one sphere to another. They have splendid social conditions, churches, schools, rural telephones, splendid roads, railways, convenient just the same as what they left, and what is more, they get much greater returns from their crops, which give abundant yield. The climate is perfect, and it is no wonder that most flattering reports are sent back to their friends in the States, and it is no wonder that Joe Cannon was tempted to speak as he did. He "coveted" his neighbor's land.

Woman Caught Red Handed.

A woman was caught red handed last Tuesday. There was nothing sensational about it. All she had done was to do her washing with cheap, common yellow laundry soap, and the result was, as it always is, that her hands were cracked and chapped and chafed until they were sights. Easy Task soap relieves a woman of so much rubbing and dipping the hands in the water that no harm results. As a matter of fact, Easy Task soap is good to wash the hands with. It won't hurt the most delicate skin any more than the finest lace.

The Overland The Simplest Car

The Overland outsells all other cars, largely because of its matchless simplicity.

The Overland—hardly more than two years old—has become the sensation of motordom.

Four factories, employing 4,000 men, turn out 140 Overlands daily to meet the overwhelming demand.

Texas takes 1,500, Kansas 1,000, Iowa 1,000, Nebraska 750—all for this season's delivery. So it is in every section where this remarkable car has been known for a year.

One reason is that the Overland is almost trouble-proof. The usual complex features have all been eliminated.

A child can master the car in ten minutes. A novice can run it and care for it.

One simply pushes pedals forward or backward to get on low speed, high speed or reverse. It is as simple as walking.

The car almost cares for itself. Many an owner has run from 7,000 to 10,000 miles without even cleaning a spark plug.

No expert is needed. And the cost of upkeep is the smallest of any capable car.

Then the Overland gives more for the money than any other car in existence. This is due to our enormous production and our automatic machinery.

For $1,000 you can get a 25-horse power Overland with a 102-inch wheel base. No other car of such size and power sells nearly so low.

For $1,250 you can get a 40-horse power Overland with a 112-inch wheel base. All prices include five lamps and magneto.

Know the Facts

More people are buying Overlands than any other car. There must be some very strong reasons, and those reasons will appeal to you.

We have two free books which will tell you the facts. Every motor car lover should read them. Cut out this coupon as a reminder to write for these books to-day.

Wasted a Fortune on Skin Trouble.

"I began to have an itching over my whole body about seven years ago and this settled in my limb, from the knee to the toes. I went to see a great many physicians, a matter which cost me a fortune, and after I noticed that I did not get any relief that way, I went for three years to the hospital. But they were unable to help me there. I used all the medicines that I could see but became worse and worse. I had an inflammation which made me almost crazy with pain. When I showed my foot to my friends they would get really frightened. I did not know what to do. I was so sick and had become so nervous that I positively lost all hope.

"I had seen the advertisement of the Cuticura Remedies a great many times, but could not make up my mind to buy them, for I had already used so many medicines. Finally I did decide to use the Cuticura Remedies and I tell you that I was never so pleased as when I noticed that, after having used two sets of Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills, the entire inflammation had gone. I was completely cured. I should be only too glad if people with similar disease would come to me and find out the truth. I would only recommend them to use Cuticura. Beautiful Wall Coatings for Homes.

In line with the progress of all other things in these modern days is the beautiful, perfect and sanitary wall coatings for our homes. Alabastine is the name of a rich, soft and velvety preparation for the decoration of walls and ceilings. It adheres to the walls of its own adhesive qualities. It is inexpensive, clean, artistic and so easily put on that any one can follow the printed directions on every package. Any shade or tint is easily produced. Alabastine is proof against insects or disease germs so prevalent in wall paper. It does not rub off and flake like kalsomine. A complete color plan for the walls of the home and stencils to help make the home beautiful, together with a book about home decorations and samples of color effects will all be sent free by the Alabastine Company, 482 Grandville avenue, Grand Rapids, Mich. This liberal offer to home decorators deserves careful perusal.

WESTERN CANADA

What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:

"I would sooner raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your market will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel [60 miles north of the International boundary]. Your vacant land will be taken at a rate beyond present conception. We have enough people in the United States alone who want homes to take up this land." Nearly will enter and make their homes in Western Canada this year. 1909 produced another large crop of wheat, oats and barley, in addition to which the cattle exports was an immense item. Cattle raising, dairying, mixed farming and grain growing in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

70,000 Americans

Free homestead and pre-emption areas, as well as lands held by railway and land companies, will provide homes for millions.

Adaptable soil, healthful climate, splendid schools and churches, and good railways.

When You Think

Of the pain which many women experience with every month it makes the gentleness and kindness always associated with womanhood seem to be almost a miracle. While in general no woman rebels against what she regards as a natural necessity there is no woman who would not gladly be free from this recurring period of pain.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong and sick women well, and gives them freedom from pain. It establishes regularity, subdues inflammation, heals ulceration and cures female weakness.

Sick women are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. All correspondence strictly private and sacredly confidential. Write without fear and without fee to World's Dispensary Medical Association, R. V. Pierce, M. D., President, Buffalo, N. Y.

If you want a book that tells all about woman's diseases, and how to cure them at home, send 21 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce to pay cost of mailing only, and he will send you a free copy of his great thousand-page illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser—revised, up-to-date edition, in paper covers. In handsome cloth-binding, 31 stamps.

HE WAS NOT IMMORTAL.

A Test That Proved It Was Possible to Kill a Spaniard.

Early in the sixteenth century the natives of Porto Rico plotted to kill the Spaniards on the island. There was much doubt, however, as to whether or not it was possible to kill a Spaniard. Many of the natives insisted that it was not. Finally it was decided to make an experiment.

A young Spaniard who was passing through an Indian village was hospitably received and fed, and then a number of natives accompanied him on his journey. When he arrived at a river his companions offered to carry him across.

The young man accepted and was taken up by two men and carried into the water on their shoulders. Arriving near the middle of the river, they threw him in and held him down until he ceased to struggle.

Then they carried him ashore with profuse apologies, loudly proclaiming that they stumbled by accident and calling upon him to arise and continue his journey. But the young man did not move, and finally the natives were convinced that he was actually dead.

Having secured the proof they wanted, the leaders of the rebellion at once began a general attack upon the Spaniards.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Unearned Gratitude.

A sample of the late Dr. William Everett's caustic repartee:

"I always experience a sense of deep obligation to you whenever I meet you or hear of you," said George Babbitt to Dr. Everett one morning when they found themselves pacing the deck of an ocean steamer together.

"Why so?" piped the doctor.

"Because," said Mr. Babbitt, "I recall that I was once so fortunate as to win the Boylston prize for oratory at Harvard, and you were chairman of the board of judges."

"I remember it perfectly well," rejoined the brusque doctor. "The judges were five in number. At the conclusion of the speaking we retired to consider the merits of the contestants. It was moved that you be awarded a first prize. On that motion the vote was 3 to 2 in your favor. I was one of the two."—Boston Transcript.

Bleeding by Bowshot.

That all diseases can be cured by bleeding is still firmly believed by several savage tribes and especially by the Papuan negroes. When one of their physicians becomes convinced that it is necessary to bleed a patient he goes several feet in front of him, and then, drawing his bow, he fits a sharp pointed arrow to it and, after careful aim, fires the arrow into the vein which he desires to open. The arrow, it is said, invariably goes straight to the mark, and the thorn or splinter of glass with which it is tipped does the work as successfully as a lancet. Moreover, the patients never show the slightest fear, since they are convinced that from the moment the arrows pierce their veins they will begin to recover.

The Producer.

"It must be annoying to have to ask your husband for money," said the intrusive woman.

"I wouldn't think of doing so," replied Mrs. Cumrox. "We insist on family games of bridge and in that way avoid being under the slightest obligations for what he contributes."—Washington Star.

Candidates are getting thick now. Boys, some of you will have long faces in a month. You cannot all get there.

It is rumored that Country is to get a new threshing outfit this season.

Some folks are growling because the supervisor graded the roads before the rains. Now, boys, stop and think. You growled because the roads were not graded, now you are growling because they are graded. How are you to be pleased? Now use some sense. The roads must be worked or what kind of roads would we have. Still we have men who could make good roads without putting any dirt in the roads—only wind is what they would use. Some men would growl if they had to be hung. They would want a different rope.

Itching Eczema Washed Away

Is it worth 25 cents to you to stop that awful, agonizing itch? Surely you will spend 25 cents on your druggist's recommendation, to cool and heal and soothe that terrible itching eruption?

By arrangement with the D. D. D. Laboratories of Chicago, we are able to make a special offer of a 25 cent bottle of their oil of wintergreen compound, known as D. D. D. Prescription. Call, or write, or telephone to Stone's drug store, Butler, Ind.

We absolutely know that the itch is stopped AT ONCE by D. D. D. Prescription, and the cures all seem to be permanent.

VESTAL VIRGINS.

They Kept the Sacred Fires Alight In Ancient Rome.

Ovid tells us that the first temple of Vesta at Rome was constructed of wattled walls and roofed with thatch, like the primitive huts of the inhabitants. It was little other than a circular covered fireplace and was tended by the unmarried girls of the community. It served as the public hearth of Rome, and on it glowed, unextinguished throughout the year, the sacred fire which was supposed to have been brought from Troy and the continuance of which was thought to be linked with the fortunes of the city.

The name Vesta is believed to be derived from the same root as the Sanskrit was, which means "to dwell, to inhabit," and shows that she was the goddess of home, and home had the hearth as its focus. A town, a state, is but a large family, and what the domestic hearth was to the house the temple of the perpetual fire became to the city. Every town had its vesta, or common hearth, and the colonies derived their fire from the mother hearth.

Should a vestal maiden allow the sacred fire to become extinguished she was beaten till her blood flowed, and the new fire was solemnly rekindled by rubbing together of dry wood or by focusing of sun's rays. The circular form and domed roof of the temple of Vesta were survivals of the prehistoric huts of the aborigines, which were invariably round.—Cornhill Magazine.

RAIN FORMATION.

Cold Air Squeezes the Moisture Out of Warm Air.

Warm air is capable of holding more moisture in suspension than is cold air. When by any means a layer or current of warm air which is saturated with moisture is suddenly cooled a portion of the vapor must fall as rain. Cold shrinks the heated air as pressure does a wet sponge and with precisely the same results. In mountainous countries this cooling down of the warm and damp air is most commonly produced by the air being brought into the neighborhood of mountain tops, which are cold.

It is for this reason that in such countries the showers mostly originate among the mountains and come through the valleys out upon the plains.

It will be easily understood that the higher the mountain the more striking will be the effects produced. If it be a snow capped peak in a tropical region a cloud will be formed such as to conceal the summit all the time. This cloud will be constantly growing on the side of the mountain toward which the currents of warm and moist air are set, for on that side the air is being cooled down, but after it has been driven over the peak it will waste away as rapidly, for it is then coming in contact with warmer air again.

From such high peaks the cloud rarely breaks away as a shower. All the surplus moisture of the air is deposited in the form of rain or snow upon the peaks over which the air passes.

The Jellyfish.

The bay of Naples abounds in medusae, or jellyfish, often growing as large as two feet in diameter and weighing fifty and sixty pounds. Some of them shine at night with a greenish light and are known as noctiluca (night lanterns) by the natives. The jellyfish sometimes make migrations in great groups, sometimes so large and so thick as to impede the navigation of vessels, like the floating plants in the Sargasso sea of the tropics. These shoals of medusae, as they are called, may be so dense that a piece of timber plunged in among them will be held upright as if stuck in the mud, and ordinary rowboats cannot force their way through them. Their migrations have never been explained. They are irregular and occur at no particular season of the year and under no particular influences.

The Record of Raindrops.

It is by carefully noting small and apparently insignificant things and facts that men of science are enabled to reach some of their most surprising and interesting conclusions. In many places the surface of rocks, which millions of years ago must have formed sandy or muddy seabeaches, is found to be pitted with the impressions of raindrops. In England it has been noticed that in many cases the eastern sides of these depressions are the more deeply pitted, indicating that the raindrops which formed them were driven before a west wind. From this the conclusion is drawn that in the remote epoch when the pits were formed the majority of the storms in England came from the west, just as they do today.—Harper's Weekly.

A Tree in a Thunderstorm.

Every one is aware that it is not wise to seek a tree's shelter in a thunderstorm, but if you must take refuge there then climb to the topmost branches. It has been proved that the upper boughs of trees during a storm would be the safest position, and it is said that birds in the branches are seldom killed. When the tree is struck by lightning it is the trunk which, presumably from its greater dryness, is a bad conductor and which therefore suffers the most.

ECCENTRIC BRIGNOLI.

Some of the Peculiarities of the Once Famous Tenor.

Brignoli, the great tenor, was so careful of his voice when he had to sing that he would not speak at all and was in the habit of writing his wishes on a piece of paper. During the last years of his life he lived at the Everett House, New York, when not on the road. It took him at least three-quarters of an hour to go from his room to the sidewalk. He must get used to the changes very gradually. Leaving the room, he would pace up and down the hall for ten or fifteen minutes until thoroughly "acclimatized," as he himself would say, and from there would go to the lobby to experience for twenty minutes a slightly lower degree of temperature.

At the end of half an hour he usually reached the vestibule, where he would pass another quarter, opening the outer door occasionally to get a taste of the fresh air. When thoroughly acclimatized here he buttoned his greatcoat close about him and stepped out on the pavement.

Brignoli never was known to be ready to go on the stage to sing his part. He had to wait one minute or several minutes before appearing. In this he was a great trouble to managers. "Just give me one minute more," he would beg, and when that was up he would plead for another and another till all patience was exhausted.

THE GREEN FIEND.

Absinth Was Originally a Harmless Medical Remedy.

Absinth, the green fiend that saturates fashionable France, was originally an extremely harmless medical remedy.

It was a French physician who first used it. His name was Ordinaire, and he was living as a refugee at Couvet, in Switzerland, at the close of the eighteenth century. Like many other country doctors at that time, he was also a druggist, and his favorite remedy was a certain elixir of absinth of which he alone had the secret.

At his death he bequeathed the formula to his housekeeper, Mlle. Grandpierre, and she sold it to the daughters of Lieutenant Henriod. They cultivated in their little garden the herbs necessary for concocting it, and after they had distilled a certain quantity of the liquid they sold it on commission to itinerant peddlers, who quickly disposed of it in the adjacent towns and villages.

Finally, during the first decade of the nineteenth century, a wealthy distiller purchased the formula, and very soon afterward he placed on the market the modern absinth, which differs greatly from the old medical remedy, since the latter contained no alcohol and very little absinth.

A Painter's Troubles.

The desire of the Bank of England officials to discover forgers has sometimes led to curious mistakes. On one occasion the painter, George Morland, in his eagerness to avoid his duns, retired to an obscure hiding place in Hackney, where his anxious looks and secluded manner of life induced some of his neighbors to believe him a forger of notes then in existence. The directors, on being informed, dispatched some dexterous detectives to the residence, but Morland's suspicions were aroused by their movements in front of the house and, thinking them bailiffs, escaped from the back to London. Mrs. Morland informed the visitors of her husband's name and showed them some unfinished pictures. The facts were reported to the directors, who presented Morland with two twenty-pound notes by way of compensation for the alarm.

She Didn't Dance.

In 1736 a gentleman living in Hampshire, England, named Samuel Baldwin, died after a rather stormy and most unhappy married life. In his will he directed that all his vast estate be given his wife on condition that she should dance upon his grave from time to time. As the will further instructed that his remains should be taken by boat to the Needles and from there cast into the sea, this, of course, prevented his widow from fulfilling the conditions of the will and thus lost her the property. He, however, had his revenge for the various tempers she had exhibited during their life together and for the remarks she often made that she "would yet dance upon his grave." — Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

KEEN KUTTER
LAWN MOWERS
So light running that your "youngest" can now mow the lawn without help.
KEEN KUTTER Mowers are fast cutting and easy running because of the triple gear and the fine ball bearings. A KEEN KUTTER will last longer than any mower on the market and is easily kept keen and sharp. To sharpen, merely reverse the blades and they sharpen themselves. A cheap mower will cost more in the end on account of repairs, will not do the work properly and will require twice as much labor.
The KEEN KUTTER is a money saver, a time saver, a temper saver—and will keep your lawn looking like velvet.

We have just installed in our mill a new mahine for grinding chop. This machine is a product of The American Machinery Co., Port Huron, Mich., and is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction in every respect.

We can grind in any manner desirable. Kindly state at mill door if chop is to be ground fine, medium or coarse. Although this machine has cost us several hundred dollars, we make no extra charge for grinding, and will grind at same old prices—5c per bushel, or one-eighth toll.

We are also prepared to crush cobs and then grind them, and price on this work is 10 cents per bushel. One bag oats, rye, etc., is considered two bushels, and one bag ear corn one bushel.

Give us a call and let us demonstrate what this machine will do.

Alumni Banquet

The Butler High School Alumni met Wednesday evening in the spacious hall on the second floor of the new school building. The hall was tastily arranged with rugs and potted plants, off-set by the four fine busts that be long to the school. There assembled a company of about ninety, who enjoyed music and a social time until about 10 o'clock, when the class years were called off and each class repaired to the dining room below, the class of 1910 coming last and being given the place of honor, after which Dr. Frank Fanning as toastmaster of the occasion, with his guests were escorted to a table.

Here the walls were decorated with American flags and college pennants and with snowy and carefully set tables gave a gala appearance. Rev. Albertson D. D. gave grace over the banquet.

A splendid three course supper was served by ladies of the Methodist church, and several toasts were given at the tables. Those responding to toasts were as follows: John Krontz, Mildred Kenestrick, Mrs. A. S. Power Warren Tintsman, Ralph Wells, Clara Apt and Ethel Tess, also Mr. Dunten.

Mr. Fanning deserves much credit for the efficient way in which he presided as toastmaster.

After singing a verse of Auld Lang Sang and benediction by Rev. Konkle the company broke up to meet with the class of 1911, one year hence.

POULTRY RAISING ON WHEELS

Is a Success As is Demonstrated By Ed Johnson of This Place

In Butler the chicken fever is getting very near the danger point. Some of the boys are breeding for fancy stock with the hopes of taking all the blue ribbons at the fall shows. Others are just raising poultry for pastime and recreation, but Ed Johnson is in the business for the money there is in it. He has the filo system and is carrying it out to a letter. So far has he advanced along the line of chicken breeding that he has two good sized double deck filo coops placed on wheels and a miniature railroad running from one side of his lot to the other. Each day he digs up the fresh dirt between the rails, moves the wheeled coops over the fresh earth and then the chickens soon get busy. Mr. Johnson cares for his flocks with the regularity of a clock, and consequently the results are most satisfactory.

Besides the two wheeled coops are several smaller ones which answer for the mother hen for the late arrivals, while the mother hen herself is placed in another coop where she is properly cared for and soon goes to laying. Mr. Johnson has for his chicken business about one-third of an ordinary lot. He has sold many settings of eggs this year at $3.00 per setting.

For neatness, his system far exceeds anything we have ever seen in this line. While he does not devote all his time with his flocks, he says with a very little more room and attention a good living could be made in this way.

Mr. Johnson does not use the hen altogether for hatching chicks, as the writer learned. Before leaving the yards he took us in the sitting room of his home where we saw what we supposed was a jewelry box or toilet case of some kind, but when he lifted off the top we saw two chicks just kicking off the last bit of shell, while several other eggs were broken open, and soon the whole "toilet case" was alive with the downey little creatures. Mr. Johnson's poultry yard is attracting much comment, and he has many visitors who are always made welcome.

It is said that every person must have a hobby in order to be happy, and this is one of the best paying hobbies a man can have. We can see no harm in having the chicken hobby, and hope more people will get it, remembering that eggs were clear out of the common man's reach for the past three or four winters, to say nothing about the price of hens and broilers.

PLATTER CASE SETTLED

Parties in Nasty Litigation Got Together While Jury Was Being Empaneled

Late Monday the Platter damage suit came to a sudden end in the Steuben circuit court by the parties in the litigation getting together thus stopping what would have been a nasty affair.

While in the act of empaneling the jury Attorney John W. Baxter representing the plaintiff and Judge J. H. Rose, the defendant, withdrew and negotiated a settlement to which the parties agreed. By it the plaintiff, daughter Myrtle, backed by her mother, agreed to pay Mr. Platter the sum of $1,000, assume the mortgage of $2,800 and interest on his 80-acre farm in Concord township and take the farm.

This means Mr. Platter will have to deed the farm to the daughter at a consideration of about $3,900. He considers the farm worth about $4,000 but they place a higher value on it so that he is satisfied that he paid practically nothing in the settlement while they look upon the deal as several hundred dollars in their favor.

Be that as it may the matter is adjusted, the parties are satisfied and a very obnoxious stench buried for should the trial have been prosecuted the testimony would have been sensationally racy and extremely undesirable. The parties in the action and all of the witnesses should return thanks over the outcome as well as the community involved.

Commencement Exercises.

The commencement exercises of the Butler high school were held in the Thompson opera house Tuesday evening and were attended by parents of the graduates and a large number of friends.

There was no speaker for the occasion, and the class furnished their own music, being assisted by the city male quartette and Miss Ethel Nimmons as their pianist. The quartette was composed of Messrs. Brindley, Briggs, Blaker and Oberlin. They rendered two selections which were highly appreciated.

Grace L. Whetsel was the first to appear on the program and gave the history of the class of 1910, which consisted of ten pupils, seven girls and three boys.

Mable E. Mutzfeld delivered the next oration, taking for her subject, "Gold."

Argly J. Beams, of Spencerville, then gave his oration which was entitled, "Life Is What We Make It." He was followed by Miss Ethel Tess who sang a very beautiful solo entitled, "Song of Roses." Mrs. Eugene Oberlin presided at the piano.

Veva V. Farner was next, her subject being "Simplicity, Sincerity and Success."

The reading by Miss Jennie L J. Steward was one of the most entertaining numbers on the program and showed excellent talent and preparation. The subject was, "The Death Disc."

Miss Ethel Nimmons then rendered a piano solo.

Robert A. Brown came next on the program, his subject being, "Object of Our Education."

May A. Dailey followed with her oration, "Self Reliance."

Gertrude Everitts gave the class poem and prophecy.

The valedictory was given by Ross E. Firestone, and was well delivered and showed preparation.

Supt. H. R. Bean then gave a few words of advice to the class and presented the diplomas.

Married

Mr. Faust Dale Franks and Miss Lilian May Fuller, Saturday May 7, at 4 o'clock p. m., at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Fuller, on West street, Rev. Edmund F. Albertson, D. D., officiating.

This was a real pretty wedding, the guests numbering about thirty. The impressive ring ceremony was used. A sumptuous wedding supper was provided, which all enjoyed. The house was decorated with ferns, violets and other flowers,

Both bride and groom are well known and well respected, and have a host of friends who are ready to join in hearty congratulations. They will reside on South Broadway and will be at home to their friends after May 20.

"O fortunate, O happy day,
When a new household takes its place
Among the myriad home of earth
Like a new star just sprung to birth
And rolled on its harmonious way
Into the boundless realms of space."

WELL REGULATED HORSE BARN

Pedigrees of the Three Breeding Horses Owned in Butler

J. E. Coll of this city is the owner of three highbred breeding horses, two having been imported from the old country and cost a large amount of money. These horses have been cared for and groomed for the past five years by John Shortridge, who also drives them out each day for exercise. As John's friends all know he is of a quiet makeup and consequently there isn't a better regulated barn in the country than Mr. Coll keeps. The loud talk and confusion which is frequently heard at such places is unknown here. As a result of a quiet trainer the horses themselves are quiet and gentle as is possible to make them, and the big fellows mind better at a word spoken in a moderate tone than most horses when screamed and sworn at, so much for the owner and groom, and now we come to the pedigrees of the horses.

The imported Belgian stallion, Barnum De Bouchout (30502) 2180, is a blue roan, excellent quality, fine finish and fine action, 16½ hands high, weight 1850 pounds. He was foaled March 18, 1902. Barnum De Bouchout was sired by Bon Prince No. 14980, he by Lewis de Lens No. 7086, dam Clemence de Hemptinne No. 11001. Barnum De Bouchout's dam Graminee No 111775, she by Sans Peur No. 7086, dam Fanchette No. 7355.

Also the imported Percheron stallion, Introuvable (51552) 40265, is a black, with star, left hind foot white, 17 hands high, weight 2000 pounds, with plenty of bone quality, and fine action. Foaled April 26, 1902. Bred by M. Principe Leboux, commune of Val. Canton of Mamers, Department of Sarthe. Sired by Brutus (34739) dam Rose (23155) she by Vigoureux (5615) 2nd dam Pauline (23154) she by Bayard (1546) 3rd dam Lisette belonging to M. Leboux Brutus (34739) by Germanicus (7825) out of Lisette (25005) by Papillon (739) Germanicus (7825) by Abdel Kader (232) out of Rosette II (7824) by Favori III (1381) by Utopia (731) etc. Abdel Kader (232) by Passe Partout (1402) out of Biene by Comet (719) he by French Monarch (734) etc. Passe Partout (1402) by Comet (719) out of Sophie by Favori I (711) he by Vieux Chaslin (713) out of L'Amie by Vieux Pierre (894) he by Coco (712). Ilderim (5302) by Valentin (5301) out of Chaton by Vieux Pierre (894) Valentin (5301) by Vieux Chaslin (713) he by Coco (712) out of Poule by Sandi Coco (712) by Mignon (715) out of Pauline by Vieux Coco Mignon (725) by Jean le Blanc (739). Vigoureux by Picador II (5506) out of Sophie belonging to M. Lefeuvre Picador II (5606) by Picador I (7330) out of Rose belonging to Picador I (7330) by Bayard (9495) out of Charmante (11762) by Bayard (9495). Bayard (9495) by Estraba (796) out of a mare belonging to M. Lefeuvre. Estraba (796) by a son of Jean le Blanc (739).

Bob La Boudy is a horse of excellent quality, fine style and perfect action, color dark brown, weight 1400 pounds, sired by an imported coach horse; dam, a full blooded Morgan.

All of these horses can be seen any time at the owner's barn, north of the electric light plant.

The University of Chicago now claims the credit from Cornell of making hens lay ready-dyed eggs. Surely, the collegiate triumphs of the century are very uplifting to the race.

A Mississippi ice driver found a wallet containing $2,000, hunted up the owner, was docked for the lost time and got a reward of a five-cent cigar for the restoration of the money. He not typically believes it pays to be honest.

Every now and then the news of the day contains the account of some person being burned to death while smoking in bed. The moral of such "accidents" and all like them in that disaster is generally one of the promptest things in the world to come to one when deliberately invited.

A grim argument in favor of letting well enough alone is found in a recent New York case. Not content with a verdict of murder in the second degree, the lawyer for the convicted man secured a new trial, at which the prisoner was found guilty in the first degree and sentenced to death.

Farming is getting to be not merely an occupation, but a profession. An American from the South, recommended by the Department of Agriculture, has gone to Siam as agricultural adviser to the King, and other Americans are filling similar positions in Baroda, one of the most prosperous native States of India. The King of Siam will pay his adviser six thousand dollars a year, which is more than the average hired man earns.

When a fashionable wedding or a sensational trial draws a multitude of curious people in a great city, there is no little comment on the bad manners and depraved tastes of Americans. It is worth noting—as showing a more attractive side of the picture—that the police reserves had to be called out in New York City the other day to handle a crowd of four thousand people who were trying to get into a hall built for two thousand people, in order to hear a concert. It was a fine concert, and the fact that it was free only emphasizes the general desire to enjoy an entertainment which is uplifting and inspiring.

It has been generally accepted by men of science that the last dinosaur trod the earth a great many centuries ago, in fact, something like four hundred thousand years ago. From the fossilized remains a good knowledge has been obtained of the gigantic proportions and terrifying appearance of the creature, and all have agreed in a preference to study the bones, rather than a living specimen at large. From South Africa there now comes the remarkable story that there is a living dinosaur somewhere in the northern part of Rhodesia. Natives have recently told of a mighty reptile in a lake near the river Lunga, and have identified drawings of the dinosaur as resembling this creature. Thus far the proof is hardly convincing, but the story arouses a certain interest. Unfortunately, the Roosevelt expedition did not penetrate that part of the African wilderness, but perhaps here is the opportunity for some hunter or naturalist to win immortal fame.

The results of the first ten years of government by commission in American cities are summarized in Everybody's Magazine by Charles E. Russell. The plan devised at Galveston in 1900 to meet a special emergency has now spread to include sixty cities with a population of more than 3,000,000. Why, asks the writer, in effect, go on with wards and aldermen? Why employ party ballots, with party emblems? Why call "democratic" a scheme of government which is but representative—and representative in the narrowest and most unsatisfactory sense? Already there is a long roll of cities which are doing without these familiar devices, and doing better. The Galveston idea has spread as far as South Dakota, Idaho and Washington, but its most signal successes have been in Iowa. Cedar Rapids and Des Moines are the two chief exemplars; the latter now claims that it is "the most economically and most honestly managed city of its size in the Middle West." The commission plan banishes party politics from local affairs, along with boss and machine. It views and manages the municipality as a business enterprise and gives an administration that is prompt, efficient, systematic and economical. By means of the referendum, initiative and recall it places responsibility definitely upon the people. And it appears to be working a change of attitude toward the community life by fostering a higher degree of communal consciousness. The Iowa towns are pointedly aware of improvement; they are feeling better within and are looking better without. Mr. Russell, in the momentum of his enthusiasm, calls for the extension of commission government from small cities to large ones. They, too, he contends, should be free to engage expert talent on the scientific grounds of fitness, should understand just what their officials are doing and how doing it, and should be able to dismiss them if incompetent. Doubtless, as he feels, the problems of Chicago and New York are too intricate and difficult for the grade of ability that ward and precinct politics puts into office. On the other hand, the scale of the problem is an integral part of it, and the drawbacks that probably inhere in the execution of the plan on even a small scale should be given a little more time to develop.

FATHER HELPED PRACTICE.

A little girl sat at an old square piano. Her mother moved about in the next room, preparing supper. Near the piano sat the father, carefully tidied up after his day in the machine shop.

"All the way home," the man said to his little daughter, "I was trying to whistle that new piece of yours, Mollie, but I forgot some parts, and you must help me. So play it through, please."

Mollie began, pleasure and importance in her face. At the second page she stumbled and dropped from the tempo, but hurried on.

"That was the place I forgot," interrupted her father. "Please play it over, just the air."

Over and over she was induced to play it, first with one hand, then with the other, until the passage had become familiar, and her little fingers had fairly mastered the difficulty.

"Do you know," she said, a few days later, as she played the simple melody to her teacher, "my father thinks this part is so pretty—the prettiest part in the whole piece. He likes to hear it over and over."

"Oh," thought the teacher, "with such parents what musicians I could make of even everyday material!"

To-day this girl is studying in New York under distinguished teachers, playing accompaniments for a well-known singer, invited to delightful houses as an honored guest, and leading a very interesting if an arduous life.

Her teacher insists that she was not exceptionally gifted; that the secret of her success lay very largely in the patient, intelligent oversight of her parents, and their tact in getting her to master the difficult parts of each lesson, and so the successive steps of technique.

ONE MINUTE WIRELESS.

Uncle Sam's Trained Men Can Put Up Station in That Time.

"There is no other country with a trained squad of men possessed of apparatus which can be taken from a wagon, set up and put in operation, capable of sending a wireless message twenty-five miles and occupying one minute and eight seconds only from the time of command, 'Halt, open station!' to the first buzz of the wireless wave-producing spark," says Popular Mechanics.

"There is more to opening a wireless station than hauling the apparatus from the wagon. It means erecting a mast forty feet high, spreading for 150 feet each four stranded wires which perform the double purpose of holding up the mast and of serving as the antenna of the wireless set, spreading another smaller set of insulated wire at the base of the mast for a 'ground' and connecting the instruments and the sources of power.

"When the first portable wireless was made in this country a few years ago a sixty-foot mast was required, demanding a complicated system of guys, a troublesome ground and several hundred feet radius of clear space for the erection of the station. The writer well remembers seeing the first tests of erecting this mast at Fort Myer, Virginia, and thinking that a hostile force would have little trouble finding time to demolish such an outfit during the three-quarters of an hour it took to get it in working order."

How About a Plaster?

One day an old war veteran limped into a shop and said to the druggist:

"I want some medicine, some sort of vermifuge, I suppose."

"Well, colonel, where's the trouble?" asked the clerk, sympathetically. "Where does the seat of your difficulty seem to be?"

"In my wooden leg, mister. It's gettin' all worm eaten."—Ladies' Home Journal.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

Things Mr. Taft Says Are "Proved."

In the banquet-room at Providence, R. I., with Senator Aldrich himself seated on his left, President Taft declared that the practical operation during seven months of the Aldrich tariff had "proved" seven propositions. That's one a month, you see.

One was to the effect that "free trade with the Philippines is a measure of justice." This "free" trade has restrictions on imports of Philippine rice, sugar and tobacco, but the substantial truth of the proposition must be admitted. Another was that the creation of the new Customs Court has provided a means for the speedy and just determination of tariff law. The court hasn't yet been organized, so its creation cannot yet have "proved" anything, but the truth of this must, too, be admitted, prospectively. No doubt the court will fulfill expectation. The value of his new Tariff Board is problematical. His idea of such a board is quite different from the board for which Congress has made provision.

With his other five propositions there must be radical and perpetual dissent, in the sense in which he lays them down; that is, as propositions establishing the merit of the new tariff. For instance, he says that it is "the best revenue-getter we ever had." This may be true, though a revival of business after months of depression has caused abnormal conditions that make a seven months' test not altogether conclusive as to its ultimate operation.

One of the chief grounds of complaint against the law is that it is too altogether good as a revenue-producer. It takes too much money from the pockets of the people. It lays too heavy a tax on the articles of consumption of the plain people. It bears too heavy a load of responsibility for an obnoxious period of high prices.

Mr. Taft explains triumphantly that the new law has "the largest free list." It does put works of art, 20 years old, on the free list, for which we may be thankful, and sundry articles of art manufacture, excepting stained-glass windows. Radium, whose existence was unknown when the Dingley bill was framed, is added to the free list.

But is Mr. Taft measuring by the bushel or by the yard when he says its free list is the "largest?" The value of a free list consists in the character, not in the number, of its articles.

What an inestimable privilege it must be to the people to have kindling wood admitted free and the lumber of which their dwellings are constructed and the paper on which their reading matter is printed taxed exorbitantly under a minimum schedule and taxed outrageously under a maximum schedule.

Those whom the exactions of the textile schedules are causing to take anxious thought as to wherewith they shall be clothed should be content. How irrational, when joss sticks are admitted free; also balm of Gilead, and stuffed birds not suitable for use on millinery, and blue clay—shouldn't our blue clay be protected against the pauper blue clay of Europe?—and cuttlefish bone and ipecac and lots of things!

And how can Mr. Taft, a jurist, accustomed to weighing evidence, say that it has been "proved" during these seven months that the Dingley rates have been "materially reduced?" Those months have "proved" nothing of the sort; rather the contrary.

In the closing days of the special session the results of a computation made by experts of average rates of duty were given in the House by Congressman H. T. Rainey, of Illinois. Those results, which seem to have commanded confidence as to their accuracy and have been widely quoted since, showed that under the Dingley law the average duties, reduced to an ad valorem basis, were 44.16 per cent. The minimum schedules of the Payne-Aldrich law provide for average duties of 45.87 per cent. The maximum schedules of that law provide for an average of 70.87 per cent.

Mr. Taft's "proved" material reduction is a minimum increase of 1.71 per cent, and the purchasing agent of the family gets an idea these days that it is an increase of many times 1.71 per cent.—St. Louis Republic.

Insurgent Indiana.

In Indianapolis a convention representing every county in the state enthusiastically applauded a violent attack upon the Aldrich-Taft tariff and the trusts, and unanimously approved resolutions praising Senator Beveridge for his anti-Aldrich attitude and demanding honest downward revision.

The convention was not composed of Populists nor Democrats. It comprised the flower of Hoosier Republicanism. Yet, to a man, they denounced the iniquitous tariff, in the face of President Taft's known desire that they should indorse it, and they nominated a state slate of anti-Aldrich men from top to bottom and demanded direct election of United States Senators by the people.

If President Taft and the Republican grand dukes who form his entourage cherish any remaining delusions that the West is reconciled to their tariff outrage, the convention at Indianapolis should undeceive them.

Indiana is now in open revolt against Aldrich and the Aldrich-Taft tariff. Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska and other western states will follow the example of Indiana. The handwriting on the wall grows larger day by day, and the possibility of Republican victory in the congressional election in November dwindles into less than an apology for a forlorn hope.

Speaker Cannon's Enemies in Congress.

Not infrequently it happens that a veteran who has trodden smoky fields of battle without perturbation or complaint serves out his time and comes home to places of peace, only to allow "trifles light as air" to utterly unbalance his temper. Such seems to have been the case with Uncle Joe Cannon, when the House the other day put a climax to all his wrongs by refusing an appropriation to maintain a "joy wagon" for the Speaker. Thereupon Uncle Joe took the floor, and in a speech in which his long-suppressed bitterness of spirit voiced itself he defied the combined Republican insurgents and Democrats to remove him from the Speaker's chair! As an evidence of the Speaker's excitement and haste he spoke of the insurgents as "Republicans on this side who do not approve of the personality of their Speaker."

The Examiner has seen no evidence that any one in Congress has been incited to hostility toward Mr. Cannon by anything purely personal in himself. It is probably true that many persons of quick perceptions or fine taste might imbibe a prejudice against him by merely encountering him in a street car. But the complaints of the anti-Cannon men are based on any recondite psychological emotions. They do not oppose him so much for what he is as for what he has done! They maintain that he has disgraced the chair where Clay, Colfax and Blaine used to sit, by an impudent exercise of gavel rule, utterly intolerable to any self-respecting representative. Worse yet, they allege that his insolent domination of debate and procedure has always been in the effort to cripple or destroy useful measures aimed at the predatory trusts. And they affirm that his conduct in this respect has been so persistent and increasingly offensive to the House and injurious to the country that to complain is no longer a privilege, but a duty.

We believe them. We further venture to say that duty in this case ought not to stop with protest. Cannon's battle-gage lies on the floor of the House, and nothing would so fittingly finish the history of jo-cannonism as would congressional action vacating his position as Speaker! Then, if Jo would only appeal to the electors of the Eighteenth Illinois District, and if they should act at the polls as decent, capable, second thought must prescribe, nothing would be left of Cannon to trouble the country more than an unpleasant recollection!—Chicago Examiner.

Indiana Republicans Answer Mr. Taft.

As vainly as anxiously will Mr. Taft scan the platform adopted by the Indiana Republican convention for some word expressing approval of the Aldrich-Payne tariff law. This significant omission, coupled with the platform's demand for the speedy modification of that law so that the American tariff shall be "measured by the difference between the cost of production here and abroad," and for "the immediate creation of a genuine, permanent, nonpartisan tariff commission with ample powers and definite duties fixed in the law itself," proves that Beveridge, not President Taft, has established the tariff doctrine for Indiana in this present year.

The senior senator from Indiana in his strong speech before the convention gave clear expression to the fact that the President has receded a long way from the stand originally taken by him. His recent earnest and frequent praise of the tariff as it came out of the Aldrich-Cannon conference committee apparently has had no effect upon the first convention of his party to be held in a western state. That a considerable number of other states of the middle west will follow Indiana's lead in this respect is fairly certain.

Republicans in none of the other western states, except Ohio, have more pressing need of expressing popular sentiment on the tariff than have the Republicans of Indiana. There the Democrats have strong hopes of electing their state ticket, winning the legislature and placing a member of their own party in the seat of Senator Beveridge. Naturally, therefore, Beveridge's stand for tariff reform was made the most conspicuous feature of the convention. On his tariff-reform record rather than on that of the Republican President Indiana Republicans hope to win the fall election.

A somewhat similar state of things exists in Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas. New England has demonstrated that such love as it bears for the existing tariff is neither very broad nor very deep. The general situation, indeed, strongly suggests that President Taft's reiterated praises of the handiwork of Senator Aldrich are a source of embarrassment to his party in many quarters instead of a source of strength. The west is turning insurgent more and more in an effort to save the situation.—Chicago News.

Wanted—Two Open Seasons.

Western Massachusetts farmers are trying to secure an open season for deer, which, owing to years of protection, have multiplied until they seriously menace orchards and gardens, causing the farmers much loss.

Protection has also increased New England tariff wolves to an alarming extent, and they seriously menace American homes and American prosperity.

The working West will gladly use its influence to help Massachusetts farmers secure an open season for deer, if Massachusetts farmers will help the West secure an open season for the tariff wolves of New England.

Hammering the Billboards.

It is said that during a strike of the billposters on Chicago a number of theater managers made exclusive use of newspaper advertising to announce their attractions and found that they were drawing bigger houses during that period than when they were making free use of the billboards. Our cities have had hard times trying to abolish the billboard nuisance. Perhaps a general realization that billboards are unprofitable as well as unsightly would help a lot in having their use discontinued.—Success Magazine.

Murder Will Out.

In a county seat in one of the middle Western states dwelt a lawyer who, after a practice of thirty years, had accumulated a competence and retired. Being a man of much more than ordinary ability, an excellent speaker, entertaining decided political views and enjoying the confidence of the community, he was urged by his friends to run for Congress. He refused. In vain they pointed out the fact that a nomination would be equivalent to an election, and pledged themselves to secure his nomination. He would not listen to them. A man high in the political councils of the state came to see him and added his persuasion.

"You ought to take that office," he said. "It might lead to something higher. You would make a national reputation."

"That's what I am afraid of."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Well," answered the lawyer, hesitatingly, "I will tell you, but it is in strict confidence. It must not go any further. Many years ago, when I was young and inexperienced, I published a small volume of original poetry. So far as I know, there is not a copy of that book in existence now, but one would turn up in some corner of the world if I were to run for office, and the papers would print extracts from it. I wouldn't have that happen for a million dollars. No, sir, nothing doing!"

MISCHIEF MAKER.

A Surprise in Brooklyn.

An adult's food that can save a baby proves itself to be nourishing and easily digested and good for big and little folks. A Brooklyn man says:

"When baby was about eleven months old he began to grow thin and pale. This was, at first, attributed to the heat and the fact that his teeth were coming, but, in reality, the poor little thing was starving, his mother's milk not being sufficient nourishment.

"One day after he had cried bitterly for an hour, I suggested that my wife try him on Grape-Nuts. She soaked two teaspoonfuls in a saucer with a little sugar and warm milk. This baby ate so ravenously that she fixed a second which he likewise finished.

"It was not many days before he forgot all about being nursed, and has since lived almost exclusively on Grape-Nuts. To-day the boy is strong and robust, and as cute a mischief-maker as a thirteen months old baby is expected to be.

"We have put before him other foods, but he will have none of them, evidently preferring to stick to that which did him so much good—his old friend, Grape-Nuts.

"Use this letter any way you wish, for my wife and I can never praise Grape-Nuts enough after the brightness it has brought to our household."

Grape-Nuts is not made for a baby food, but experience with thousands of babies shows it to be among the best, if not entirely the best in use. Being a scientific preparation of Nature's grains, it is equally effective as a body and brain builder for grown-ups.

The Wand of Sleep
OR
The Devil-Stick

By the Author of
"The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

"And what did you do?" asked Jen, much interested in this strange history.

"I went in later on, and found that my mother had gone to bed. I said nothing at the time, as I was afraid of Dido. Afterwards, when Maurice was killed, and you said that the devil-stick had killed him, I went to Dido and accused her of the crime. She was fearfully angry, and warned me that if I said a word about the theft of the devil-stick, I would be in danger of hanging my own mother. Afraid lest such an accusation should kill my mother, who is not strong, I said nothing to her, or indeed to anyone. I told a lie to you to save my mother; what else could I do? But now I tell you the truth, and I wish you to protect us both against the evil of Dido and Dr. Etwald."

"You believe that Dr. Etwald killed Maurice?"

"I am sure of it. When I became ill through the terror of the secret which I possessed, Dido prepared that poison under the pretence of curing me, but I now know that she did so to re-fill the devil-stick. She then sent it to Etwald, and he killed Maurice. Afterwards stole the body with the assistance of Dido."

Major Jen moved a step towards the door of the summer-house. All at once he paused and looked back.

"One moment, Miss Dallas!" he said, quickly. "Does David know about the theft of the devil-stick? That is," he added, more precisely, "does he know that your mother stole it?"

"I cannot be quite certain if he does," said Isabella, after a pause, "but I fancy he has some idea of it. When he has seen me of late he has always been so nervous and silent. At our last meeting, also, he told me that we were to fear nothing."

"H'm!" said Jen, reflectively. "Undoubtedly you are right, Miss Dallas. David must have learned the truth in some way; but I cannot imagine how. Well, good-by, good-by. I shall see you later on, when we have this scoundrel under lock and key."

On consideration, Jen thought it would be best to say nothing definite to David about his discovery. If the young man, from a feeling of honor towards an unhappy woman, kept silent, the Major was the last person in the world to tempt him to break it. Jen decided to merely hint to David that he knew the truth, and to let the arrest of Etwald tell its own tale, and unseal the lad's lips, by showing that Mrs. Dallas was innocent. As Jen came to this conclusion, he entered his own gates, and rather to his surprise he met David, considerably agitated, advancing to meet him.

"Inspector Arkel and Dr. Etwald are waiting for you in the library," said Sarby, rapidly.

"I know it. I sent for them. I wish the first to arrest the second."

"Arrest Dr. Etwald! On what grounds?"

"On the grounds of having murdered Maurice," said Jen, coldly. "Yes, you may look astonished, David, but it is the truth. Without your assistance I have discovered that Etwald is guilty. Also," added the Major, in a kindly tone, "I know the reason of your silence."

"Who—who told you?" stammered the young man, as pale as death.

"Miss Dallas."

"Isabella!" David looked terrified.

CHAPTER XX.

Before Jen had time to inuiqre the meaning of David's strange exclamation, the young man had turned on his heel and was walking rapidly back to the house. Surprised by this behavior, and suspicious of its reason, the Major called out to him to stop; but, without taking any notice, the young man increased his pace, and was soon lost to sight. Jen went after him, and on entering the library found that only Arkel was present.

"Where is Dr. Etwald?" demanded the Major, anxiously.

"He went up stairs a few minutes ago to see your servant," replied the Inspector, rising. "Mr. Sarby was with him."

Jen started. Evidently David had returned before him in order to see Etwald, and, to gain private speech with the doctor, had conducted him to Jaggard's sick-room. For the moment Jen—still suspicious of Sarby's behavior—had it in his mind to follow; but a few minutes of reflection convinced him that this was unnecessary. David did not know all the conversation which had taken place between himself and Isabella, therefore he could inform Etwald of nothing new. But, indeed, the Major pondered why David wished to speak privately with the doctor. It looked, to his mind, as though the two men were in league.

"Well, never mind Dr. Etwald just now," he said, aloud. "He had his duties to perform, and I have mine. Sit down, Mr. Arkel. I suppose you wonder why I have sent for you."

"Well, no, Major. I presume it is in connection with the case."

"You are right. I wish to know if you have discovered anything new."

"Yes. Your messenger, Battersea, was wandering about your grounds on that night."

"Battersea!" cried Jen, thunderstruck. "Did he see the body carried off?"

"He did not see it taken out of the house," explained Arkel, referring to some notes which he held in his hand, "but he saw it put into the carriage, which was waiting in the winding lane at the foot of your grounds. Two people carried the body between them—a man and a woman—but Battersea cannot give me their names."

"I can, however," said Jen, grimly. "I'll give you the names later on Mr. Inspector. In the meantime, be good enough to conclude your report of Battersea's confession. It interests me deeply."

"I thought it would," replied Arkel, with a look of satisfaction. "Well, the man and the woman put the body into the carriage—a doctor's brougham. When the body was placed in the carriage and the door closed, the woman went away. The man mounted the carriage-box and drove off. It appears that there was no coachman."

"I don't wonder at that," rejoined the Major. "This precious pair were afraid to trust their secret to a third party. No doubt, the horse, being quiet, was left to stand in the deep shadow of the lane while the robbers stole the corpse. However, I understand. The woman went away, the man mounted the box, and I suppose drove off with the corpse."

"Also with Battersea," added Arkel, with a significant smile. "It seems that the tramp wished to see the end of this singular adventure, or, no doubt, he wished to make money out of it. Well, he was driven with the carriage to Deanminster."

"Quite so, and into that gloomy courtyard which surrounds the house of Dr. Etwald," added Major Jen, with a satisfied smile. "Battersea saw the doctor take the body out of the carriage and carry it into the house. Then, on his return—Etwald's, I mean—he unharnessed the horse and put it into the stable; also the carriage into the coach-house. Is that not so, Mr. Arkel?"

"Battersea told you so," stammered Arkel, amazed at his insight.

"I assure you he told me nothing. But I am as clever at Battersea, and can put two and two together. Next day Battersea went to Etwald, did he not, and tried to blackmail him, but this clever doctor compelled him to keep silent? I know a great many things, Mr. Inspector. For instance, I know that the woman who assisted Dr. Etwald to steal the body is Dido; also that Dr. Etwald is a murderer as well as a thief."

"If I had only known that, I would have had the warrant altered."

"What!" cried Jen, with an expression of ferocious joy lighting up his face, "you have a warrant for the arrest of Etwald?"

"Yes, but on the charge of stealing the body only. I took it out after hearing the evidence of the tramp Battersea."

"Very good. Then you can take out a warrant for his arrest as a murderer, after hearing my evidence. I swear on my sacred honor, that Maurice Aylmer was killed by Max Etwald!"

At this moment the door of the library opened slowly, and Dr. Etwald, calm and composed, appeared on the threshold. Behind him, over his shoulder, peered the pale countenance of David. From the ironical look on the doctor's face it would appear that he had overheard the accusation of the Major, and was prepared to treat it with contempt. That such was the case appeared by the first words which issued from his mouth as he faced his accuser.

"I hear the name of Max Etwald coupled with the crime of murder. Is this the way you treat your guests, Major?"

"You are not my guest," retorted Jen, furiously.

"No; rather your victim, seeing that you have lured me into a trap. It is not to see Jaggard that you asked me here; but rather to force me—if you can into confessing that I am guilty of a triple crime."

"You make one mistake, sir," said Jen, coldly. "I accused you of two crimes, not of three."

"Ah, you are lenient," replied Etwald, a shade of surprise passing over his features, a surprise which was reflected in the agitated face of David Sarby. "Well, sir, let me hear of what I am accused."

With the utmost coolness, he entered the room and sat down in a chair near Arkel. The inspector, with his hand in his breast-pocket, fingered the warrant, but did not deem it wise to execute it until he had heard what proof the Major possessed against Etwald for the murder of Maurice Aylmer. David sat down near the door, and followed every movement of the scene which ensued with keen eyes. Thus, three of the occupants of the apartment were seated—Sarby, Arkel, and Etwald. Only one man stood up—Major Jen—and he stood as the accuser.

"Dr. Etwald," said the Major, with great calmness and deliberation, "you are a clever and ambitious man, who wishes to make his way in the world, but has hitherto failed to do so for lack of money. To procure money for your experiments in chemistry, you would do anything—even marry a rich woman!"

"Or murder the man formerly engaged to her," retorted Etwald, with a pale smile. "Go on, Major Jen, I see the mark you are aiming at."

"You found this rich match here," resumed Jen, without noticing the interruption, "in the person of Miss Dallas, already engaged to the late Mr. Aylmer. You loved her, and wanted your rival out of the way. To do so you had the devil-stick stolen."

"Ho, ho! and by whom?"

"Mrs. Dallas stole the devil-stick, and gave it to Dido, who, by your directions, filled it with fresh poison. Dido helped you to do so, and drugged of death to you, and with it you killed my poor boy at the very gates of the girl he loved. Afterwards you stole the body of the man you murdered. Dido helped you to do so and drugged my servant, Jaggard, with the perfume of the devil-stick poison, in order that the theft might be carried out with safety."

"It would seem that Dido has a great deal to do with these matters," said Etwald, looking up to the roof.

"She has everything to do with them. She will be brought against you as a witness."

"Indeed. Then it appears that I am to be arrested."

"I can answer that," broke in Arkel, amazed at the self-possession of the man. "I have here a warrant to arrest you for stealing the body of Maurice Aylmer."

"How can you prove that I did so?" he demanded.

"By the evidence of the tramp Battersea."

"Battersea!" repeated the doctor, and for the first time he frowned.

"Yes. He saw you place the body in the brougham, with the assistance of Dido. He followed you to Deanminster, and saw you take the body into your house."

"Oh, then," said Etwald, turning towards Jen, "I am not to be accused of the murder."

"Later on, my friend Cain," said the Major, grimly. "You will have quite enough to do to save your neck from the halter."

"I am afraid so, indeed, Major; therefore, I must have assistance. There is nothing like being provided in time with counsel for the defence; therefore, I must ask Mr. David Sarby to defend me from these absurd charges."

"I!" cried David, starting up with pale cheeks. "I defend you!"

"Assuredly," replied Etwald, fixing a piercing glance on the young man. "Do you refuse?"

"Of course he does," cried Jen, wrathfully.

David raised his head and looked at the Major, at the doctor, at the Inspector.

"No," said he, in a firm voice to all three, "I accept. I shall defend Max Etwald."

LUNCHES AT ONE CENT EACH.

They Are Fed to Half-Fed Children Who Would Resent Charity.

A heaping portion of Indian pudding with milk and two crackers was the menu for the 1-cent lunch served at the Winthrop School yesterday, and as long as the service proves as successful as it has in the past the lunches will be continued at 10:30 each morning, so that none of the little children who come to school with appetites half-satisfied need go home famished.

The high cost of living which has shaved down the breakfasts at home almost to a minimum operates to send some children to school with insufficient nourishment to do justice to themselves in their work, the Boston Post says.

At the Winthrop School it was decided that any plan that seemed to include charity would prove a failure, as children are the quickest persons to form class barriers and look down on their playmates who may not be able to have food enough at home.

Miss Emmeline F. Torrey, teacher of domestic science, believes that she has solved the problem in the 1-cent lunches served each morning. If cost of preparation and service were added it would be impossible to make the meal otherwise than charitable, so Miss Torrey has a class of eighteen girls, ranging in age from 10 to 13, prepare the dishes and serve them. Thus the cent that the children pay covers the entire cost.

The cup of pudding and crackers, together with the milk, which was served yesterday to each hungry pupil had enough nutriment in it to equal nearly three large slices of bread, with butter. The quality, Miss Torrey said, was well suited for the needs of the children.

All the teachers in the school say that the tentative working of the plan thus far has been to provide much more wideawake children after the lunch hour and to do away with the eagerness to have school dismissed.

GOES STRAUSS ONE BETTER.

Joseph Holbrooke Calls for Weird Instruments in the Orchestra.

Having heard "Elektra" at the Manhattan opera house, New York, you have some idea of how Herr Strauss is capable of expanding an orchestra to over 100 pieces, some of which are quite unknown to the ordinary musician, says a London letter to the New York Times. Joseph Holbrooke, however, in an orchestra concert in Queen's Hall last Friday apparently went Strauss one better. His concert was the prelude and a scene from his three-act music-drama, "Dylan," which was produced for the first time in London.

The scoring of "Dylan" is on a colossal scale, as is shown by the fact that 120 members of the London Symphony orchestra have been engaged, with Landon Ronald as conductor. In addition to the ordinary instruments of the modern orchestra, the composer has scored for one bass flute, which has long since fallen into disuse and which, Grove's "Dictionary of Music" says, "requires a great deal of breath and has a tone not strong, but of very fine quality;" one oboe d'amora, also an obsolete instrument; three saxaphones, comparatively new and not much used; an unlimited number of concertinas, which are a discovery of Mr. Holbrooke; every imaginable percussion instrument; one tubaphone, which is a little known instrument, and one celesta. All these extra instruments have been especially made for Lord Howard de Walden, who has presented them to Mr. Holbrooke.

In spite of the extraordinary amount of noise occasioned by "Dylan," it has considerable merit in the orchestration, Mr. Ronald says. And he has expressed the wish to "place on record my appreciation of the astounding technique shown by this young man in scoring for such an enormous orchestra."

How Roberts Won the Victoria Cross

Roberts noted that a sowar of the squardon with which he rode was in great danger from a sepoy with a fixed bayonet. The contest of sword against bayonet would have ended disastrously had not Roberts intervened and disposed of the bayonet. That was barely done when he noticed in the distance two sepoys fleeing with a standard. He galloped after the rebels and overtook them, and then he had a close fight for the possession of the standard. He cut down its chief bearer. While wrenching the staff from the man's grasp with both of his hands the other sepoy turned his musket on him and fired. The muzzle was within a few inches of Roberts' person, and there would certainly have been an end of him had not the musket refused to go off. At it was, he rode away unhurt with the standard, and for those two courageous and gallant acts in close succession Roberts got the Victoria cross.—Cobban's "Life of Roberts."

Flexible Statistics.

"What do those statistics of yours tend to prove?"

"I don't know," answered the mathematical expert. "I'm just getting up the figures for this man. I don't know which side of the argument he intends to use them for."—Washington Star

A Defeated General.

"What has become of your New Year's resolution?"

"Well, having held out long enough to satisfy all requirements of bravery and honor, it capitulated last night for humanity's sake."

FIVE ATTRACTIVE COSTUMES.

DESCRIPTION OF GOWNS IN THE ILLUSTRATION.

The first gown on the left is of blue shot silk with yoke and sleeves of cream-colored all-over lace. The blouse is gathered to the yoke and continued part way down the arm, where it is gathered to the lace undersleeve. The skirt is seven gored with panel front and back, the side gores being lengthened by a shirred flouncing. The hat is of corn-colored rough straw with blue velvet crushed around the crown, knotted at the side with a bunch of ostrich plumes in the same color

The second figure shows a charming little costume in myrtle green cloth with a short skirt crossed over at the knees in tunic effect. The underskirt is pleated. The coat is half fitting, with a low roll collar of silk and a cutaway front. The hat is of green straw. The left brim rolls upward and flowers in wood colors encircle the crown. Plumes in two shades of green are arranged at the side.

The third is a gown of purple mauve cachemire de soie embroidered with soutache. The yoke and undersleeves are of tulle. The seven-gored skirt is plain, except for the corners on each side of the front and back panels, which are embroidered to match the front of the corsage. The hat is a small toque of burnt straw with shaded velvet, matching the gown in color, crushed around and finished with a bow and a sweeping aigrette at the side.

The fourth is a suit of navy blue diagonal serge. The skirt has a shaped plain yoke with pleated flounce and box-pleat front and back. The coat fastens on the shoulder, crosses below the waist line and slopes to the sides. The square neck and also the edges of the coat are outlined with wide braid and rows of narrow braid. The buttons are large and antique. The hat is a large, plain straw, with the brim rolling upward on the sides and faced with black velvet. On the left side on the underside of the brim is arranged an aigrette caught with a fancy button.

The fifth is of cocoa-colored cloth combined with velvet, which forms the bodice and straight flounce. The bands of the cloth at the yoke, belt, around the sleeve caps and above the flounce are embroidered with soutache. All-over lace forms the yoke and undersleeves and a frill of lace at the wrist extends a few inches up the sleeve. The turban is of straw braid in the basket weave with a crown of panne velvet in geranium color, draped so as to give the greatest height at the back.

Woman as a Social Success.

There is no quality more to be desired to make a woman a social success than that of tact. Its possessor knows the right thing to do and the right time for doing it, and thus gains a reputation for cleverness and for many virtues which a tactless person would never win from her circle of acquaintances, no matter how excellent her qualities of both heart and head.

The tactful woman is not only a patient listener, but she is a thoroughly good one. She shows no weariness even when she has heard the same story more than once from the same person, and she smiles in the right place, and appears to enjoy hearing jokes just as much as her companion enjoys telling them, says Woman's Life.

A tactful woman generally gets her own way with her husband, and with other people, and yet in such a manner that people always suppose that they are following their own and not her inclinations. The fact is that she knows when a man is approachable and likely to be amenable to her wishes, and when it is best to leave him alone. Tact is a weapon guided with a multitude of precautions and feminine wiles by the wise woman, and it is only the wise who possess it.

Embroidered Linen Blouse.

A blouse of white linen appears here, the design of which affords an excellent opportunity for the girl who is handy with her embroidery needle. The shirt is very simple in cut, having a single pleat over the shoulder, the edge of which is button-holed in a fine scallop. At about the bust line this tuck broadens into two rounded tabs secured by pearl buttons. These tabs and embroidery are repeated on the cuff of the otherwise simple sleeve. The scallop outlines the Dutch neck, which is filled with a high collar of lace and finished by a jabot of the same. The belt is also embroidered and fastened by a pearly button.

Mending with Plaster.

In lieu of drawing the torn edges of a dress together with silk thread, or even with the frayed threads of the material, an excellent plan lies in your medicine chest. A piece of court plaster will form a good working basis upon which a comparatively invisible reparation can be made. If the tear be on the plain width the skirt should be laid upon a table, the edges pulled together and pinned down, and finally the strip of court plaster applied. A hot iron will press the edges together, and the frayed threads should be cut away as a finishing touch.

The Lady of the Telephone.

She is more than five feet tall, she is 95 per cent unmarried, she is neat, she is quick, she is never deaf nor dumb, she is invisible when most effective—she is the girl who must be consulted before you can get the telephone you want. Though not much of a mathematician, she deals in numbers wholesale and retail, adding and substracting with lightning-like rapidity.

The government experts find that she can answer 225 calls a minute without shedding a hairpin, but do not mention that she can give you the same wrong number three times in five minutes and cause attacks of apoplexy and indignation at both ends of the wire.

She must be either very patient or very indifferent, this operator in the conversation exchange, for she deals with many men of many tempers and many women of many tongues. And if she can manage this successfully and emerge from a day of conflict with unruffled temper and smiling face, she must be a wonder.

There she sits, this lady of the telephone, calm, polite, like Patience on a Monument smiling at Rage. From out the wreck of matter and the ruin of worlds comes undisturbed her even tones, "Number, please!"

Nasal Obstruction.

Many people suffer from "stuffiness" or "stoppage" of the nose through life, without ever thinking of consulting their medical attendant. It is one of the most frequent causes of deafness, and it is this symptom which is often the immediate or direct reason for the patient's seeking advice. Nasal obstruction is responsible for many other troubles. Further, it not only interferes with the development of these organs, but when severe it is responsible for a state known as "aprosexia," or impaired intellectual development, characterized by lack of ability to concentrate the attention, by dullness of perception, and backwardness in learning.

Substitute for Cream.

The following is a good substitute for cream: Boil three-quarters of a pint of new milk, put a level teaspoonful of flour into a cup with the yolk of an egg and mix well together, adding a little sugar. When the milk boils draw it back from the fire, and, after it has been allowed to cool a little, pour over the flour and egg mixture, stirring briskly to prevent it from becoming lumpy. Pour the mixture into the saucepan and heat over the fire, stirring one way, until the egg thickens. It must not boil, or it will be spoiled. When cold it is ready for use.

Don't Tell Your Troubles.

When we have a grievance it is so tempting to go and talk it over with friend or relation. Tempting, yes; wise, no. For, as a rule, we are so keen in the irritation of the moment for sympathy that the temptation to "paint with a big brush" is almost irresistible. And later—well, later probably we find that there were extenuating circumstances; the culprit was not so black as we had fancied, and in our penitence we would give a great deal to be able to recall the unjust things that we said. For, rest assured, we will always be reminded of them by the person in whom we confided.

The House Fly.

In the same order with the diptera come the house fly, already referred to—the blue bottle or blow fly, and others. The larvae of all such live on carrion and decaying organic matter. The common house fly has a very short life history. The female deposits 150 eggs on dung or any kind of soft filth, the larvae hatch, we are told, in a day or two and feed on the refuse, get full grown in five or six days, take on the quiescent or pupa stage for a week and finally emerge as winged insects to wander about, depositing dirt on our picture frames and disfiguring unframed pictures and every shining ornament, tickling our skin just as we are doing some particular bit of work, disturbing our forty winks, to say nothing about his bearing disease germs about and depositing them as if they were rotten grains for fertilizing flowers. Verily the house fly is an unmitigated nuisance and should be exterminated. If we could only induce every owner of garbage and manure heaps to quickly consign it to the ground or to a roaring fire we could do much to exterminate this pest. Nothing but compulsory sanitary laws will come near to producing the abolition of this creature. He is no good to anybody, and may be seen at last stuck to a wall with a fungus which has its roots in his entrails.

Fascinating Dinner Gown.

Simplicity and elegance are combined in the gown sketched. The skirt is long and made with a gracefully draped tunic of gold color chiffon cloth, matching that used for bodice, the latter artistically put together with fine folds of the material over shoulders and deep sleeve bands of gold embroidered net. Similar net is used for band across front and back and under arm pieces. Lower part of bodice blouses cleverly into a narrow waist band of gold satin joining it to skirt. This model might easily be copied by a home dressmaker with quite satisfactory results, its chief charm lying in its simplicity.

To Keep Wall Clean.

The best way to keep the walls of the kitchen white and glossy is to wash their painted surface with bran water instead of soap. Boil one pint of bran in a gallon of water for an hour. The paint will look better and keep clean longer when washed with this than when cleaned with soap or water.

In Bible Times.

Dear Miss Barefacts. I am deeply in love with a young girl of 240 and she cares for me, although I am 150 years her senior. Should I obtain her parents' consent before marrying her? —Judge.

Law in Oklahoma.

In Oklahoma the law provides that when a widow needs the wages of her son of school age the state shall pay to the mother what the son would earn, while he continues at school.

Douglas Spoke in the Dark.

"The boys of 1861 are going fast," said the major. "Nearly every morning there are names in the obituary columns of the newspapers whose owners were associated with events or incidents to which I held a personal, even if humble, relationship. And each name reminds me of how close we fellows were to each other in the first months of the Civil War, and how much we have forgotten. There died recently a man who was, like myself, only one of a million soldiers, but I had reason to remember him, because in the first week of war he stood beside me in front of the old Nell House, in Columbus, Ohio, and heard that wonderful speech of Stephen A. Douglas, which was never reported, and yet gave courage to thousands of broken-hearted and despairing men.

"It was about a week after Fort Sumter had been fired on, and Douglas was on his way to Chicago and Springfield to confer with his friends and supporters in Illinois. He had been delayed by accidents on the railways, and went quietly to the Nell House for rest. The Governor and members of the Legislature heard of his presence in the city, and organized a demonstration in his favor. He had been very popular with his party in Ohio, and since the inauguration of Lincoln had been almost as popular with the Republicans. He was regarded as the leader of the Union Democrats, and there was already gossip as to the important position he was to hold in the struggle against secession.

"All men in political life had been stunned and enraged by the events of the last week, and they as well as the people who looked up to them as leaders turned hungrily to Douglas, hoping that he might say the right word, and yet fearing he might say the wrong one. When the crowd gathered in the street in front of the Nell House, myself and several other young men, leaning on the fence of the capitol grounds, strained our eyes to see the great Democratic leader, who had held Lincoln's hat on inauguration day. But we did not see him. He came, half dressed, to the window of his unlighted bedroom, and, standing in the darkness, spoke to the crowd below.

"His deep voice rolled out from the darkness and fell like a benediction on the crowd standing with upturned faces in the street. Never had voice so thrilled me; never had mere words seemed so solemn and impressive as those spoken by Douglas that night. My boy friend standing at my side caught my arm at the first word, and held one in his clutch until the last word had been spoken, and the crowd of legislators, politicians and business men seemed as much impressed by the mystery and the words as we younger men were.

"Douglas said at once that a great crisis had come upon the country, and that all party and other questions must be pushed aside. He said slowly, as if weighing every word, 'The Union must be preserved, and the insurrection against the government must be crushed.' After the word crushed came a pause that gave emphasis to the phrase, and then, speaking as slowly as before, he pledged his hearty support to the Lincoln administration, and declared there was no other course open to the loyal citizen, who must stand by the government until national authority was everywhere recognized. Then, declining a reception, he closed his window, and the crowd dispersed.

"Members of the Senate and members of the House walked away arm in arm, like boys. There was no cheering, but all had been comforted, and a good many Democrats who had been on the fence that night jumped off on the other side. There were in that crowd, standing within ten feet of my perch on the fence, one man who was to become President, four men who were to become major generals in the Union Army, a score of men who were, as brigadiers, to hold important commands, four men who were to become Governors, three cabinet officers, and several hundred who were within three months to be carrying muskets in defense of the flag.

"Of all the more prominent men present on that evening not one is living now. Douglas, then spoken of as a possible lieutenant general, died within six weeks. Dennison, Garfield, Cox, Tod and others who lived to do great work, all are dead. Some of the young men who were with me that night at the fence became distinguished soldiers. Not a few of them fell on the field, but the most of them lived on for thirty or fourty years. I can place only one of the hundreds who heard Douglas speak in the dark in April, 1861. In the last year they have gone fast, but if any are left they should put on record their recollection of the incidents of that night." —Chicago Inter Ocean.

Sixteen Sons in Civil War.

It was Cornelia the Roman matron and mother of Grachi, who on being asked to exhibit her jewels called her children into the apartment where she was entertaining visitors and presenting them said: "These are my jewels."

With fully as much pride might Mrs. Sarah Brandon, of Pipe Creek, Belmont County, Ohio, exhibit her children as her jewels, for sixteen of her sons fought in the civil war, fourteen on the side of the North and two on the side of the Confederacy. Few cases parallel to this can be found in all history.

Mrs. Brandon recently celebrated her 109th birthday anniversary and thus from the standpoint of longevity, as well as of motherhood, is a remarkable woman. Her maiden name was Sarah Barker and she was born in 1801 near Pipe Creek, Ohio, where she has resided all her life. At the age of 15 she was married to Charles Brandon, who took part in the Mexican war. In 1856 Brandon died, leaving his widow with twenty-three children, sixteen of whom were boys. When the civil war broke out all of the sons enlisted, fourteen of the brothers going into the Union army and two with the Confederates. In one battle, that of Bull Run, the two brothers on the Confederate side were pitted against five of their Union brothers.

Hiram Brandon, the oldest son, is now past 89 years of age and is a resident of Bellaire, Ohio. The youngest is a resident of Belmont county and exhibits seventeen bullet wounds, having taken part in seventy-two battles, skirmishes of scouting expeditions under General Sherman.

Those who find in the use of tobacco an argument against longevity will meet with no support for their view in the case of Mrs. Brandon. Early in life she formed the tobacco habit and uses a large quantity daily, both for chewing and smoking. Never during her life has she worn a hat, her only head covering being a sunbonnet. Notwithstanding her great age she is still able to get around and drives to town several times a week to purchase household supplies. Last fall she was thrown from a buggy in a runaway accident, but picked herself up and walked to her home, a mile distant. Every three months she travels to the county seat for the purpose of drawing the pension of $12 allowed her by the government.

The photograph of Mrs. Brandon is in the natural history gallery at Columbus and also in the Hall of Honor at Washington, D. C., as a mark of respect for her having furnished the largest number of sons for the civil war. Each of the sixteen sons married when young and was blessed with a large family. It is intended to hold a big reunion at her home the coming summer, when several hundred relatives and friends will assemble to pay honor to this remarkable woman.

Could Do Everything But Fight.

We had in the Twenty-third Ohio (Hayes' regiment) a quaint old character—an enlisted musician—whose name I would not mention for anything. Just before the battle of South Mountain he came to me and asked me to step aside with him a moment. I did so, and he said: "My God, Major, I am a coward! I did not know it. I thought I could help the country, and, though I was past 45, and needn't to, I enlisted. Now I have found that I can't go into a fight! I can't, Major, if you should kill me! I shall be disgraced, and all the folks at home will know it. I can never hold my head up again if I try to go into this fight. Can't you do something for me? Give me something to do that ain't fighting and I'll do anything. Oh, for God's sake, Major, think of something and save me from disgrace!"

The poor fellow was half frantic in his earnestness. I thought a moment and said: "A——, do you think you could carry water for the men while they are fighting? It is going to be an awful hot day, and a canteen of fresh water will be about the greatest luxury the men could have under fire. Can you carry water for them?" "Oh, yes! Thank you, Major." Well, now, in the thickest of that fight, where the regiment lost within eight men of half that went into action, old A—— would come to the front loaded down with canteens, delivering them, and taking up the empty ones along the line. Between bayonet charges the men were hugging the ground like a long-lost brother, under such a storm of minie balls as did not seem to leave any unoccupied space in the air. Old A—— would prance down the line delivering canteens to the panting men without any more sense of fear than the bravest man in the army, until his last canteen of water was gone, then he would give a wild yell and bolt for the rear as if the devil was after him. —Brig. Gen. Comly, in National Tribune.

Power of Music.

In the early spring of 1863, when the Confederate and Federal armies were confronting each other on the opposite hills of Stafford and Spottsylvania, two bands chanced one evening, at the same hour, to begin to discourse sweet music on either bank of the river. A large crowd of soldiers of both armies gathered to listen to the music, the friendly pickets not interfering, and soon the bands began to answer each other. First the band on the northern bank would play "Star-Spangled Banner," "Hail Columbia," or some other national air, and at its conclusion the "boys in blue" would cheer most lustily. And then the band on the southern bank would respond with "Dixie," or "Bonnie Blue Flag," or some other Southern melody, and the "boys in gray" would attest approbation with the old Confederate yell. But presently one of the bands struck up, in sweet and plaintive notes, which were wafted across the beautiful Rappahannock, and were caught up at once by the other band and swelled into a grand anthem which touched every heart, "Home Sweet Home!" At the conclusion of this piece there went up a simultaneous shout from both sides of the river, cheer followed cheer and those hills, which had so recently resounded with hostile guns, echoed and re-echoed the glad acclaim. A chord had been struck, responsive to which the hearts of enemies—enemies then—could beat in unison and on both sides of the river.

During the first three days of May the government spent $2,602,063.81 more than it took in This would indicate that the new tariff law is a failure inasmuch as it is not producing sufficient revenue to meet the expenses of the government.

William Behn, editor of the Bryan Democrat, has announced his name for representative. He probably has in mind that he will get a chance to put in a protest against your Uncle Samuel's scab printing office, if he is successful in reaching the capitol.

Attorney Mountz is working hard to secure the nomination for judge. Also Huffman and Pomeroy are after the same plum. The Butler delegation seems split up and the three candidates are laying pretty close to this part of the county.

The HERALD rather imagines that Huffman will be the choice of the convention. Also that Frank Powers, of Angola, will be the opposing candidate on the democrat ticket.

W. A. Dannells is making a stir for commissioner and John Moore is his opponent on the democrat side. Dannells seems to be the choice around here.

Henry Deetz, of Fairfield township, has announced for county assessor, making the third candidate for this place on the democrat ticket.

John J. Oberlin and A. W. Gonser are putting in full time for county treasurer, with Oberlin the most likely candidate. Either are very good men for the place and will beat any thing the republicans can put up.

Attorney General Wickersham has given out two more of his famous opinions. One holds that the Secretary of War cannot lawfully refuse to award a contract for Panama canal supplies to the lowest responsible bidder simply because such bidder has been adjudicated to be a party to an unlawful trust and monopoly or otherwise carrying on business in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. The other decision holds that Public Printer Donnelly has no right to abolish certain branches of the government printing office simply because he thinks they are unnecessary and that he wishes to cut down expenses.

The report that Roosevelt has written letters to President Taft, Son-in-law Longworth and others, indorsing the Taft administration has been given wide publicity by the republican press. Careful inquiry brings out the fact that all of the persons mentioned in the story emphatically deny having received such a letter. And Roosevelt denies having written anything which could have been so contrued.

(BY TAVENNER)

The democrats, assisted by a handful of fighting progressive republicans, have forced a republican administration to abandon some of the worst of the corporation-serving clauses placed in the railroad regulation bill by Attorney General Wickersham.

Wickersham framed this bill after a conference with six railroad presidents. Wall street knew long before the public appearance of the bill that it would be so drawn as to annul that feature of the Sherman anti-trust law which prevents mergers. Railroad interests bought and sold stock on the strength of their advance information. It is not plain as yet who supplied Wall street with information as to the kind of a bill wickersham would draft.

Had the bill become a law as prepared by the attorney general, it would have practically destroyed all that has been accomplished in the last twenty years to give the government some measure of control over the railroads of the country.

No attorney general of the United States has ever been revealed in just the position Mr. Wickersham now occupies.

Instead of having drawn a bill that would tend to place greater safe-guards about the rights of the people, as might naturally be expected from a public officer who is receiving a salary on the assumption that his office is giving such protection to the people, Wickershym has been charged on the floor of the Senate with having attempted to take from the masses even such inadequate safe guards as they now enjoy, while at the same time giving the corporate interests the right to merge and do other things that the Sherman law has forbidded them from doing.

At the time of Wickersham's appointment it was averred that he had been selected by President Taft in defe rence to the wishes of the corporations of the country, who had spent money and coerced workingmen to vote the republican ticket, and who demanded as compensation for this service the privilege of naming the attorney general.

The feverish interest of special privilege in this office may be realized at full value when it is understood that the attorney general is in absolute charge of the prosecuting machinery of the government.

Whether Wickersham's appointment really was the result of a pre election arrangement or not, the trusts have had no occasion to be dissatisfied with the President's selection. Whenever the rights of the people and special privilege come into conflict, Mr. Wickersham decides favorably to the corporate interests and against the people. Some assert that Wickersham leans towards the corporations because of his temperament, and others attribute to force of habit, he having long been a corporation lawyer in New York. Whatever the reason, the records of the Attorney General,s office show that Wickersham's opinions are invariably favorable to the big campaign fund contributing corporations.

President Taft's definition of a "republican" member of Congress is one who will vote for legislation indorsed by him whether said Congressman believes the legislation is good or bad.

The President complains that the insurgents visit him at the White House and assure him of their great personal respect and well-wishes, and then go to the Capitol and vote against his railroad regulation bill.

"Why do you act this way?" a progressive republican was asked. "Do you not respect the President of the United States?"

"I do, indeed, respect the President, both personally and officially," was the reply. "But I have even more respect for the welfare of 90,000,000 people of this country. The President sends the Congress a railroad regulation bill which absolutely annuls the Sherman anti-trust law. Along with the bill comes the ultimatum that our vote on this measure will be considered a test of our republicanism. Wickersham, who drew the infamous document, says that republicans who refuse to vote for the measure are socialists. We are willing to show all proper respect to the President, but he seems to fail to understand that a district moral question is involved. As between serving our conscience or the President we are put to the painful necessity of forsaking the President and voting against his railroad bill."

The recently "reformed" House Committee on Rules is proving to be as secure a catacomb for proposed legislation antagonized by the special interests as was the one of which Speaker Cannon was chairman. Not a single resolution which might adversely affect unlawful combinations such as the sugar trust has been reported favorably by the new committee. Speaker Cannon dominates the reformed body just as effectively as he did the old Rules committee.

LOOK OUT FOR TEDDY IN 1912

Judge Groscup Believes His Candidacy Possible

1. To limit the earning power of great corporations, including the railroads, to a reasonable return upon the investment represented.

2. To make the property of the corporations so secure that the public, with restored confidence, will become in the fullest sense the owner of the properties.

Judge Peter S. Groscup, just back from abroad, predicted to-day that a new party would be formedof republicans and democratic insurgents due to the breaking away from party lines of the past.

"This breaking away will continue from both camps," said the federal jurist. "The so-called deserters will multiply until at length they become federated in a new political body which will undertake to answer the greatest national issues of to-day in a way that neither the republican nor the democratic party seems likely to do."

He commented upon the impression that Theodore Roosevelt made in Egypt and is making in Europe, and attributed his popularity to "his boyishness, his enthusiasm and the part he has taken in bringing about an era of self-inquiry.

"Mr. Roosevelt has not been constructive," said the judge. "But he has become associated with the spirit of national self-inquiry, and self-inquiry while not in itself a reform, necessarily precedes all reform."

And Judge Groscup added:

"If the fall elections go democratic in Ohio and New York, look out for Roosevelt in 1912."

"American affairs have contained much of significance during my absence. I believe, however, that they tend to bear out the views I expressed before my trip. President Taft's corporation policy, and his proposec measure of national incorporation, are steps in the right direction, but they do not, as yet go far enough.

"When, as I believe will happen in time, the insurgents from both the republicans and democratic parties merge their ideas to form another political party, that party, I predict, will be based upon a corporation policy with two cardinal principles:

"First, for taking the largest corporations—and this will apply to the railroads—and limiting their earning power to a reasonable return upon the investigation represented.

Second, for making the property of the corporation of the country so secure that the public, its confidence restored, will become in the fullest sense the owner of the properties.

,,Such measures, I believe, will solve existing problems growing out of the uncontrolled power of great corporations, and nothing short of them will."

The Democratic State Ticket

The democratic party has nominated many good state tickets, but it never made a better or a stronger one than that chosen last week.

Lew G. Ellingham of Decatur for secretary of state is a man of splendid character. He is an editor, has been president of the Democratic State Editorial association and a member of the Democratic state committee.

William H. O'Brien of Lawrenceburg, for auditor of state, is a business man and banker, and has served as mayor, state senator and chairman of the state committee.

William H. Vollmer of Vincennes, for treasurer of state, is a farmer and banker, and has been active as a democrat add as a public-spirited citizen.

Thomas M. Honan of Seymour, for attorney general, is a lawyer of fine attainments and has served as speaker of the house of representatives.

J. Fred Frace of Huntington, for clerk of the supreme court, is a lawyer and has served as mayor of his city, and as president of the Indiana Municipal League.

Robert J. Aley of Bloomington, for superintendent of public instruction, is recognized as one of the leading educators of the United States and has added to his reputation by the quality of his work in the office to which he seeks re-election.

Edward Barrett of Plainfield, for state geologist, is thoroughly equipped by special traning for the office in which he has been nominated for the fourth consecutive time.

Thomas Brolley of North Vernon, for state statistician, is a contract, and business man and has served two terms as a member of the Indiana house of representatives.

Douglas Morris of Rushville and Charles E. Cox of Indianapolis, the nominees for judges og the supreme court, are lawyers of high attainments and standing in their profession, and both have had judicial experienced.

Andrew A. Adams of Columbia City, Joseph G. Ibach of Hammond, and Moses B. Lairy of Logansport, nominees for judges of the appellate court, northern division; and Milton B. Hottel of Salem and Edward W. Felt of Greenfield, nominees for judges of the appellate court, southern division, are all layers of experience and standing.

With this fine list of candidates, every one of whom is fit and qualified, the democratic party can appeal to the people with confidence and justifiable pride, and also with enthusiasm.

THE TRANSIT OF HALLEY'S COMET

The visit of Halley's comet to our skies is an event for which we have been waiting for thirty-seven years and more, for in 1873, when it had been retreating into the depths of space ever since its last preceding appearance in 1835, it was at last brought up "with a round turn" by the sun's attraction and compelled to start back.

While every mile of the way in withdrawing from the sun's light and heat it had equally withdrawn from its restraining power, yet even 500,000,000 miles beyond our farthest known planet that power was still real, though immensely reduced, and finally prevailed over the comet's momentum so so that it was forced to turn back. It did it, like a runaway child, reluctantly, and, although with each mile of its return it has felt increase of attraction in the sun and thus been obliged to quicken its pace steadily, it has nevertheles refused to rush straight to the sun's bosom. Still retaining a fragment of that original momentum with which it came into our system ages ago—no one knows from where—it has persistently compounded that force with the force of the sun's attraction, and the result is the beautiful curve of an eclipse.

Now, it is because of faithfully following the elliptical path that the comet will not drop into the sun's fiery depths and go up in a puff of gas. Instead it swings around that body at a safe distance of 54,609,600 miles at the nearest and then proceeds to withdraw into space on the opposite side of the eclipse. It is there it is going to meet the earth; there that it will pass us, the two bodies going in opposite directions; there that it will come the nearest; there that it will appear the largest; there that it will shine the brightest; there that its head will transit the face of the sun; there that the earth will plunge headlong through its tail. We are therefore coming to the most important days of this cometary visit.

So well had the great astronomer royal, Sir Edmund Halley, and others learned the ways of this sky monster that Professor Max Wolf of Heidelberg, Germany, knew to just what quarter of the heavens to open his camera for the long exposure of Sept. 11, last. When, after hours of waiting, he again closed it and went into the dark room and developed his plate he knew that he had rediscovered Halley's comet, and so he telegraphed to all the principal observatories of the world. In a few days the astronomers saw it in their powerful glasses, and they have been following it ever since with an interval of a few weeks excepted, when it passed the sun the last of March and removed from the evening to the morning sky.

"WILL NOT COLLIDE WITH THE EARTH"

On the 19th of April the comet passed "perihelion," nearest the sun, was going its swiftest, 1,878 miles a minute, and determinedly rounding the curve to push on toward the earth, as if to drive straight into our orb and end all things for both bodies. At the same time the earth was coming around its curve in the opposite direction and almost as eagerly rushing toward the comet, its speed being about 1,150 miles a minute. And though the two, on the 19th of April, were still 95,000,000 miles agart, the combined movement of earth and comet has been steadily filling up the great gap at the rate of forty-three miles per second, and the great events that are to follow the middle of May are consequently at hand.

That there will be no collision is as evident as that an elevated train may safely cross a surface road above or a subway beneath. When the comet crossed the earth's path early in March—for it is even now within our orbit—it was 15,000,000 miles above us, and when it will pass out beyond the same, May 26, it will be 6,000,000 miles below us. Professor W. H. Pickering estimates that on the 18th of May we shall be 14,300,000 miles distant from the comet. From these figures a million or two may be clipped in the day or two following. The brilliancy, too, of the comet will be greatest on the 19th, no less than 6,966 times what it was when discovered by Professor Wolf.

But the 18th of May is the great day—the day of the transit and the day of the earth's plunge through the comet's tail. Nothing can transit the face of the moon unless it be a fleeting meteor, for the moon is the nearest celestial body. Only three bodies can transit the face of the sun—namely, the moon, thus causing an eclipse of the sun, and the inner planets, Mercury and Venus. The last transit of Mercury occurred in November, 1907. The last transit of Venus was observed Dec. 6, 1882, and the next will be seen June 8, 2004, this entire century passing without the most interesting and significant phenomenon. But the head of the comet will transit the face of the sun on the 18th of May.

DEEDS NOT WORDS

Butler People Have Absolute Proof of Deeds at Home

It's not words, but deeds that prove true merit.

The deeds of Doan's Kidney Pills.

For Butler kidney sufferers.

Have made their local reputation.

Proof lies in the testimony of Butler people who have been cured to stay cured.

Mrs. Charlotte Steele, Pearl St., Butler, Ind., says: "I suffered from rheumatic pains in my back and sides and I was subject to dull headaches. I had but little strength or ambition and was all run down. When my attention was called to Doan's Kidney Pills, I procured a supply at Stone's drug store and began using them. In a short time they cured me." (Statement given April 10, 1906.)

On December 19, 1908, Mrs. Steele confirmed the above statement and added: "I have no hesitation in again endorsing Doan's Kidney Pills. The cure this remedy effected in my case has been permanent and at the present time I am free from every symptom of kidney complaint."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

L. J. Diehl had a narrow escape from losing his beard last Sunday, and it wasn't Mrs. Diehl, either, that threatened to dismantle his chin, but one of his thoroughbred horses which no doubt has had a longing to know what his owner was doing with a wisp of hay on the end of his chin. The animal seized a good big mouthful and was in the act of biting it off when the owner put in his protest.

At the present time there are but three prisoners in the DeKalb county jail, each of them who resides at Garrett, and all are awaiting trial on the charge of larceny. They are Grover Schatterbach, Earl Keller and Thomas Fisher. Neither of the prisoners was able to give the necessary bond and will therefore be detained until the May term of court, when they will be given opportunity to explain why they stole brass from the B. & O. Railroad company.

The Ladies' Bible Class last Monday afternoon, May 9, perpetrated another of their successful birthday surprises. They wended their way to the home of Mrs. Wm. Knisely, and finding her not at home, took possession of the house. At 5:30 o'clock Mr. and Mrs. Knisely and the ladies sat down to a most bountiful dinner, which the ladies know so well how to prepare. As a small token of esteem in which Mrs. K. was held, she was presented bread and butter plates. The evening was spent in a social way, after which all departed feeling that life had once more been made the brighter and better.

Geo. Nichols reports to us that some boys from town are in the habit of going out to his farm just outside of the north corporation line and destroying property, robbing his hens nests, etc. Parents should know, so far as possible something about what their boys are doing, where they are running about over the country. Such conduct, if followed up will result in trouble for the parents and children.

A large audience greeted the eighth grade graduates at their commencement exercises which were held in the Methodist church on last Friday evening. At eight o'clock the class, accompaned by their teacher, Mr. Endicott, marched in accompanied by piano music, and took their places on the stage, each giving their part of the program as printed in this paper last week. They all gave their parts in a creditable manner, the musical numbers being especially entertaining. At the close short talks were given by Prof. Bean and Geo. W. Geddes.

The vacancy on the staff of The Times existing since the resignation two months ago of C. C. Some Habits of the Fly.

Concerning his experiences while studying the life and habits of the house fly, Henry Hill, the well known lecturer, says in the London Standard: "I wish I could explain why a fly never walks down, but always up, a clean window pane, and why, on the other hand, it will walk down the slanting glass front of a picture. It is also a mystery to me why a fly always rests head downward on a wall. These are habits of the house fly which offer a field for interesting study."

WHERE THE SPRING BIRDS COME FROM

PEOPLE of the North are fortunate in the enjoyment of the changes of the seasons. Four times a year they have the "very spice of life" wafted to their doors; and twice annually it comes in pleasurable and compelling contrast. In a few things beyond the greening sward and bursting bud and bloom is the break of climatic monotony more noticeable than in the coming of the vernal birds. One need not be a student or scientist to enjoy their arrival. While other things appeal to sight, mainly, the birds may and do plead to the ear as well as the eye. Unfortunate is he in whose heart also they do not rouse at least a pleasant memory. He is behind the times in the race from savagery to modern culture. The new bird's song is an annual inundation of optimism—a great fertilizing flood of inspiration. Thoreau said, the year that he grew beans, that he placed as much faith in the brown thrasher's song as he did in the fertilizers which he used. This was putting poetically the trust in which each spring the farmer, though he is gray and bent in failure, opens the furrow and drops the seed. His new inspiration has come through the vernal yawning, as nature stretches herself from her winter sleep, and, like her, he feels strong again.

It is this that we should expect to get from the bird. As an economical asset, which we are trying to make of him now, he is a failure, and has always been—no matter whether his tribe be large or small. Our Agricultural Department reports that such and such per cents of his stomach contents are so and so, and, therefore, he is a great benefactor in the destruction of insects and weed seeds. But he makes no impression on the quantity of either, and eats as many helpful parasites as enemies ,and sows and grows more bad seed than he digests. Nobody is making the farmer believe that birds are bonanzas, for he is not a fool; and all creation and some other places are not going to be able to convince him that a crow that plucks corn by the root and rips it up in the milk; that picks out the eyes of lambs and pigs, and robs the hen that has "stole her nest," is a benefactor, because, when the bird cannot do better, he digs out angle worms in the meadow sod, and turns up a white grub occasionally, if it comes in his way. But this same farmer will rejoice if his wife has a geranium in her window; and through this form of sentiment is the only hope of saving such birds as are worth saving.

Some Fly Far.

The extent of a bird's migration may vary greatly. Curiously many of those which nest farthest north may spend the winter farthest south. This characterizes the many plover forms. Some of these which deposit their eggs in a shallow scrape on the borders of Behring Sea in our summer may probe the mud of the swamps of Patagonia or even pass to Australasia in winter. More moderate is the killdeer and Wilson's snipe, which may nest with us, rarely pass Bermuda, or at best Northern South America, while the woodcock often stays in our Southern States, and at times does not pass the swamps on our own State's southern border.

In their winter resorts most birds haunt the same sort of cover that they live in while at the North, but some, such as robins, change habits and food. These flock in hundreds, subsist on berries exclusively, and are wild and suspicious in the South. Many remain with us of late years, but resort to the woods and tangles. If we had sufficient winter berries all our robins might stay with us the year round. For this reason there project into the bird routes certain peninsulas or oases, where the conditions are detaining, and here many tarry all the winter. Such are the dense thickets of our rivers.

This staying is strikingly true of the bluebird; so much so in certain regions that of late he is losing the title of "harbinger of spring," which Longfellow gave him; but with us of the highlands of the West his melody is what Burroughs has called it—"the violet of sound"—a phrase worthy of the bird—and the man. The meadow lark, however, is pressing him for the honors of earliness and timeliness, but the latter does not come around our homes and so anoint us with the oil of optimism; and he cannot put that shimmer of the very sky into a tremulous wing. The bluebird is more than musical—he is operatic, histrionic, nay, innocently bacchanalian in the prodigality of his ecstasy. He is more than a promise and a prophecy; he is the first fruit of itself which the spring azure has thrown down to the earth.

Blackbirds Stay Close.

None of the blackbirds go very far south. Brewer's blackbird is a native of our plains region, and winters all over Mexico, but our common purple grackle and the cowbird stop in the Southern States. They all come up as the furrow opens, flitting from clod to clod, while they cluck as if they would urge the season on. When they reach or approach their summer homes all species may mount the tall treetops in great mixed flocks and sing in concert or discord, as the case may be; but on the whole the medley is one of the pleasantest of spring sounds. It may be jarred by the wheelbarrow screak of the cowbird, but the suggestion of grazing cows and golden dandelions is even in that.

More lowly is the passing of the bobolink, a branch of the same tribe. He is a bird of the fields and dead weed stalks. As is well known, this is another bird that changes habit and form with change of habitat. The males now are again in splendid nuptial plumage, and manifest as they pass that contagious happiness so aptly described by Wilson Flagg Bryant and Irving. No other nation has such a bird. His melody is more delightfully instrumental than anything we have. It is the melody of the swan refined, reduced, etherealized, though it is so terrestrial. The different members of the wrens vary much among each other in their winter habitats. The Northern wren usually seems to think that he has gone far south if he goes from Minnesota to Missouri, though he may go as far as the gulf. The Carolina wren scarcely moves at all during the season, and may sing at any time.

The Brown Thrasher.

The brown thrasher is now classed as of the wren forms, and not of the thrush forms. His arrival is always announced during the first bright hour after he comes. His journey is a musical one, and even in the Southern States, where he winters, his singing is frequent. He is a bird of the spring purely in the matter of song, but as a berry eater he stays with the crop, early and late. The charm of domesticity and appropriate timeliness is that of the phoebe. He comes at just the right hour and whistles at about the proper spot. Above the romping places in the haymow, under the cool arch of the "branch" culvert is not his last year's cabin hanging still, and are not the years, away down to the wee small ones, punctuated with the dip of his tail? In his combination of sibilance and giggle there is hinted everything which the boy expects the spring to bring, and to the man all that the years have brought. He and his tribe of flycatchers must go far enough south to find flying things the season through. Some of them go to Central America, while others may subsist in Florida and thereabout.

The humming bird goes far south to visit the many other species of his tribe which live permanently there. He can come north only with the opening corrollas. He may be seen battling with the bumblebees on the edge of the gulf in early March, as each strove to get the first morning dip into the wistaria cups. All the swallows winter south of the United States. Of course an occasional one stays nearer and drifts up ahead of his fellows, but he does not make the summer, as the proverb goes.

No matter whence the bird comes to us, no matter whether we note his color or flight—even if he be merely like Tennyson's lark, "a sightless song," he may be our comfort; and the earlier he comes the better.

HUMOR and PATHOS of the "LITTLE AD."

"THE MAN WHO IS WILLING TO WORK CAN ALWAYS GET WORK."

"Advertise." That's the watchword to many a twentieth century success, and that watchword is becoming to be more and more generally adopted. All kinds of people, many varieties of interest, are turning to the advertising method in these good young days of 1910.

Consider for a moment the columns beyond columns under the heading of two words—a tale of tragedy in itself—"Situations Wanted." These columns are divided into two classes—"Situations Wanted, Male," and "Situations Wanted, Female"—and if you will take both classes in the Sunday newspapers of New York or Chicago on any given Sunday you will find that thousands of men and women are appealing to the world through those little "want ads."

There are starving children in those columns. You can't see them, but they're there, just the same. Where? you ask. In this two-line notice, for instance, which says that a man, "40, sober, industrious, married, wants work at anything."

The industrious man of 40 is the father of three children, who, at the moment you carelessly glance at the advertisement—paid for with almost the last nickel—are waiting for a square meal until "papa gets work again."

There are a great many men in the "want ad" columns who are anxious to go to "work at anything." This is an excellent index of the proposition that in big cities men who are willing to work cannot by any means get work. The plutocratic theorist and parlor philosopher are often heard to declare that "a man who is willing to work can always get work. There's lots of work for every one."

Here are a few sample "ads" of the men who apparently need work badly:

MAN—40 YEARS, FORMER STEAMSHIP steward, wishes position on shore at anything; best of references.

MAN—29, WILLING TO WORK AT anything.

MAN — 26, BUILDING MECHANIC, wishes position at anything.

MAN—33, SEEKS WORK AT ANYthing; wages no object.

MAN—UNFORTUNATE, WITHOUT JOB; splendid worker; educated.

YOUNG MAN—22, WANTS POSITION at anything.

The women who advertise for work are as a rule more particular. They are scarcely any of the "work at anything" class in the columns headed "Situations Wanted—Female." Look at such advertisements as these, for instance:

COLLEGE AND UNIVERSITY GRADuate desires position as secretary or clerical work during daytime; education scientific and classical; practical business experience; ability as an orator and debater in college organization; highest references and recommendations from educators.

ALWAYS HAPPY, BRIGHT, YOUNG, REfined, sympathetic lady, highly educated, would make excellent secretary-companion to lady; French, English, German, Italian spoken, written, translated fluently; typewriting; good conversationalist, musician; hours disengaged; would also give companionship for congenial home.

A CULTURED COMPANION OR CHAPeron; English, good birth, London, linguist, French, Paris, German, Dresden, Italian; brilliant pianist, vocalist; experienced traveler; bright sympathetic temperament; highest references.

A YOUNG LADY, DAUGHTER DEceased statesman, cultured, clever, fully capable, desires take charge refined home or apartment; references.

If it is true that there are thousands of men and women looking for work, it is equally true that there are thousands of employers looking for workers through the "want ad." But analysis of the long lines of situations vacant and demands for workers of different kinds show that many of the positions open are out of the reach of numerous classes of the "out-of-work."

There are, for example, hundreds of "ads" for agents, solicitors and canvassers. But these are commission propositions, where the man must be reasonably well dressed to begin work and where he must carry himself on his own resources until he "produces results" for his employed in the shape of actual orders or sales. Such positions are beyond the range of your genuine down-and-outer.

There are, too, plenty of chances for women to go to work, but much of the work offered would scarcely make an overwhelming appeal to many women who are seeking jobs through their own "want ads." Here is a sample:

LADY—ABOUT 100 POUNDS, FOR audeville illusion show; travel; experience unnecessary.

You can enter all sorts of lucrative business enterprises with a modest capital. If you command a sum ranging anywhere from $150 to $2,000 you can get into "the best paying business in the city." But, of course, you've always got to put up your capital first. Here are some of these "ads" for picayune capitalists that should get cartloads of replies:

BE A CHEWING GUM MANUFACTURer at your home; no machinery necessary; wonderful profit; big demand.

A BUSINESS WOMAN WITH $2,000 CAN earn income $175 monthly; a going, congenial business; worth investigating; personal interview; afternoons; Monday, Tuesday.

FEW LADIES AND GENTLEMEN wanted to join a club for mutual financial benefit; $10,000 each coming in two months for less than $200 investment; personal interview first.

$50 WEEKLY INCOME FOR LIFE ON $10,000 investment.

Of all the advertising columns it is probable that those headed "personals" are read by the largest number of people. The casual reader will often glance through the personal advertisements, when he or she won't think of looking through any of the other classified advertising. Erring sons and wandering daughters have messages directed at them through the personals. Heirs are advertised for and witnesses to accidents are implored to communicate with the advertiser. Here is the sort of thing that the columns generally carry:

NAN—HAVE LOST ADDRESS, PLEASE send; important.
MISS PRUNELLO BREVOORT.

S. C. K.—COME HOME NEXT WEEK. M. WILL CHARLES STRAUB KINDLY call on REGINALD WOFFINDIN?

JAMES LYNCH—MOTHER DANGERously ill; come at once.

A REFINED YOUNG LADY, GOING TO Palm Beach for several weeks, desires companionable lady willing to pay own expenses.

WILL PAY FOR ADDRESSES OF GUstav A. Baerenklau, Sr., and Morgan M. Renner.

WANT CORRECT ADDRESS FORMER towerman, Cornelius Jakson.

H. EVANS—STILL WORKING OLD job; hopeless; nope, haven't studied since.

Perhaps the most bizarre of all "ads" to the average reader are those which are carried in the theatrical weeklies. Here the layman finds himself lost in a jargon of professional expressions and abbreviations that tends to cause dizziness. Look at these and see if you don't need a chart.

WANTED—MAN FOR GENTEEL HEAVies, char. and gen'l bus. man, little girl with feature specialties; good sketch team; cornet to double stage, barytone to double 24 violin, one silent team. Strictly sober people only wanted (boozers get quick action). The finest stateroom cars on the road. A long season and your money when due.

WANTED QUICK—D. AND I. COMEdian, blackface S. and D. man, sketch team that can play singles and doubles. I pay all. Salary yours each week. Happy Lanigan, Bessie Blix, write.

The "heavy" desired is an actor to play the heavy parts in plays. "Char." is the abbreviation for character part actor. "Doubling" of musical instruments means that the performers must both act and play. The "silent team" does acrobatics or some other "act" where speaking is not necessary. The "D. and I." comedian is nothing less than a comedian who can be comical as a Dutchman or Irishman, while "S. and D." man must be able to sing and dance.

Take it all in all there's more in the advertising columns than mere "ads."

Divorce Here and in Canada.

The divorce history of Canada, when compared with the records shown in the recent reports of the United States investigations, is almost inconceivable. Outside the maritime provinces, three in number, and the province of British Columbia, which contain approximately 1,325,000 inhabitants, the only divorce granting power for Canadians is the Dominion Parliament at Ottawa.

For the last ten years the absolute divorces granted by Parliament have been as follows: 1900, 5; 1901, 2; 1903, 2; 1904, 6; 1905, 9; 1906, 14; 1907, 6; 1908, 8; 1909, 16. In the four provinces where local divorce courts exist the proportion has been but little more and the local divorces granted add little to the general total.

The significance of these figures is appreciable only when contrasted with the records recently made public in the United States. There were 66,000 American divorces granted in 1906, and the records of the American government estimate that one in each twelve marriages results in divorce.

A Scheme.

"Sure!" replied Willie, "and if it's spoiled she'll let us eat all we want of it."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Always on Tap.

Wigg—Although a deaf mute, he has a wonderful fund of information.

Wagg—Yes, he has it all at his finger's ends.—Gateway.

Living cost has advanced consistently upward during the recent years. Efforts to learn why prices have increased have not been very satisfactorily answered. The farmer has insisted that he is not to blame, the butcher has blamed the packer, and the latter has completed the circuit by shifting the responsibility to the agriculturist, and the prices of foodstuffs have continued to soar. It may not help the American pocketbook any to know that the increase in the cost of living is not confined to any particular subdivision, but it may contribute a mite to the food for reflection to learn something of the situation in other parts of the world.

So widespread has been the demand for information concerning the present value of foodstuffs here and abroad that many of the United States consuls and consular agents have been requested to investigate and report concerning prices of foodstuffs. In general it appears that food prices abroad, and in cities where the wage rate is much lower than in this country, are as high as they are here. The reports indicate that the prices have been increased principally because the supply has not kept pace with the demand and not owing to any combination for the purpose of increasing the rates on the various articles.

In Hamburg, Germany, the average price of sirloin steak is 34½ cents a pound, the latest quotation on tenderloin being 43½ cents, veal chops bring 32½ cents, while leg of veal is quoted at 30 cents. Pork ranges in price from 18 to 33 cents; mutton from 19 to 30 cents and ham from 19 to 51 cents, the latter being the price for a fine grade of the sliced article. These prices are furnished by a first class dealer, whose prices are neither the highest nor the lowest, but there is slight variation between dealers in fashionable and unfashionable, the chances being that the superior cuts of meats will be found in the shops where the highest prices prevail. From Hanover, which is considered an inexpensive city in which to live, the following prices are quoted: Beef and veal, 20¼ cents; pork and mutton, 19; smoked ham, 35; bacon, 22½; wheat flour, 4¾; rye flour, 3½; wheat bread, 5¼; rye bread, 3; coffee, medium Java, roasted, 39¼; table butter, 37; milk, per quart, 4¼; eggs, per dozen, 40.

On the basis of income, the German, in comparative occupation with the American worker, should not pay more than 50 per cent of the prices he now pays for his food, but as a matter of fact he pays as much as the people here, excepting milk, potatoes and other vegetables. Consul Robert J. Thomson accounts for ability to live under such conditions to the fact that the German housekeeper is rigidly economical and would be able to maintain her table and exist fairly well on the waste of many American families of similar position in life. So high is food cost that an effort is being made to counteract the shortage which causes it, largely because farmers are moving to industrial centers, by employing women in agriculture. It is said that fully 3,000,000 German women are operating farms or working thereon. Germany has been able to keep its supply of foodstuffs to the maximum figures by intensive farming, the employment of millions of female hands, many of the workers coming from Poland, Bohemia and Lithuania.

In London the retail prices are not greatly different from those prevalent in Chicago, says a writer in the Record-Herald. Here is a random list, with the prices given in American money. The quotations are from good shops, not the highest priced, nor are the prices for inferior provisions in any instance. Bacon, 11 to 28 cents; beef, 18 to 26; bread, two-pound loaf, 6; coffee, 24 to 44; eggs, 24 to 44; ham, uncooked, 20 to 28; ham, cooked, 48 to 61; lamb cutlets, 36; lard, 10 to 18; milk, 8; mutton chops, 24 to 30; steak, 20 to 36; tea, 21 to 61; veal, 24 to 32.

This list is a fair average one, and the prices appear to compare favorably with those quoted in American cities during March. The high cost of living is as surely abroad in the British metropolis as it is in the bigger cities of this country.

In Austria-Hungary the problem of living cost has become so serious that the chambers of commerce throughout the empire are investigating. In illustration of the advance in prices is shown by this table, furnished by the magistracy of Reichenberg.

	Former price.	Present price.
Beef, 2.2 lbs.	$ .25@ .27	$ .35@ 37
Fillet of beef, 2.2 lbs.	.48	.58
Veal, 2.2 lbs.	.26@ .29	.29@ .41
Pork, 2.2 lbs.	.29	.44@ .48
Liver, 2.2 lbs.	.....	.24
Geese, each	1.21	2.03
Pigeons, each	.16	.20
Ducks, each	.50	1.01
Wheat flour, 2.2 lbs.	.09	.10
Lentils, 2.2 lbs.	.....	.19
Millet, 2.2 lbs.	.....	.08
Hulled barley, 2.2 lbs.	.08	.11
Sugar, 2.2 lbs.	.15	.17
Milk, quart	.....	.05
Beer, quart	.07	.11
Anthracite coal, 110 lbs.	.34	.52
Bituminous coal, 110 lbs.	.15	.25

This is a factory town in a district which is not very productive agriculturally, but it shows how prices are soaring. When it is understood that the average workman here is accustomed to live on 20 cents a day the need for some change is evident. Then again, the enormous increase in prices of foodstuffs has not meant an advance in wages, which are practically the same as they were twenty years ago.

AFTER SUFFERING FOR YEARS

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Park Rapids, Minn.—"I was sick for years while passing through the Change of Life and was hardly able to be around. After taking six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I gained 20 pounds, am now able to do my own work and feel well."—Mrs. ED. LA DOU, Park Rapids, Minn.

Brookville, Ohio.—"I was irregular and extremely nervous. A neighbor recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me and I have become regular and my nerves are much better."—Mrs. R. KINNISON, Brookville, Ohio.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you want special advice write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. It is free and always helpful.

Erskine's Puns.

A great wit of the Scottish bar was the Hon. Harry Erskine, who was lord advocate. Though punning is not, as a rule, a high form of wit, with Erskine it became a fine art. On one occasion he undertook to pun on the subject of his friend's first sentence. His friend began, "The king"— Harry intervened. "The king," he said, "is no subject." Again, a Mr. Dunlop challenged him to pun on his name. "Nothing easier," said Erskine. "Lop off the last syllable and it is done."—London Standard.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The House Cleaning Joke.

Thousands of jokes are written each year on housecleaning by men who do not realize what a small tragedy housecleaning is to women. It has to be done, and it has to be done thoroughly. Housecleaning is fun, though, if Easy Task soap is used. Made of pure cocoanut oil, borax, naphtha and clean, sweet tallow, it can be used on woodwork, floors, curtains, rugs, laces, china, cut glass and everything else—rids them of dirt and dust in half the time of cheap yellow soaps.

Sheppard's Plaid.

Of course everybody knows the popular black and white check patterned cloth "Sheppard's plaid," but ninety-nine people of every hundred ascribe the origin of this cognomen to some connection with the pastoral personage which is apparently indicated. WESTERN CANADA

Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, says:

"The stream of emigrants from the United States to Canada will continue."

Senator Dolliver recently paid a visit to Western Canada, and says: "There is a land hunger in the hearts of Eastern Iowa farming people; this will account for the removal of so many Iowa farmers to Canada. Our people are pleased with the Government and the excellent administration of law, and they are coming to you in tens of thousands, and they are still coming."

Iowa contributed largely to the 20,000 American farmers who made Canada their home during 1909. Field crop returns alone during 9 months added to the wealth of the country upwards of

$170,000,000.00

GERMANY AND CANADIAN WHEAT.

Looks to the Canadian West for Her Supply.

A dispatch from Winnipeg, Manitoba, dated March 18, 1910, says that Germany is "anxious to secure a share of Canadian wheat to supply her imports of that cereal." The recent adjustment of the trade relations with Germany has made it possible to carry on a Canadian-German trade with much fewer restrictions than in the past, and considerable development of trade between the two countries is now certain. The great men of the United States are alive to the wheat situation in this country now, and there is consequently the deepest interest in every feature that will tend to increase and conserve the wheat supply. With its present 650,000,000 bushel production of wheat and all efforts to increase it almost unavailing, and the rapidly growing consumption of its increasing population, there is certainly the greatest reason for the anxiety as to where the wheat is to come from that will feed the nation. The United States will be forced as Germany is to look to the wheatfields of Canada. One province alone raised last year one-eighth as much as the entire production of the United States, and but a twelfth of the wheat area has yet been touched. The Americans who have gone to Canada, are today reaping the benefit of the demand for Canadian wheat and they will continue to join in the benefits thus reached for a great many years. Splendid yields are reported from the farms of that country, and from land that the Government gives away in 160-acre blocks, and from other lands that have been purchased at from $12 to $15 an acre. John Munter, near Eyebrow, Saskatchewan, a former resident of Minnesota, says:

"Last fall got over 30 bushels of wheat to the acre and had 30 acres of it; also 20 acres spring breaking on which I had flax of which I got almost 20 bushels per acre. Had 20 acres in oats and got 70 bushels per acre, and 500 bushels potatoes on one and three-quarter acres, and can therefore safely say that I had a fine crop and am well satisfied with my homestead."

He is considered but a small farmer, but he will be one of the big farmers, some of these days. There are many others, hundreds of others, whose yields were beyond this, and whose average under crop was vastly greater. The story of the experience of American farmers in the Canadian West is a long one. The time to go, would appear to be now, when splendid selections may be made, and where land can be purchased at prices that will be doubled in a couple of years.

He Saw Booth in "Othello."

Dr. John Girdner tells this Edwin Booth story as Mr. Booth told it to him: "We opened an engagement in Atlanta with 'Othello' (said Mr. Booth), and I played Othello. After the performance my friend Mr. Malone and I went to the hotel for some refreshments. While we were waiting to be served I couldn't help overhearing a conversation between two fine old boys, splendid old fellows in soft hats, flowing mustaches, black string ties and all the rest of it.

"'I didn't see you at the theate, this evenin', cunnel,' said one.

"'No,' drawled the other. 'I didn't go for seats until this a-mawnin' and the best I could find were six in the baleony. I suppose you were there?'

"'Yes, cunnel, I was there. Madame and the girls were with me, and we all agreed that we never attended a mo' thrillin' play. The company was good, too—excellent company! And, do you know, cunnel, in my opinion that nigger did about as well as any of 'em.'" —New York Morning Telegraph.

FARM AND GARDEN

Bridge Grafting.

Where trees are found girdled in the spring, the only method of saving them is by the practice of what is known as bridge-grafting.

If young trees be girdled in late spring just as growth is beginning, they may be successfully treated by binding about the wounded parts a heavy covering of smooth, tenacious, soft clay. It is safer, however, to insert a few long scions, as shown in the accompanying picture. The sap circulation of the tree, cut off by the wound made by the rodents, is resumed through the scions, which become a part of the tree—enlarging and growing together until, in after years, only a slight enlargement or "bulge" on the trunk of the tree thus treated will be noticeable.

In bridge-grafting the wounds should be made clean and smooth with a sharp knife and covered entirely with grafting wax. The scions should be cut a trifle longer than the span to be bridged, so that, when they are inserted, their curving form will tend to keep them firmly fixed in position. The two ends of the scions are cut to a thin wedge form. Incisions are made in the bark with a narrow chisel—those above the wound sloping upward and those below sloping downward. Insert the scions firmly and wax h avily and securely all wounds made in the operation, especial care being exercised to press the wax firmly and neatly about the points of union of scions with the body of the tree.

The Useful Silo.

The silo is a text which is always inspiring to the man who knows its value and it cannot be preached from too often, writes S. C. Miller. Wherever it is seen it denotes farming. It solves the problem of turning into the highest efficiency that portion of the corn crop which fails to reach the desired maturity as feed. The silo can be filled at less expense than the same amount of dry feed can be cared for and it makes better feed. This is, after all, the main point to consider. Dairymen have learned that when cows are kept in the stable for five to seven months they cannot return as satisfactory profits if they are confined to a ration of dry feed alone. Ensilage gives succulence and is very much easier to masticate and digest than dry corn fodder. There is also a great saving of labor in feeding ensilage, over feeding dry corn fodder. The initial expense keeps many a silo from decorating the landscape, but it is good practice to economize in other directions to provide for it. Once built and rightly built it will not have to be renewed for many years, so the cost is spread out so thinly that it cuts no great figure in the business of feeding.

Curing a Halter Breaker.

Whenever I have a horse that breaks his halter by pulling at the manger I take a small rope, pass it around his tail and through loops on a girth at either side, then on through the rings at either side of the halter and fasten the two ends to the manger ring. When the horse pulls on the halter it produces such unexpected results that he soon stops this bad habit.—A Benson, in Farm and Home.

Cost of Feed.

During an experiment in Cornell University a few years ago the average feed cost for eggs throughout the year was about 9 cents per dozen. Other experimenters give the cost of eggs in winter at 15 cents per dozen and in summer 8½ cents. Under the present prices of feed eggs would cost about 12 cents per dozen, but it must be remembered that on the farm the hen picks up the most part of her living from the waste material that is scattered over the farm, so that the cost of a dozen eggs is a very small item of cash outlay.

The Asparagus Beetle.

This is a troublesome pest and hard to fight. Clean cutting, especially in ridge culture, keeps them well under control in spring, but considerable harm is done later on by slugs or larvae. Poultry are very fond of these beetles, and a few fowls will soon capture the matured insects if allowed in a garden bed. An extensive grower of asparagus in Massachusetts finds that most of the beetle eggs have been sucked dry and destroyed by a species of small fly, which has made its appearance for the first time in large numbers this year.

Incubators and Brooders.

The only way to raise chickens in large numbers in a short space of time and have them at the right time to get the biggest prices for them is to use incubators and brooders. By the use of the hen for hatching and brooding, enough chickens can not be raised in a season to make it pay. Many of my customers tell me that they would rather take care of 100 chicks in a brooder than to care for one old hen and her brood. You can set as many eggs in a medium-sized incubator as you can put under ten sitting hens. With the machines you have absolute control at all times. No lice to fight. No danger of eggs being broken or chilled during incubation. Eggs and chicks perfectly safe at all times. No work at all compared with the work that ten fussy old hens would cause you.—Agricultural Epitomist.

Renting a Farm.

The following is from the Almanac and Encyclopedia for 1910, published by the International Harvester Company:

"The greatest risk is always on the landlord's side in the rental of property. He is putting his property into the possession and care of another, who may be a person of doubtful utility. It is well to observe these rules and cautions: Do not trust to a verbal lease—let it be in writing, signed and sealed. Its stipulations then become commands and can be enforced. Let it be signed in duplicate, so that each party may have an original.

"Be careful in selecting your tenant. There is more in the man than there is in the bond. Insert such covenants as to repairs, manner of use, and in restraint of waste as the circumstances call for. As to particular stipulations examine leases drawn by those who have had long experience in renting farms, and adopt such as meet your case. There should be covenants against assigning and underletting.

"If the tenant is of doubtful responsibility, make the rent payable in installments. A covenant that the crops shall remain in the lessor's till the lessee's contracts with him have been fulfilled is valid against the lessee's creditors. In the ordinary case of renting farms on shares the courts will treat the crops as the joint property of lord and tenant, and thus protect the former's rights. Every lease should contain stipulations for forfeiture and re-entry in case of non-payment or breach of any covenants.

Fresh Manure.

Authorities say that fresh manure loses in the process of decay from 20 to 70 per cent of its original weight. Some tests conducted by the Cornell Experiment Station showed that two tons of horse manure exposed in a pile for five months lost 57 per cent of its gross weight, 60 per cent of its nitrogen, 47 per cent of its potash. Five tons of cow manure exposed for the same length of time in a compact pile lost, through leaching and dissipation of gases, 49 per cent in gross weight, 41 per cent of its nitrogen, 19 per cent of its phosphoric acid and 8 per cent of its potash.

A ton of average fresh horse manure from animals fed on ordinary balanced ration, contains about 10 pounds potash.

Concrete Platform for Cistern.

Make a square box of 2x10-inch stuff, any size you want the platform. Six feet square is a nice size. Cut out the pieces as shown in the cut so the frame will fit the crown of the cistern. Clean off all the earth and old matter. Set the frame level and about two inches lower than the cistern curb. This will give fall sufficient to lead all water away from the pump. Make a mixture of cement and sand or gravel. Mix all together, dry, then add water to make a stiff mortar. Pack in the form and smooth off with a straight-edged board. Run a seam from each corner to the crown to prevent cracking.—Denver Post.

Breeding Against Tuberculosis.

W. M. Hayes, assistant secretary of agriculture, declares that there is good reason to believe that domestic animals can be bred resistent to tuberculosis and that in time we may have a breed of animals that are immune from many diseases that are now fatal.

Cabbage Worms.

A recommended remedy for cabbage worms is to dust the worms with wheat flour or middlings.

Poultry Pickings.

Watch closely and mark the hen that is laying an egg each day. She is the kind you want to perpetuate in the flock.

Weed out the hens that lay the small-sized eggs. They are the unprofitable ones and never will improve the quality of the flock.

There are some poultrymen who advocate pullets for breeders instead of yearling hens. It is generally found that well-developed fowls make the most prolific breeders.

If you have both pullets and old hens in your flock keep close watch and see which one is laying the most eggs. A little knowledge along this line may assist next season in selecting a flock of winter layers.

Hints About the Farm.

The four dairy essentials are light, ventilation, a proper floor and a comfortable tie.

All cows that are weak, extremely thin and coughing must be removed from the herd.

Planks laid over the cement where the cows stand will prevent injury to the animals.

Let the sheep glean over the grain and cornfields if the land is free from burs and cockles.

Pails, cans, strainers, coolers and every other utensil that comes in contact with the milk should be washed and sterilized.

Farmers who have given cowpeas a fair trial have almost invariably continued their use along with their other staple crops.

Frequent plowing will gave a larger average crop with an equal amount of fertilizer, but it mosts more to produce and is more work to harvest.

With good grass land it is considered that the plan of moderate top dressing with chemicals bringe a larger income for the labor employed than any other sytem of management.

THE HOUSEHOLD

Raised Doughnuts.

Two cups warm water, one cup sugar, one-half cup lard, one egg, one-half yeast cake dissolved in a little water. Flour to make a soft batter, not as stiff as for bread. I prefer to mix the batter one noon, so as to cut it down once or twice, then let it raise over night. Cut down again in the morning and cut out like baking powder doughnuts, and let raise again for half an hour. Fry and roll in sugar and cinnamon.

Baked Sweet Potato.

There are four different ways of baking the sweet potato, one of the most popular being as follows: Boil three large sweet potatoes, peel and slice them in strips and arrange them in layers on a baking dish, sprinkling each layer with sugar and small pieces of butter. Shake a little of the sugar and butter on the top and bake until brown. If the potatoes are too dry, add a little boiling water.

Rhubarb Pie.

Pour boiling water over two cups of canned rhubarb, then drain. Beat the yolks of three eggs light, add a heaping tablespoonful of flour, one-fourth cup of water, a tablespoonful of melted butter, sugar to taste and the rhubarb cut small. Mix well and bake in an open crust. When done, make a meringue of the egg whites and sugar and spread on top of the pie. Brown lightly.

Pecan Nut Bread.

Four cups of flour, three-quarters of a cup of sugar; three generous teaspoonfuls of baking powder; a pinch of salt; two ounces of pecan nut meats, chopped and dredged with flour; one egg; two cupfuls of milk, one-half pound of raisins, seeded, chopped and mixed with the nuts. Mix and set aside for thirty minutes before baking in a slow oven.

Lamb Broth.

Use a quart of water to each pound of meat and bones. Cut the meat and crack the bones. Cover with cold water and stand to soak. Allow soup to boil slowly always. When well done strain through a sieve or coarse cloth. Reheat before serving with cubes of toasted bread. A little cooked rice may be added to the broth.

A Dainty Quick Dessert.

An easily prepared and delicious dessert consists of whole peeled bananas rolled in chopped walnuts and placed on pretty plates in nests of sweetened whipped cream. Serve with lemon wafers, marguerites or Scotch wafers. Nothing could be more dainty and at the same time satisfying.

Bread Batter Cakes.

Soak one cup of bread crumbs in one cup of hot water. Add one cup of sweet milk, one cup of sour milk or buttermilk to which one scant teaspoonful of soda has been added. Lastly put in one well-beaten egg and a saltspoonful of salt. Bake on a hot greased griddle.

Vinegar Pit.

One cup of vinegar; one-half cup of sugar; two teaspoonfuls of flour; one teaspoonful of butter; one teaspoonful of cinnamon; two cups of water. Boil all together until thick, as you would a custard. Bake in an open crust.

Oatmeal with Apple Juice.

For each cupful of water used in cooking the oatmeal use one cupful of apple juice made by pressing stewed juicy apples through a sieve. Sugar when served.

Baked Smoked Whitefish.

Wrap each fish in thick brown paper and bake in the oven until hot through. Remove paper and serve fish on a warm platter.

Hints About the House.

Nutmegs should always be grated starting from the blossom end. They grate better that way.

The ribs of a discarded umbrella may be utilized for tying up tall and willowy palms in pots.

Be sure to iron garments with the straight of the goods and thus prevent stretching of the bias seams.

If a turkey or chicken is rubbed inside and out with lemon it will make the meat white, juicy and tender.

Most housekeepers are agreed that better work can be accomplished by using a heavy iron than a light one.

A strip of emery cloth tacked to a small square board will be found useful for quickly sharpened the carving knife.

When boiling fresh potatoes try putting a sprig of mint in the water to give a delicious flavor to the vegetables.

Throw coarse salt over rugs and carpets before sweeping them to prevent the dust from rising. This will brighten the color also.

Yellow machine oil stains on white material may be removed by rubbing the spot with a cloth wet with ammonia before using soap.

Cream to be whipped must be one day old. No sugar should be added either before or after it is beaten. The sweetening should be in the pudding or cake with which it is served.

Lard used for frying cakes or croquets can be clarified and used again by heating thoroughly with several slices of raw potatoes and then strained. It cannot be clarified after cooking fish.

When frying hot fat may be spilled on the floor, in that case at once pour cold water on it. The cold water will cause the fat to harden, when it can be taken up with a knife, instead of being allowed to sink into the wood or stone of the floor.

A busy housewife can save herself a great deal of labor by covering all the larder, cupboard and scullery shelves with oilcloth. This is easily kept clean. My kitchen table is also covered in the same manner, while a few odd floor tiles on which saucepans can be put are equally useful, as they are so easily wiped clean.

His Hands Cracked Open.

"I am a man seventy years old. My hands were very sore and cracked open on the insides for over a year with large sores. They would crack open and bleed, itch, burn and ache so that I could not sleep and could do but little work. They were so bad that I could not dress myself in the morning. They would bleed and the blood dropped on the floor. I called on two doctors, but they did me no good. I could get nothing to do any good till I got the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. About a year ago my daughter got a cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment and in one week from the time I began to use them my hands were all healed up and they have not been a mite sore since. I would not be without the Cuticura Remedies.

"They also cured a bad sore on the hand of one of my neighbor's children, and they think very highly of the Cuticura Remedies. John W. Hasty, So. Effingham, N. H., Mar. 5 and Apr. 11, '09."

New York's First Ferry.

Cornelius Dircksen was the first official ferryman on the Island of Manhattan. The mooring place on the Manhattan side was about where Water street crosses the present Peck slip. He started the system in 1637. Passengers who wanted to be rowed over blew a horn for the skipper if he chanced to be absent when they arrived. From Dircksen's skiff grew the present ferry system of the city.

"Beautiful Hands."

One of the most popular of James Whitcomb Riley's poems is "Beautiful Hands." You may be sure the hands he referred to were not reddened and swollen and cracked by the caustic in cheap yellow laundry soap. Easy Task soap—costs a nickel a cake—lasts twice as long and does twice as much work as the yellow, common sort. Your grocer has it, or will get it for you. It's an honest soap that does the hard work for you and gives you a chance to enjoy life.

Select.

Once when passing through a cemetery in Lenox Eliot Gregory was surprised to see that the members of one old New England family had been buried in a circle, with their feet toward its center. He asked the reason for this arrangement and a wit of that day, daughter of Mrs. Stowe, replied: "So that when they rise at the last day only members of their own family may face them!"

Siamese English.

Here is an amusing extract taken from a Siamese paper that has an English column for foreign readers:

"Shooting Outrage—O Fearful Agony.—Khoon Tong was a man of Langoon and on his return accidentally shot at by some miscreant scoundrels. Untimely death, oh fearful! All men expressed their mourn. The cowardice dogs is still at large."

"That's so," remarked the suburbanite. "Mine have cost me $2.87½ a dozen this winter."

"Impossible!"

"Not at all impossible. I keep half a dozen hens."

AN UP-TO-DATE STOVE

Do you realize there is no longer any reason why you should use a coal range? Oil is cheaper than coal; it is lighter and easier to handle, and gives an intense heat. Provided you have the right stove, oil is more economical, cleaner and less trouble. Have you seen the

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

The accompanying illustration gives you only a rough idea of its appearance. You really can't appreciate it until you either use it yourself, or talk to someone who has used it. It does everything that a coal range will do—except heat the room. The New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove will do anything, from heating a kettle of water to cooking a course dinner, but it won't heat a room. It doesn't "smell," it doesn't smoke. It can't get out of order. Light it and it is ready. Turn it down and it is out. Only a woman who knows the trouble of carrying coal and cooking in a hot kitchen can appreciate what it means to have a clean, perfect stove that will cook anything, boil, bake or roast, and yet won't heat the kitchen. How is it done? The flame is controlled in turquoise-blue enamel chimneys, and directed against the bottom of pot, pan, kettle or oven, and only there. The flame operates exactly where it is needed—and nowhere else. With this stove your kitchen is cool.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

The nickel finish with the bright blue of the chimneys makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

Aids Nature

The great success of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in curing weak stomachs, wasted bodies, weak lungs, and obstinate and lingering coughs, is based on the recognition of the fundamental truth that "Golden Medical Discovery" supplies Nature with body-building, tissue-repairing, muscle-making materials, in condensed and concentrated form. With this help Nature supplies the necessary strength to the stomach to digest food, build up the body and thereby throw off lingering obstinate coughs. The "Discovery" re-establishes the digestive and nutritive organs in sound health, purifies and enriches the blood, and nourishes the nerves—in short establishes sound vigorous health.

If your dealer offers something "just as good," it is probably better FOR HIM—it pays better. But you are thinking of the cure not the profit, so there's nothing "just as good" for you. Say so.

HE WAS NOT IMMORTAL.

A Test That Proved It Was Possible to Kill a Spaniard.

Early in the sixteenth century the natives of Porto Rico plotted to kill the Spaniards on the island. There was much doubt, however, as to whether or not it was possible to kill a Spaniard. Many of the natives insisted that it was not. Finally it was decided to make an experiment.

A young Spaniard who was passing through an Indian village was hospitably received and fed, and then a number of natives accompanied him on his journey. When he arrived at a river his companions offered to carry him across.

The young man accepted and was taken up by two men and carried into the water on their shoulders. Arriving near the middle of the river, they threw him in and held him down until he ceased to struggle.

Then they carried him ashore with profuse apologies, loudly proclaiming that they stumbled by accident and calling upon him to arise and continue his journey. But the young man did not move, and finally the natives were convinced that he was actually dead.

Having secured the proof they wanted, the leaders of the rebellion at once began a general attack upon the Spaniards.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Unearned Gratitude.

A sample of the late Dr. William Everett's caustic repartee:

"I always experience a sense of deep obligation to you whenever I meet you or hear of you," said George Babbitt to Dr. Everett one morning when they found themselves pacing the deck of an ocean steamer together.

"Why so?" piped the doctor.

"Because," said Mr. Babbitt, "I recall that I was once so fortunate as to win the Boylston prize for oratory at Harvard, and you were chairman of the board of judges."

"I remember it perfectly well," rejoined the brusque doctor. "The judges were five in number. At the conclusion of the speaking we retired to consider the merits of the contestants. It was moved that you be awarded a first prize. On that motion the vote was 3 to 2 in your favor. I was one of the two."—Boston Transcript.

Bleeding by Bowshot.

That all diseases can be cured by bleeding is still firmly believed by several savage tribes and especially by the Papuan negroes. When one of their physicians becomes convinced that it is necessary to bleed a patient he goes several feet in front of him, and then, drawing his bow, he fits a sharp pointed arrow to it and, after careful aim, lives the arrow into the vein which he desires to open. The arrow, it is said, invariably goes straight to the mark, and the thorn or splinter of glass with which it is tipped does the work as successfully as a lancet. Moreover, the patients never show the slightest fear, since they are convinced that from the moment the arrows pierce their veins they will begin to recover.

The Producer.

"It must be annoying to have to ask your husband for money," said the intrusive woman.

"I wouldn't think of doing so," replied Mrs. Cumrox. "We insist on family games of bridge and in that way avoid being under the slightest obligations for what he contributes."—Washington Star.

We have got some men that is forever growling about the roads. If the supervisor doesn't work them they growl and if he does work them they growl. If they would put their shoulder to the wheel and help the supervisor how much better it would be. When it comes to one man going over 10 to 20 miles of road at once it is out of the question. In our district there are eight or nine road drags. When it rains, while the roads are drying, get that many teams to work one-half day to the team, and the work is done and the growling at the supervisor is avoided. The supervisor feels better and so do we, but the growler never gets out until the supervisor drags him with a notice, then the chances are he is mad. I have seen some of them fool around all summer then at the first of December wanted more time. Such men would never get a bridle-way through the woods. Let everybody take hold and help the supervisor. He has no snap and earns every cent he gets. It is our duty as good citizens to help improve our country. We cannot improve the country any better than by good roads.

Prolonging Life

While no way has yet been found to make life perpetual, it is a fact that life can be prolonged. Many people die before their time because the organs become clogged and cannot do their work. To keep the body open, active and free from impurities there must be no constipation, dyspepsia, flatulency, liver troubles, etc. If old or young people suffer from these complaints they can find a ready cure with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Why Salves Fail to Cure Eczema

Scientists are now agreed that the eczema germs are lodged not in the outer skin or epidermis, but in the inner skin. Hence, a penetrating liquid is required, not an outward salve that clogs the pores.

We recommend to all eczema patients the standard prescription Oil of Wintergreen as compounded in liquid form known as D. D. D. Prescription. A trial bottle of this D. D. D. Prescription, at only 25 cents, will instantly relieve the itch. We have sold and recommended this remedy for years, and know of wonderful cures from its use. We recommend it to our patrons. CHARLES WAGONER FOR RENOMINATION

Charles Wagoner, present surveyor of DeKalb county, today announced his candidacy for renomination at the democratic primary to be held on June 1. Mr. Wagoner is a full fledged, uncompromising democrat and has proven to be an excellent public official in every respect. His work has been of a high order and his renomination and re-election would meet with the hearty approval of DeKalb county democracy. It is quite certain that he will have no opposition for the nomination.—Courier.

The Hamilton Meeting

Sunday night will be the closing night of the meetings. Twenty eight have taken a stand for Christ up to Wednesday night of this week. The closing days are expected to be the best. The following is the program for these last days:

Thursday Night—"The Unpardonable Sin."

Duett—Prof. Haley and J. E. Sturgis.

Friday Night—"A Butler Young Man."

Saturday Night—"The Sheepfold."

Sunday, 10:30 a. m. (special service for converts, members and friends)—"The Table of the Holy Place."

Sunday Night (the closing service)—"Heaven."

Edgerton

Everybody is busy around town this fine weather.

Jacob Coll, of Butler, was in town last Monday.

The Oak Mfg. Co. has a new smoke stack to put up in the place of the one that blew off a few weeks ago.

Hiram Long, Lew Groff and Rev. Ewers were at Bryan on business last Tuesday. They went over in Hi's auto.

John Goeltzenleuchter and family, of LaPorte, Ind., spent over Sunday with his parents in Edgerton.

The L. S. & M. S. Ry. are laying the fourth track through our town. They will end the third and fourth tracks about a mile west of town.

Phillip Easler died Tuesday forenoon after a couple of years sickness. Funeral will be held at the Methodist church Friday afternoon. Interment in Maple Grove cemetery.

J. C. Jinnings and family, of Troy, were the guests of J. A. Jinnings and family last Sunday.

Myron Long and Chas. Smith were at Toledo on business last Monday.

Mothers day was very fittingly observed at the Presbyterian church last Sunday evening. The pastor, Rev. Ewers, preached a very able sermon on the influences of an evil mother, using for his subject, "The Mother of Jacob and Esau." The Modern Woodmen attended in a body. At the close of the sermon the pastor presented the grandmothers and mothers (also some of the grandfathers) with a white carnation. The church was filled to overflow.

Notice of Removal

Dr. H. T. Berkey wishes to announce the removal of his dental office to the Oberlin Grocery Co. block where he will be glad to welcome his old patients and many new ones. 19-3

Notice

The public library will be kept open hereafter three days each week—Monday, Wednesday and Friday. tf

Methodist Church Notes

The minister will preach at 10:30 and the holy communion will be observed. Persons may be baptized and received into the church.

Theme for the evening, "Halleys' Comet and Its Message." Text, Psalm 19:1; "The heavens declared the glory of God and the firmament showeth His handiwork."

You are all cordially invited. Come and hear about the comet. There are numerous lessons for us as we study the stars and the other heavenly bodies.

The Ladies' Aid Society will meet with Mrs. Will Knisely Friday afternoon.

E. F. ALBERTSON, Minister.

HTE OPERA HOUSE LECTURE ENTERTAINMENT

Monday night at Thompson's opera house Evangelist Hamilton gives his illustrated lecture on "Twice Around the World." Few men have traveled as much as he. His evangelistic tours have led him into valuable experiences. Over 200 views are to be used in this interesting lecture. As many as one thousand people have attended this lecture at a time. At Newville recently the house and aisles were crowded, and at St. Joe the house was filled.

Mr. Haley gives some sleight of hand for the young folks. "The Holy City" among other songs will be rendered and highly illustrated. This lecture deserves a general public patronage.

Public Sale

I will offer at public auction at my residence, six miles southeast of Butler, and one mile north of Newville, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. on Wednesday, May 18, the following property to-wit:

Five head of horses, 2 brood mares; 1 gray Percheron-Norman mare, weight about 1500; 1 yearling Percheron Norman colt; 1 bay mare, weight 1200 or 1250; three head of cattle, 1 cow four years old, half blood Jersey, will be fresh in August; 1 two year old heifer, will be fresh in August; 1 yearling heifer, 1 Poland China brood sow, 7 head shoats, 100 head of chickens hay in mow, corn in crib.

Farming Implements—Two horse wagon, 3 inch tire; top buggy, disc, 2 drags, corn cultivator, hay rake, McCormick mower, one horse cultivator, hay rack, 2 breaking plows, bob sled, set double harness, set single harness, about 13 cords of split stove wood, fanning mill, and other articles too numerous to mention.

Terms made known on day of sale.

FLIGHT OF THE EARTH.

Rushing Through Space at the Rate of a Million Miles a Day.

Our dear old earth, which seems immovable and solid as we go about our daily work or travel over its furrowed surface, is yet spinning and rolling and swaying in complex but orderly motion. Its axial rotation gives us day and night. Its circuit round the sun brings the seasons and the year. The circling of the poles produces the procession of the equinoxes. The planets perturb in its courses. The plane of its orbit sways up and down, and its perihelion is slowly shifted. The moon swings round a center of gravity common to both, while the sun and all our system speed onward to some far distant goal. And, if the bright star in the constellation Taurus is the central point round which this vast orbit sweeps, then Alcyone is the center of the universe for us.

As far as astronomers can judge, this motion through the vast abyss of interstellar space is at the rate of about a million miles a day, and it is in the direction of the constellation Hercules. The motion through space is believed to be away from Argus and toward Hercules. Some have thought that Alcyone in the Pleiades is somewhere near the center of the vast circuit swept over by the sun and his attendant worlds. If this is true, that beautiful star as it silently twinkles in the constellation Taurus becomes of surpassing interest to mankind.—Chicago Tribune.

CHOP GRINDING

We have just installed in our mill a new mahine for grinding chop. This machine is a product of The American Machinery Co., Port Huron, Mich., and is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction in every respect.

We can grind in any manner desirable. Kindly state at mill door if chop is to be ground fine, medium or coarse. Although this machine has cost us several hundred dollars, we make no extra charge for grinding, and will grind at same old prices—5c per bushel, or one-eighth toll.

We are also prepared to crush cobs and then grind them, and price on this work is 10 cents per bushel. One bag oats, rye, etc., is considered two bushels, and one bag ear corn one bushel.

Give us a call and let us demonstrate what this machine will do.

Church of Christ Items

The revival meeting at the Church of Christ closed with the evening service Lord's day, May 15. There were in all twenty-eight additions by confession and baptism and by letter. Evangelists Hamilton and Haley rendered good service, preaching and singing the gospel with power. Their next meeting will be at Newport, Ark.

Services Lord's day, May 22, will be as follows: Sunday school at 9:30 a. m. Preaching and Lord's supper at 10:30 a. m. Subject, "What Doest Thou Here." Y. P. S. C. E. at 6 p. m. Preaching at 7:30 p. m. Subject, "The Modern Prodigal."

A "Training for Service" class was organized at the church Thursday evening of this week. The text book used is Moninger's. The class will meet every Thursday evening at 7:30. The object of the course is to acquire a thorough knowledge of God's word. The class is not limited to members of the Church of Christ, but anyone desiring to take this course will be made welcome. "The entrance of thy word giveth light."

A Statement

The report going over the town that on Friday night, May 6, I caught my husband with Mrs. Jay Pessell, is not true, and who ever says so tells a falsehood, but I did see him coming out of her back yard after eight o'clock on above date after, (according to his statement) leaving a letter for her in her woodshed. I make this statement of my own accord, in justice to myself and others implicated in this trouble.

I also want to say that the report over town that I signed a statement in effect to not seeing my husband coming out of Mrs. J. Pessell's back yard, on Friday night, May 6, after (according to his statement) leaving a letter for her in the woodshed, is not true, and who ever says I signed such a statement tells a falsehood.

MEMORIAL DAY PROCLAMATION

Indianapolis, Ind., May 11, 1910.

The following Memorial day proclamation was issued today from the office of the governor:

"Death is the arch gleaner in the fields of time. Each day is harvest day and each soul is ripened grain. Windrow after window, He mows down the human race. He spares not young men nor maiden nor him who stoops with age. Each going down leaves a void unfilled in some human breast; but the patriot's death sobers and fills with sorrow the nation's heart. If the blood of martyrs is the seed of the church, then the life and death of the soldier who offered his life as a willing sacrifice for the preservation of the union, must remain the most fruitful germ in the formation of American character.

"It is well for a people to live in the present and to plan for the future, but it is ill for people to forget the past. Thus far, in our history, we have not ceased to remember the toil, devotion and sacrifice of the living and the dead who, from '61 to '65, counted all else naught if thereby they might preserve the union of the states. Year by year, with the beauty of the lily and the fragrance of the rose, we seek to voice above their graves the gratitude of the American to the hero of the age. Only a few now stand near the portals of that door which never outward swings. This year as they bedew with tears the graves of their long-gone companions in arms, let the people of Indiana reverently lay aside their usual vocations and join in this solemn consecration to the rights of men and of saddened reverence for that shedding of blood without which, thus far, in the world's history, there has been no remission of sin.

"In the hope that such will be the character of that day, I, Thomas R Marshall, governor of the state of Indiana, do hereby designate and set apart Monday, May 30, 1910, as Memorial day and do proclaim the same to be a legal holiday throughout the state. May all that is said that day come from lips afire with patriotism and hearts aglow with love for the hero dead and the hero living.

"Done at the capitol in Indianapolis and given under my hand and the great seal of the state of Indiana, this 11th day of May, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and ten and in the year of independence of the United States one hundred and thirty-four.

"THOS. R. MARSHALL,
"Governor.
"FRED A. SIMS, Sec'y. of State."

G. A. R. Decoration

The arrangements for G. A. R. decoration services are as follows:

May 29, the Post and Corps will assemble at the G. A. R. hall at 10:00 a. m. to attend Memorial services at the Christian church at 10:30.

May 30, they will assemble at the hall at 1:00 p. m. to attend Decoration services at the Christian church at 1:30 p. m.

All orders and everybody are invited to assist us in these services, and all orders that expect to appear in a body should report the same to the commander before May 27.

By a resolution the committee was requested to solicit the liverymen and owners of private conveyances who are willing to donate the service of the same to convey the Post and Corps to the cemetery that they may enjoy to some of them, their last privilege, and report the same to Commander McClintock as early as convenient.

Notice

Dear Friends—Six months ago I began sending notices of your accounts, have sent you several notices since, and now in conclusion will say I shall come to Butler, May 26, and remain until the accounts of Acker & Kramer and M. M. Acker are settled. On the date stated above I shall bring suit against unsettled accounts, any costs that you will have to pay will be your fault, not mine, as I certainly have given you plenty of time and notices of your past due accounts. Any person desiring to settle their account can pay same to Dr. Kramer and receive receipt.

Say, boys, I hope your accounts will all be settled by May 26. I can have a much better time and leave Butler feeling that none but good honest people live there.

Very truly,
20-2 DR. M. M. ACKER.

Here is the picture of the most popular and best qualified sheriff that DeKalb county has ever had, Ralph Thomas, who is asking for renomination at the hands of the democratic party. That he will be the unanimous choice is a foregone conclusion.

The above is a cut of Miles Baxter, democratic candidate for county auditor. He is a pleasant fellow and an ardent democrat, and much better looking than the picture here produced. If he is nominated he is pretty sure of being elected. His experience and ability especially fits him for the office.

John J. Oberlin

John J. Oberlin, the most likely candidate for county treasurer on the democrat ticket, is a man of high moral character and much ambition. He has resided in Butler for sixteen years, during which time he has enjoyed the respect of the people.

Mr. Oberlin started out as a country school teacher, securing employment on the farm during the summer time and teaching in the winter. Since coming to this city he has served in the capacity of postmaster, commissioner, and at present is a member of the city council. He has been actively engaged in the grocery business for ten years and his honest dealings and courteous manner has made him scores of friends. He has a good education and his natural ability especially fits him for the office he seeks, although it was after much persuasion on the part of his friends that he decided to make the race. At this time the prospects for his nomination and election is very good.

LETTER FROM JOSEPH EVERTTS

Concerning Alabama For the Herald Readers

Decatur, Alabama, May 10, 1910.

EDITOR BUTLER HERALD:

Dear Sir—It has been some time since I wrote you a letter, but I have been very busy and you will have to excuse me. I will be more prompt in the future. We are all well and trust this finds you and all of our friends the same.

We began to sow oats the 4th day of February and they are heading out now and will do to cut by June 1. Wheat is about all headed out and will do to cut soon. We have about eleven acres of oats to cut, and I have seen poorer oats grow in Indiana. We have had a very dry season, quite cool part of the time.

I planted about seven acres of corn in March and it is doing fine. Some of it is eighteen inches high. We have about fifteen acres of corn planted and will plant more in June We have about eight acres in strawberries and they are looking fine, have plowed and hoed them three times. We picked the first ripe berries April 16, and I think there will be berries until the 1st of June. The reason we have such a long season for berries I think is due to the cool nights we have. This has been a very backward spring and cotton has been damaged to some extent.

We like the climate and people, fine. I think this country has a great future for anyone who will go to work in earnest with a determination to win. Horses, mules, cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry does splendid here, and at one time when slavery was in its prime it was the richest part of the south. The fact of it is this land has been farmed to cotton and corn for 70 or 80 years without any thing in the shape of fertilizer being put on the ground, and yet they grow good crops of both. Certainly proves it is good land.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH W. EVERTTS,
Box 84, Decatur, Alabama.

Carleton Coming

Will Carleton, the famous poet, editor and orator who is to visit this city on June 9, was a first cousin to the late A. J. Mason and a second cousin to W. A and C. B. Mason and Mrs. Eva Knisely of this city. He was born and reared on a farm near Hudson, Mich., but for many years has lived at Brooklyn, New York. The poems which made him popular are, "Betsy and I are Out" and "Over the Hills to the Poor House." He is a graduate of Hillsdale college and owns the old Carleton homestead which is located near that place and which was his home when he wrote the famous verses. His first effort was, "Rifts in the Clouds" which was delivered as a class poem when he graduated. His last book is entitled, "Drifted In" and is spoken of very highly by literary critics. It is an inspiration to hear such a man and the opera house should be packed to overflowing, as such an opportunity seldom comes.

Methodist Church Notes

Text for morning sermon, Eph. 17, 18, 19: That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye being rooted and grounded in love may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and height and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God.

In the evening temperance reform will be the theme. Is prohibition a failure? Is local option a success? What are your views? Write them out, and if you object to prohibition let me answer your objections. I will give views of statesmen, politicians, physicians and others. A large choir will sing. You are all invited.

The Aid Society will meet with Mrs. F. A. Brink on Friday afternoon. A good attendance is desired.

E. F. ALBERTSON, Minister.

Gonser Withdraws

Ashley, Ind., May 17, 1910.

EDITOR HERALD, Butler, Ind.

Dear Sir—Owing to the fact that Mr. Jas. W. Clark of this place has decided to become a candidate for county treasurer and being fully aware that with two candidates from the same township neither could succeed, I being the younger man I hereby withdraw my name from the race. Permit me to say that since my announcement I have received much encouragement from friends all over the county for which I desire to thank them. Wishing success to the nominees of the primaries at the next election,

I am respectfully,
ASHTON W. GONSER.

Not How Cheap —How Good!

To tell the truth, we don't like the words "cheap groceries."

We much prefer to deal in the highest qualities obtainable.

Because reduced prices ALWAYS stand for reduced values—it is inevitable.

Business is so regulated that it cannot be any other way.

So we talk high qualities month in and month out, and we sell accordingly.

And strange as it may seem, it is the truest sort of economy to deal here.

"What place is it?" asked one of the passengers.

"It's the county insane asylum," answered the chauffeur.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. "Do you mean typewriter erasers?"

"Well, maybe that was it, but what's the difference? Ain't they the same? I want a dime's worth of 'em."

The Flannel Shirt Joke.

There used to be a favorite funny paper story about a man who bought a flannel shirt, and every time it was washed it had to be handed down to one of the children until at last the baby was wearing it. Washing flannels used to be a critical task, but now Easy Task soap is used, and it not only does not shrink the goods, but it leaves the garment soft and comfortable as eiderdown. Easy Task soap is pure, white and sanitary.

EXPOSURE TO COLD
and wet is the first step to Pneumonia. Take Perry Davis' Painkiller and the danger is averted. Unequaled for colds, sore throat, quinsy, 25c, 35c and 50c.

Treating Cancer with Heat.

Dr. Eugene Doyen explained at the International Congress of Physiotherapy in Paris his treatment of cancer by means of electrically produced heat. The secret of the discovery is that the cancerous cells are destroyed by a temperature of from 50 to 55 degrees centigrade, which is entirely harmless to healthy cells. The method shows wonderful results, he says, in eliminating the need of the knife in all lesions which are accessible to an electrical current, artificially applied. The healing of the tissues follows immediately upon the coagulation of the cancerous cells.

How to Cut Down The Meat Bill

UNCLE SAM has had his own way long enough. Miss Columbia has decided that it is time for her to assert her rights and to take a share in promoting the peace and welfare of these United States. Being a woman, Miss Columbia's first official act is in behalf of her sex. When Miss Columbia issues a cook book it's supposed to be the law and the gospel of all good and patriotic cooks. It comes out with all the power and authority of the government of the United States behind it, and it bears upon its cover the great seal of the Department of Agriculture to show that it's the real thing.

This cook book of Miss Columbia's is not a fancy affair. It is a practical publication for a practical purpose. After showing that there is little difference in the nutritive value of the different cuts of butchers' meats, the book takes up, first, the question of economy in buying. The juicy, tender cuts of good flavor sell for the higher prices. When porterhouse steak sells for 25 cents a pound, it may be assumed that in town or village markets round steak would sell for about 15 cents, and chuck ribs, one of the best cuts of the forequarter, for 10 cents. This makes it appear that the chuck ribs are less than half as expensive as porterhouse steak and two-thirds as expensive as the round. But apparent economy is not always real economy, and in this case the bones in the three cuts should be taken into account. Of the chuck ribs, more than one-half is bone or other materials usually classed under the head of "waste" or "refuse." Of the round, one-twelfth is waste, and of the porterhouse one-eighth. In buying the chuck, then, the housewife gets, at the prices assumed, less than one-half pound of food for 10 cents, making the net price of the edible portion 22 cents a pound; in buying round, she gets eleven-twelfths of a pound for 15 cents, making the net value about 16½ cents; in buying porterhouse she gets seven-eighths of a pound for 25 cents, making the net value about 28½ cents a pound. The relative prices, therefore, of the edible portions are 22, 16½ and 28½ cents; or, to put it in a different way, a dollar at the prices assumed will buy 4½ pounds of solid meat from the cut known as chuck, 6 pounds of such meat from the round, and only 3½ pounds of such meat from the porterhouse.

The choice of cuts should correspond to the needs of the family and the preferences of its members. Careful consideration of market conditions is also useful, not only to make sure that the meat is handled and marketed in a sanitary way, but also to take advantage of any favorable change in price which may be due, for instance, to a large local supply of some particular kind or cut of meat. In towns where there is opportunity for choice, it may sometimes be found more satisfactory not to give all the family trade to one butcher; by going to various markets before buying the housekeeper is in a better position to hear of variations in prices and so be in a position to get the best value.

Almost any meat bones can be used in soup making, and if the meat is not all removed from them the soup is better. But some bones, especially the rib bones, if they have a little meat left on them, can be grilled or roasted into very palatable dishes. The "spareribs" of Southern cooks is made of the rib bones from a roast of pork, and makes a favorite dish when well browned. The braised ribs of beef often served in high-class restaurants are often made from bones cut from rib roasts.

Trimmings from meat may be utilized in various "made dishes," or they can always be put to good use in the soup kettle. It is surprising how many economies may be practiced in such ways and also in the table use of left-over portions of cooked meat if attention is given to the matter.

Meat pies represent another method of combining flour with meat. They are ordinarily baked in a fairly deep dish, the sides of which may or may not be lined with dough. The cooked meat, cut into small pieces, is put into the dish, sometimes with small pieces of vegetables, a gravy is poured over the meat, the dish is covered with a layer of dough, and then baked. Most commonly the dough is like that used for soda or cream-of-tartar biscuit, but sometimes shortened pastry dough, such as is made for pies, it used. This is especially the case in the fancy individual dishes usually called patties. Occasionally the pie is covered with a potato crust, in which case the meat is put directly into the dish without lining the latter. Stewed beef, veal and chicken are probably most frequently used in pies, but any kind of meat may be used, or several kinds in combination.

Chopping meat is one of the principal methods of making tough and inexpensive meat tender. In broiling chopped meat the fact should be kept in mind that there is no reason why it should not be cooked like the best and most expensive tenderloin. To begin with, the broiler should be even more carefully greased than for whole steak. This makes it possible to form the balls or cakes of chopped meat with very little pressure without running the risk of having them pulled to pieces by adhering to the broiler. They should be heated on both sides even more quickly than the steak, because the chopping has provided more ways of escape for the juice, and these openings should be sealed as soon as possible.

Chopped raw meat of almost any kind can be very quickly made into a savory dish by cooking it with water or with water and milk for a short time, then thickening with butter and flour, and adding different seasonings as relished, either pepper and salt alone, or onion juice, celery or tomato. Such a dish may be made to "go further" by serving it on toast or with a border of rice in some similar combination.

ELOPER BATTLES WITH POSSE.

Near San Diego, Cal., kneeling behind an automobile in which he had eloped with Gertrude Seifert, his 15-year-old sweetheart, Thomas Foreman fought a revolver battle with a posse headed by the girl's father which had been sent out to capture the couple. Although her father and other relatives were in the crowd in front of them, Miss Seifert assisted her sweetheart, and from a protected spot behind the automobile reloaded his revolvers and cheered him on. Foreman finally stopped the advance of the posse and endeavored to continue his journey to Des Conas, at the edge of Death Valley, where the battle took place. The elopement of Foreman, who is 17 years old and the son of a wealthy San Diego merchant, caused great excitement. It is the second time within two months that the young fellow has tried to run away with the girl of his choice, and the sympathy is all in his favor.

THE CENTENARY OF SCOTTISH SAVINGS BANKS

SCOTLAND is preparing for a unique celebration of the establishment, 100 years ago, of the first savings bank in that country. A savings or "frugality bank" was opened at Ruthwell, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, in 1810. The idea was borrowed from England, where Jeremy Bentham had proposed a well-devised system in 1797, based somewhat upon the original scheme of the first savings bank founded in Brunswick, Germany, in 1765. In the first years of their activities the savings banks of Great Britain were not under governmental contral. It was not until 1817 that the government recognized their growing utility to the public. In that year acts were passed which brought all the banks under a system of government control. The British bank proved popular and profitable, and in 1816 a savings bank, following the English plan, was opened in New York City. Just before that a savings bank had been opened at Philadelphia and during the same year the first incorporated savings bank was started at Boston. Postal savings banks were instituted in England in 1861, through the advocacy of the late William E. Gladstone. Many other countries followed the English example and agitation begun in the United States more than a quarter of a century ago is likely to result in the establishment of a system of postal savings banks in this country before long.

In the United Kingdom the present aggregate of savings accounts is approximately $1,119,295,000, of which the post office holds about $778,640,000. The aggregate number of depositors exceeds 10,000,000. The savings bank depositors do not, however, represent the total small savings accounts in Great Britain, as a large sum is carried in other agencies, such as friendly, co-operative and building societies.

Countess Tarnovsky: A VAMPIRE OF REAL LIFE

The trial in Venice of Countess Tarnovsky, known as "the enchantress," on the charge of being a conspirator in the plot that killed Count Kamarowski, her second husband, a wealthy Russian nobleman, has monopolized public attention there. Maria is a woman of remarkable beauty, yet she has been compared to "The Vampire" in Kipling's poem of that name. Her past is filled with death, broken hearts, wrecked lives and ruined homes. She has been the direct cause of the murder of two men. Two other men for love of her stand in peril of life imprisonment—in Italy there is no capital punishment. She is beautiful enough to have sat as the model for the vampire in Burne-Jones' famous painting. She is cold and heartless enough to have inspired Kipling's poem.

Other persons on trial with "the enchantress" were M. Prilukoff, a lawyer; Dr. Naumoff, a Russian student, and Elsie Perries, maid to the countess. Naumoff is the man actually accused of having slain the nobleman. The prosecution asserted that the countess having fascinated Count Kamarowski, married him, and persuaded him to insure his life for $100,000 and will the insurance to her, enticed Naumoff to shoot him. It is alleged that both Naumoff and Prilukoff were among the many lovers of the "enchantress." Prilukoff acted as her lawyer when she was divorced by Count Tarnowski, and he is said to have fallen under her spell at first sight. He is now 37 and the countess is 31. Naumoff is 21. The court in which the trial was held is in the tribunal of St. Mark, which overlooks the Grand canal, and a police gondola was used daily in conveying the prisoners to and from the courtroom. Through the windows of their cells the prisoners could catch a glimpse of the columns of the piazetta, the arcaded facade of the Doges' palace, and the domes of San Marco.

The story of which the trial was the climax is one of the most romantic in the history of crime. It reads like a tale from the days of the Borgias. Poe, Gaboriou or Conan Doyle never wrote a more intricate or fascinating mystery. It was claimed that the Machiavelian plot was conceived in the cunning, murderous brain of the woman. Her subtlety, her consummate art as an actress, her plots within plots, the diplomacy she displayed in playing off one of her lovers against the other, stamp her as one of the world's cleverest criminals. Her game was one of life and death, but she played it with the coolnes and calculation of one moving pawns upon a chess board.

"If" said the late Cesare Lombrosa, the famous criminologist who studied her, "the Countess actually conceived, planned and carried out the tragedy which resulted in the murder of Count Kamarowsky, she is the most remarkable criminal of modern times. Her methods show an absolute mastery of masculine sentiment, passion and covetousness. Her presumed idea of having one lover slay her husband, and then having another lover dispatch him so as to prevent him from becoming her accuser is absolutely original. The crimes of the Borgias and of the Strozzi offer no parallels.

"Her antecedents must have been very remarkable, for it is unusual for one of criminal proclivities to plan so rational a conspiracy that its execution would have been accepted by the public without question. Had her lawyer Prilukoff, in the first instance, not so elaborated his defense as to have aroused suspicion, and had the assassin, Naumoff, been killed as planned, or had the confessions of the Countess and Prilukoff not been shown him, he would undoubtedly have committed suicide, as the Countess had foreseen. On learning that she had betrayed him, the desire, which could only be attained by living, naturally possessed his mind, thus diverting his inborn homicidal tendency from suicide."

Countess Tarnovsky is 30 years old. She had been noted always for the charm of her conversation, her ability as a linguist and her skill as a musician, as well as for her physical allurement. She is rarely beautiful. Five feet nine in height, but of a graceful and supple figure, she is of majestic poise and carriage. Her green-black eyes under their heavy lids are soft and insinuating. Her white, smooth brow is crowned by a mass of brownish black hair which gleams golden-bronze in sunlight. In a word, the Countess is a human heiroglyph, seeming to refute all theories of physiognomy. Her face is not, in any faint suggestion, an index of her character. She might be taken for a madonna, but never for a murderess.

BLOW TO BAY STATE HOBOES.

Famous "Hoboes Retreat" Given Up by Mr. and Mrs. Pike.

The famous "hoboes' retreat" of Salisbury, conducted for many years by Mr. and Mrs. John Pike of this town, is no more, because these benevolent persons have moved from the farm made famous by its mammoth barn, which was given up to the use of the wayfarer.

For many years the Pikes lived near the railroad station in Salisbury, says a New York Herald correspondent, and on their farm was a large barn where hay was stored. Years ago tramps started coming to this barn, and as they were never turned away they kept on coming. Never did a tramp who had stopped in the barn over night go away without a substantial breakfast, and it is estimated that hundreds of tramps have been fed by Mr. and Mrs. Pike.

"We did not like to turn them away," said Mrs. Pike, "for they were somebody's sons."

The fame of the barn has traveled far and wide, and tacked to the large door is a card written by some mother in the far West seeking information of her son. She had heard of the famous tramp barn of Massachusetts, and wrote to Mrs. Pike, asking her to put up the sign that her son might see it if he stayed there.

In the large door a hole was sawed out by Mr. Pike, so that tramps who came late at night could reach through and unlock the door without trouble.

FARMER SLAYS AUTOIST.

Sylvanus Johnson, a wealthy and prominent citizen of Roswell, N. M., is dead from the effects of a blow on the head from a monkey wrench hurled at his chauffeur by an infuriated farmer. While speeding near Roswell, Johnson's automobile frightened a team of horses being driven by a young farmer, and the latter threw his wrench at the chauffeur. His aim was bad and Johnson sank back in his seat unconscious with a crushed skull. The identity of the farmer has not been learned.

Moving Day.

When the gentleman with decided tendencies toward looking after everybody's business but his own saw a furniture removal van being loaded near his house, he sallied forth into the street on investigation bent.

"I say, carter," he began bumptiously, "are the people upstairs moving?"

The carter looked at him scornfully. Then he wiped the perspiration from his manly brow.

"No, sir," he retorted grimly. "We're just taking the furniture for a drive!"

HOOT COTTON KING OFF ENGLISH EXCHANGE.

AMERICAN COTTON KING HUSTLED OUT OF THE MANCHESTER EXCHANGE.

When James A. Patten, well known as a speculator in wheat and cotton, paid a visit to the Manchester Cotton Exchange he met with an unfavorable reception. Hustled by some of those in the exchange, hooted and booed, he was pushed toward the door and found sanctuary in a friend's offices, from which he escaped eventually through an emergency fire exit, jumping into a waiting cab and going straight back to Liverpool, where he was staying for a week. At the annual meeting of the exchange the chairman said that everyone must regret that a citizen of a friendly country who was introduced by one of the members of the exchange should have been subjected to any annoyance. But it was only fair to say that, hearing there might possibly be something of a hostile demonstration, he communicated with the friends of Mr. Patten who were responsible for his introduction, and suggested that he should not be brought on the boards.—Illustrated London News.

A Big Contract.

Winston Churchill, the novelist, described at a dinner in New York the difference between romanticism and realism in fiction:

"To make my meaning clearer," he ended, "I will take the case of a young man and girl—sweethearts. The young man, a romanticist, said passionately to the girl:

"'Darling, it shall be my life's one purpose to surround you with every comfort, and to anticipate and grant your every wish.'

"The girl, a realist, smiled faintly as she answered:

"'Oh, Jack, how good of you; and all on nine dollars a week, too.'"—Success Magazine.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Is the best of all medicines for the cure of diseases, disorders and weaknesses peculiar to women. It is the only preparation of its kind devised by a regularly graduated physician—an experienced and skilled specialist in the diseases of women.

It is a safe medicine in any condition of the system. THE ONE REMEDY which contains no alcohol and no injurious habit-forming drugs and which creates no craving for such stimulants.

THE ONE REMEDY so good that its makers are not afraid to print its every ingredient on each outside bottle-wrapper and attest to the truthfulness of the same under oath.

It is sold by medicine dealers everywhere, and any dealer who hasn't it can get it. Don't take a substitute of unknown composition for this medicine of known composition. No counterfeit is as good as the genuine and the druggist who says something else is "just as good as Dr. Pierce's" is either mistaken or is trying to deceive you for his own selfish benefit. Such a man is not to be trusted. He is trifling with your most priceless possession—your health—may be your life itself. See that you get what you ask for.

WESTERN CANADA AS A GRAIN PRODUCER.

Never Saw Such Fine Wheat Anywhere.

Gust. Anderson, of Maidstone, Saskatchewan, was formerly of Minnesota, and has been in Central Canada three years. On January 16, 1910, he writes:

"Arriving fifteen miles from Maidstone, I bought a couple of steers from a rancher, as my capital was not large, and with the two oxen I brought with me, I broke 25 acres which I put in crop in 1908, and had to clear some brush. I earned $45.00 by breaking fifteen acres for a neighbor and during the summer I put up hay and hauled timber and put up houses for other settlers. Notwithstanding a heavy frost on August 12th, I had 22½ bushels of wheat per acre and 60 bushels of oats. Off 35 acres of wheat in 1909, I got 27 bushels of wheat per acre and 1,300 bushels of oats off 20 acres. I never saw such fine wheat anywhere. We have plenty of rain between May and August and after August seldom any but dry, warm days. Water can be had at from 20 to 40 feet, and plenty of grass for cattle."

The evidence of Mr. Anderson is given because it is encouraging to the man of small means who is desirous of bettering his condition. It shows what can be done, and there is really but small limit to the man with push and energy to become wealthy on Canadian lands. And the grain that he raises is good. A press dispatch says:

The quality of the wheat continues to be the feature of the deliveries. In the total of 3,378 cars in the February inspections there were 2,847 of high grade stuff, a percentage of 84.28. For January the percentage was 82.21, and for the six months it was 88.6. This is an unusually high average, and it demonstrates beyond the shadow of a doubt that the farmers in this part of the Dominion still know how to grow first class wheat. The crop of 1908 was considered good enough, and its average of contract wheat was only 70 per cent. Good weather throughout the season was an important factor, of course, in insuring the high quality of the grain, and it is not likely that atmospheric influences of so favorable a character will be encountered for a long time to come. The best that can be expected is that a fair average for a term of years will be maintained.

The End of Her Rope.

The fact that Johnny was to compete for a prize for jumping was of little interest to Mrs. Halloran, if, indeed, she even knew it; what interested her was the train of disaster which accompanied his daily existence.

"Johnny's broke the school record," announced Mr. Halloran, triumphantly through the cloud of soapy steam which surrounded Mrs. Halloran and the wash tubs.

"Well, now, you can tend to that job yourself, Mike Halloran," returned his spouse, arms akimbo. "I've mended the front gate and the back gate, three chairs and a table that he's broke, all wid me own hands, but whativer he's broke at school you can look affther, or pay for having it done, and save the money on your pipe—an' that's me last word!"

Berenice's Guess.

The children were playing about the yard where the old black gardener was fixing up the flower beds. As he worked he kept up a running conversation with Berenice, the 3-year-old:

"Lemme see, how many of you chilluns is they—Ellen an' Zulia an' Lulu an' Bereness an' Billy. Five ur um! Foah gal chilluns an' a boy chillun! Well, now Ah's got five lil' chilluns at mah house; What you reckon they all is?"

"What do I reckon they all is?" replied Berenice scornfully, "I reckon they're all little niggers, that's what I reckon."—Houston Post.

Record Sale of Paintings.

The public auction of the Yerkes collection of paintings at New York has broken all American records for high prices, the Turner "Rockets and Blue Lights" bringing $129,000 and the Franz Hals "Portrait of a Lady" going for $137,000. In two days the sale totaled over a million and a half.

"Yalier."

Some soaps are so yellow that no word describes them so well as the homely old expression "yalier." They are made of cheap grease—often rancid—and lots of rosin is put in to give the soap weight. Add to this the strong caustic and you understand why your table linen rots into holes and your white garments come from the laundry with streaks of dirt ironed in them. Use Easy Task soap—the pure, white, guaranteed soap that is an enemy to dirt and a friend to fabrics.

His Summer Resort.

"Bill, where ye goin' to spend the summer?"

"I don't have to go anywheres this summer. I got a job drivin' an ice wagon."

Nothing so good as Russ Bleaching Blue. Delights the laundress. All grocers sell it. Refuse imitations.

Swiss Divorce Methods.

Switzerland has an unusual way of managing her divorce cases. In every town there is a sort of official paper known as the Feuille de Avis, in which one may read daily announcements like this:

"Monsieur and Madame X., who are in instance of divorce, are requested to appear privately before the judge, alone or with their lawyers, in order to come to a reconciliation if possible."

Before the beginning of every divorce case in Switzerland this notice is published and sent out to the parties concerned, leaving them free to attend before the judge or not, as they wish. Sometimes the wife, anxious to state her wrongs before a kindly judge, appears and the husband stays away, sometimes it is the other way, and very often the couple meet.

Although there are no statistics published on the subject, a leading lawyer in Geneva whose specialty is divorce cases said recently that at least 30 per cent of these cases are settled by the advice of the judge at meetings out of court. In fact, Swiss lawyers will not definitely take up a divorce case until it has passed through the reconciliation process.

When one of the couple does not attend this means that the affair is to be fought out, but in any case Swiss divorces are not expensive. The usual cost in a contested case is $200, but sometimes it is as low as $100, while when both parties are agreed the matter can be settled for $10 or $15.

Smiles of The Day

Take It and Welcome.

Organizer of Village Concert (to small farmer, reputed owner of a pianoforte)—Excuse me, Mr. Mangold, but would you be so kind as to lend us your pianoforte for the concert at the schools?"

Small Farmer—Take it, take it! But, mind, I doan't suppose you'll find all the noates in't, for when my missus wants a bit o' wire she allus goes to the old planner.—Tit-Bits.

After Service Easter Sunday.

He (thinking of sermon)—Quite a novel treatment, eh?

She (thinking of the hat in front)—Yes; but too glaringly a bargain, don't you think?—Judge.

Complimentary.

She (to partner claiming first dance)—You are an early bird, Mr. Glossinest.

He (gallantly))—Yes, and by Jove, I've caught the worm.—M. A. P.

A Wonderful Invention.

"Here is something new, madam—permanent hairpins. You cannot lose them."

"How is that possible?"

"They are fastened to the hair. In fact, you buy them along with the hair."

Science Versus Tact.

"Frank, never bring that scientific man to our house again."

"What's the matter?"

"I never saw such impudence! He says the diamonds I wear are merely another form of charcoal; the idea"—Life.

Father's Dinner.

A little boy was sent to a shop by his mother, and, desirous to get away to play, he made all the haste he could. The shop was full of customers when he arrived, but he pushed himself to the front and cried out:

"I say, grocer, will you serve me quick? It's for my father's dinner?"

"Well, what do you want, my little man?" said the grocer, leaving the customer he was serving.

"Two pounds of soft soap and a packet of washing powder," was the quick response.—London Telegraph.

Her Shopping Instinct.

Kate—So Maude broke her engagement with Jack because the doctor said he had a tobacco heart.

Belle—Yes, and I don't blame her. Who wants a husband that's damaged by smoke?—Boston Transcript.

Taking Time Out.

Roebottom was a roofer. One day, as he was lunching, he was heard to give a yell of pain.

"What's the matter, Roebottom?" a carpenter asked.

"I got a nail in my foot," the roofer answered.

"Well, why don't you pull it out?" said the carpenter.

"What! In my dinner hour?" yelled Roebottom, reproachfully.—Philadelphia Record.

A Swan Song, As It Were.

Friend—Why did you "honk" then?

Autoist—I didn't honk. We ran over a goose.

A Dozen Chantecler Hats.

"Mrs. De Spinster has a dozen new chantecler hats!"

"Well, if she put on the whole dozen at once they wouldn't make her look like a spring chicken."—Judge.

Lost.

Husband—I am ruined, and my son's musical career cannot continue. Go to the barber's, Karl, and get your hair cut—Fliegende Blatter.

Wealth.

"He has eight fine looking daughters."

"Gee! And is he as rich in dollars as he is in daughters?"

"Just about. I think he's worth about $8."—Cleveland Leader.

Great.

Manager—I've got a new idea for a melodrama that ought to make a hit.

Writer—What is it?

Manager—The idea is to introduce a cyclone into the first act that will kill all the actors.

The Alternative.

Aseum (after the performance)—I shouldn't think you'd care to take part in amateur theatricals.

Sinnickson (one of the cast)—I don't; but if I didn't I'd probably have to sit in the audience.

Not Always.

"Does your boss always address you by your Christian name?"

"Only when he's feeling good. When he's sore, he calls me the most unChristian names he can lay his tongue to."—Cleveland Leader.

A Bright One.

Mr. Jinks—Every time the baby looks into my face he smiles.

Mrs. Jinks—Well, it may not be exactly polite, but it shows he has a sense of humor.

Hopeless.

"Your store is no good, sir! I asked for lace curtains last week, and I couldn't get 'em."

"Indeed?"

"Yes. And I asked for silk socks yesterday and I couldn't get 'em."

"That's strange."

"And to-day I ask for credit and can't even get that. Is this a regular store, or what?—Cleveland Leader.

Her Clever Motive.

"So you are going to housekeeping as soon as you're married? I thought you had made up your mind to board."

"Yes, but George is equally determined to have a house of our own."

"And so you are going to keep house in order to please George?"

"No. I'm going to keep house so that George will be glad to board."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Cheap Extravagance.

"Say, the amount of capital of that new trust won't fill this head line."

"How much is it?"

"It's $300,000,000."

"Add another cipher."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Silence.

Cynicus—It is impossible for a woman to keep a secret.

Henpeck—I don't know about that. My wife and I were engaged for several weeks before she said anything to me about it.—Tit-Bits.

Her Secret.

Mrs. Green—How do you get your little boy to behave so nicely at table before visitors?

Mrs. Wise—Easily enough. You see, I give him plenty of cake before we sit down—Boston Transcript.

Art.

"How are you getting on as a newspaper artist?"

"Rapidly. They now allow me to draw the crosses showing where the tragedy occurred."—Cleveland Leader.

Unnecessary Advice.

"Governor Hadley says every man should keep a cow."

"Well, judging from the size of our milk bills, I guess I keep a cow and a couple of hired men."—Houston Post.

Foolish.

"Her father says Georgie must be taught to swim."

"How foolish, when everybody is learning to fly."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Losing His Standing.

"Why did you quit coming to Sunday school, James?"

"Aw, I had to—I was losin' me standin' wid de gang."

Not Quite Qualified.

Policeman—Do you have to take care of the dog?

Nurse Girl—No. The missis says I'm too young and inexperienced. I only look after the children.—Life.

Experience Taught Him.

"My borrowing this money of you won't hurt our friendship, will it?"

"No, indeed. I must keep friendly in order to get it back."

Glad He Went.

"There was a thunder of applause when I left the stage."

"Serves you right. You shouldn't stay on so long."

Oh! These Jealous Girls.

Her Mother—Have you told any one that Tom proposed to you?"

Alice—No one but Betty Smith, who thought he was going to propose to her.

How He Raised It.

"That man raises wheat and barley as high as your shoulders."

"A scientific farmer, is he?"

"No. A strong man."—St. Louis Star.

Columbus' Fleet.

The entire fleet of Columbus was worth only $3,000, and the explorer's salary was $300 a year.

Not Her.

The Doctor—Mrs. Murphy, you must be at your husband's side constantly, as you will need to hand him something every little while.

Mrs. Murphy—Niver, doctor! Fur be it from me to hit a man whin he's down!—Puck.

Unkind.

"I think," she said, "I should like to marry an imaginative man."

"Well, said her friend, speaking very sweetly, "what other kind of a man can you possibly expect to marry, if he has a chance to see you in day light?"

A Useful Work.

It was hard work selling books. The volumes, one of which the agent had to carry with him as a sample, were very bulky and heavy, and nobody seemed to want them. But the agent was a persistent fellow, and even the stubborn Mrs. Butts could not send him away unheard.

"We have all the books we can use," she was saying, "and we really can't afford any more reading-matter. Why, I haven't even opened the second volume of that Roman History you sold us last spring. Now, if you were selling one of those adjustable ironing boards——"

"I've got just the thing," said the agent, cheerfully. "There are twelve books in this set, and you can use either one or two or three, and so on up to six, to tilt your board any way you want to. And between whiles, when your iron is heating, you have good literature right at hand."

Thanksgiving.

The first national Thanksgiving proclamations were issued by Congress during the Revolutionary War.

FARM NOTES

Plan for Feed-Box.

The illustration of a feed box is self-explanatory, and with the following list of dimensions should be easy to build: The legs are made from 4x4's 34 inches on the high side, sawing a bevel at one end of 12 inches; the sides are 2x12 inches; the length of the box is 8 feet. The bottom is made by joining seven common floor boards, generally using fence flooring clear of knots as possible. The best way to lay the bottom is to take 16-foot fence boards, laying the two end 2x4 cross pieces 4 inches from the end. Across the center lay two other 8 inches apart, sawing the bottom in two to make the bottoms for two boxes. The 2x4 across the center, which is used for supporting the center of the bottom, should be made of hard wood. Clamps go around this 2x4 and over the top of the box. Use a 16-inch clamp, such as commonly used for building hay racks; bore through the 2x4, place the clamp bottom side up over the side of the box and draw it up tight. The lower edge of the 2x12 used for sides should be planed to a bevel to match the bottom of the box.

For feeding meal it would be well to place a corn crib strip 1x4 inches around the top of the box. This will prevent the wind from blowing the meal out, as it projects over on the inside 2 inches.

Teeth Should Be Examined.

A great many of the troubles of the horse come when the owner thinks he is treating him the best in winter when there is little work and the horse is turned out to pasture, or to an alfalfa stack. There are a number of points to keep in mind when disposing of the horse for the winter, says a Colorado bulletin.

First of these is the condition of his teeth. Remember, if he has been living largely on chop feed, or other grain that requires little mastication, that his teeth may not be in condition to handle the roughage of the pasture or the poor quality of hay which is usually fed to horses that are not working. He may be parrot-mouthed and not able to bite off the grass.

The teeth should by all means be examined by a veterinarian, if the owner is incapable. Rough feed must be well chewed before it can be properly digested.

Reducing the Meat Bill.

In many American families meat is eaten two or three times a day; in such cases the simplest way of reducing the meat bill would very likely be to cut down the amount used, either by serving it less often or by using less at a time. Deficiency of protein need not be feared when one good meat dish a day is served, especially if such nitrogenous materials as eggs, milk, cheese and beans are used instead. In localities where fish can be obtained fresh and cheap, it might well be more frequently substituted for meat for the sake of variety as well as economy. Ingenious cooks have ways of "extending the flavor" of meat; that is, of combining a small quantity with other materials to make a large dish, as in meat pies, stews, and similar dishes.

Properly Braced Corner Post.

The ordinary braces set in line with the wires do not prevent the corner post from leaning. A brace set in the direction that a post would lean, or a stay wire in the opposite direction, are either effective, but both are undesirable. The two posts on each side of and nearest to the corner post should be braced, as shown in the cut. A wire should run from the top of one post to the bottom of the other to tighten the brace, which will throw the strain on five posts instead of one.—C. C. Ormsbee, in Farm and Home.

BRACING FOR THE CORNER POST.

Men and Women.

All men and women hope to be called dangerous before they die.—F. Frankfort Moore.

Every man seeks his ideal woman, but heaven only knows when he finds her—he never does.—Smart Set.

An improvement in a woman's looks generally means a man, either somewhere in the background or very much to the fore.—Mary Gaunt.

Many strings to one's beau do not always tie the matrimonial knot.—Smart Set.

Chickens for Market.

Old and young chickens to be sold for market purposes will bring much more if they are confined in close quarters for a week or more and fed heavily during the time. A part of the well-equipped poultry plant, therefore, should consist of a poultry fattening pen, provided with adequate feeding and watering devices.—Journal of Agriculture.

Is Woman to Be Bald?

Dermatologists, whose field is rapidly widening because of the increasing baldness of women, announce that unless the present style in coiffure and hats is discarded the next generation of city-born women will be almost bald. The skin must breathe. Wire and leather contraptions to pad out the hair, huge masses of false curls, and hats that weigh five or six pounds cause the head to perspire. The pores of the scalp become clogged. The scalp and hair are dirty. The hair loses its vitality, grows sparsely and is brittle, short and faded.

How Much Seed to Sow.

The question of the proper amount of seed to sow is never settled. Two and one-half bushels of average oats, sown broadcast, are not too many on average land, average seasons; and about one-half bushel less when drilled in, is looked upon as about right by most oat growers.

Many good farmers differ, however, on this, many thinking a peck will bring as good or better results. There are varieties of oats with a very large berry which would have to be increased to get the same number of plants to the acre that the very small berry oats would give. Still, as a rule, a large vigorous seed will produce a large vigorous plant and this would need more room than a smaller one. The season and soil make considerable difference, too, with the amount of seed. Pasturing grain with sheep or other light stock, tends to thicken it, also to shorten the straw and to prevent lodging, though it frequently adds to the length of time for ripening. When there is danger of oats lodging, thick seeding tends to prevent it.

A Praiseworthy Example.

Girls of the graduating class of Lynn, Mass., high school deserve commendation for their resolution to appear at the commencement exercises in plain white muslin dresses without laces or frills. Lynn is a factory town. Many of the girls in the graduating class come from humble homes, and extravagant fancy dresses for graduation would entail a burden on slender incomes. Therefore, in order to prevent rivalry and preserve equality to the last minute of school life, the girls decided to appear at commencement in inexpensive gowns of uniform style.

Private schools, patronized by snobdom, are free to cultivate snobbery to the limit. Public schools, paid for by the taxpayers, should not tolerate the least pretense of "superiority" by pupils or attempts to create caste by means of societies. The school girls of Lynn merit praise for their altruism, and the their example is worthy of imitation.—Chicago Journal.

A Novel Insect Catcher.

Only people who have had crops or plants destroyed by insects can appreciate what a pest these little things are. Always excepting, of course, the victims of the voracious mosquito. In the country all sorts of homely devices are used to catch the bugs and kill them, and an Oregon man, who probably had his apple orchard overrun by some destructive species, patented a trap for the pests. A barrel has pieces cut out of the upper portion and is half filled with rotten or bruised apples or some other odoriferous fruit. On top of the barrel is placed a pan partially filled with water, oil or some poisonous liquid. From the apex of a tripod that keeps the basin from falling off the barrel hangs a lantern. In the daytime the insects will be attracted by the odor of the fruit, and in flying up to feast many of them are likely to fly into the water. At night the lantern is lighted and bugs will come from afar to flutter against it and meet their death in the liquid below.

Hints About the Farm.

Refill the salt box in the pasture.

Give the horses a bran mash twice a week.

A good swing stanchion is not uncomfortable to the cow.

Gratifying the appetite adds greatly to the thrift of the flock.

No ups and downs in care and feed, but keeping everlastingly at it.

Set the strawberries in rows four feet apart and two feet in the row.

Avoid extremes in everything.

Money invested in land cannot easily be lost.

If the pump bucket leaks, take it to town with you. The tinner will fix it while you wait.

The plan of hay farming with chemicals has its attractions, especially for the oldish man, who desires to get rid of the care of live stock, and to cut down his labor outgo to the lowest possible amount.

Milk from unhealthy cows is not safe to use and only cows in good health can make profitable use of the food given them. The herd should be inspected at regular intervals by a competent veterinarian.

A garden of an acre, well tended, will produce vegetables enough to supply an ordinary family year in and year out, as well as to feed a flock of fowls whose eggs may be traded for groceries at any country store.

The man who puts the finest products on the market is the one who reaps the bountiful rewards. Be sure your products are in the most acceptable condition before marketing it there is a desire to win new customers.

Each man who is to milk twelve or fifteen cows will need to spend twelve or fifteen minutes in cleaning them. This cleaning is very simple and inexpensive, and yet nine out of every ten farmers scout the idea as preposterous.

During the past year a woman who has a house and lot on the edge of a thriving country town in the South has, besides raising all the vegetables consumed by a family of four, sold $100 worth to the provision dealers in town.

Stop Women And Consider

This Fact—that in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience with women's diseases covers twenty-five years.

The present Mrs. Pinkham, daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, was for years under her direction, and has ever since her decease continued to advise women.

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have immediate assistance, but a natural modesty causes them to shrink from exposing themselves to the questions and probable examinations of even their family physician. Such questioning and examination is unnecessary. Without cost you can consult a woman whose knowledge from actual experience is great.

MRS. PINKHAM'S STANDING INVITATION:

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established this confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Never has she published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which Mrs. Pinkham has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge needed in your case. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Mrs. Pinkham, care of Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

Decorate Your Walls at Small Cost

These Free

We will send you free of cost, a complete color plan for the walls of your home. We will furnish free stencils to help you make your home beautiful.

Alabastine

The Sanitary Wall Coating

comes in all sorts of rich, soft shades of color that enable you to decorate your walls in the same style as the handsome city houses.

Alabastine is a powder made from pure native alabaster, you mix it with clear cold water and apply it with a flat wall brush. Simple directions printed on every package. Anyone can do it. Then when you want to redecorate, just put the new coat over the old. That saves a lot of work, trouble and money.

People do not like kalsomine, as all kalsomine is mixed with glue to make it stick. The glue rots and the kalsomine comes off—on your clothes and on the floor. Alabastine adheres to the wall of its own cementing qualities. It requires no dirty glue, nor paste, as with kalsomine or wall paper. These always attract insects and disease germs.

Congressmen Charles F. Barclay of Pennsylvania, a Cannon Republican, has allowed it to become known that the state of his health will not permit him to continue as a candidate for re-election. This is the nineth "standpatter" whose ill health, due mostly to voting for the Payn-Aldrich tariff revision upward, has necessitated withdrawal from the approaching congressional elections.

Instead of saving any portion of the $300,000,000 which Senator Aldrich asserts is being wasted by the government annually though "obsolete business methods," the Taft adminstration threathens to break all records in the history of the government in the enormous expenditure of money. It looks now as if the appropriations for this session of Congress would exceed the appropriations of the last regular session to the extent of about $20,000,000. This will be a billion dollar session and then some.

During the first ten days of May the government spent $1,619,081.46 more than it took in. (Newspapers that have been stating the new tariff law is a success from the standpoint of producing sufficient revenue to run the government, please copy.

ALL DRUGGISTS

REAL LIVE WASHINGTON GOSSIP

(BY TAVENNER)

Representative government almost—but not quite—prevails in the national House of Representatives.

Although still objectionable as passed by the House, the railroad regulation bill was discussed, amended and improved. And it was all done in the open.

The entire membership of the House for a change, was permitted to vote on the question of rejecting undesirable sections. The improvement of the bill by amendment was also allowed.

Heretofore these privileges have to all practical ends been enjoyed almost exclusively by the representatives of the tariff trusts, the railroads, Wall street and other forms of special privilege which dominate the Republican party through either the control of local politics or colossal campaign contributions.

Had the Cannon machine been working smoothly, the railroad bill would have been prepared by committee in the exact form it would have become a law. That is, a few men would have done the legislating instead of the entire membership of the House. Had Cannonism prevailed, the railroad bill would have been reported from committee under a rule prohibiting the membership of the House from voting for or against amendment. Bad features of the bill could not have been eliminated. The entire measure, jokers and all, would have been forced down the threat of the House just as submitted by "Uncle Joe's" Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which is generously packed with men friendly to railroads.

The improvement of the railroad bill in the House through a coalition of the Democrats and Progressives is a cause for rejoicing. But it does not mean that the people have really wrested control of the national law-making machinery from the special privilege ring. For this reason:

The House is only the lower branch of Congress. The railroad bill will not become a law as passed by the House. The Senates is the dominating branch of Congress, and it is still controlled absolutely by the greedy corporate interests. The Senate will pass a bill containing some of the very features stricken from the measure in the House as being against the welfare of the people. Both the Senate and House bills will then be sent to a conference committee composed of either three or five members of each branch of Congress. As the majority of the conference will be "regular" Republican, specially selected by Aldrich and Cannon, it goes without saying that much of the good work accomplishe by the House Democrats and Progressives will be reversed.

The finale of the railroad bill promises to be the tariff fiasco all over again.

Representative government will have given special privilege a tight race, but in the finish Aldrichism and Cannonism will win by a nose! But why should such a result be considered strange? For what purpose do the railroads make $260,000 contributions to the Republican campaign fund if it is not to control the the Republican party's legislation?

The McCall Campaign Publicity bill has been so amended as to provide for the publication of campaign contribution after election, instead of before and after election. Publicity of contributions after elections is regarded by democrats as something like locking the door of the stable after the horse has been stolen. Senator Burrows of Michigan, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, very kindly explained why the provision for publicity of contributions before election had been stricken from the McCall bill. "If," said Senator Burrows, "we were to give out the list of contributors prior to an election it would mean that unscrupulous newspapers and persons would take advantage of the information thus disclosed and proceed to denounce the candidate on the strength of the character of the contributions made to his campaign." In other words, if the voters were permitted to know who was putting up the money for the candidate's campaign they might defeat him. Could a stronger argument be presented for publicity before election as well as after election? Think it over.

"Immediate statehood for Arizona and New Mexico," another Republican promise, lies neglected and alone in the Senate Committee on Territories. And Congress is about ready to close up shop!

YOU can always buy paint for a less price than Devoe Lead and Zinc: don't do it; save your money. Less price probably means less value; short measure, maybe, or cheap quality. "Cheap" paint takes more gallons than Devoe; and that means more hours' work. The cost of painting is by the gallon; poor paint costs most, because most gallons.

Great Coat and Suit Purchase

A special purchase of over $2000 worth of Redfern Coats, Suits Capes and Jackets at a great concession allows us to offer unrivaled values.

The designers and operators in Redferns are turning their attention to the production of fall models. As far as they are concerned, Spring is over. Fall work is now demanding their attention. But Spring wasn'e really as completely over as they should have liked to have it.

There were a number of spring models still on hand that impeded their progress on fall work. Their room was more valuable than their presence; what they got for them wasn't of nearly so much importance as how soon they got it.

OUR BUYER HAPPENED TO BE IN THE MARKET AT THE "PSYCHOLOGICAL MOMENT" AND SECURED SOME WONDERFUL VALUES.

Half hearted or ordinary reductions didn't interest him a particle; what he was after was EXTRAORDINARY CONCESSIONS, and he got them too. Hence we're ready with the very greatest apparel sale Butler has ever experienced.

YOU WHO HAVEN'T BOUGHT YOUR SPRING WEARABLES CAN COUNT YOURSELF LUCKY INDEED.

WORK THAT TELLS

The Kind Butler Readers Appreciate

Cures that last are cures that tell. To thoroughly know that virtues of a medicine you must investigate the cures and see if they prove permanent. Doan's Kidney Pills stand this test, and plenty of proof exists right here in this locality. People who testified years ago to relief from backache, kidney and urinary disorders, now declare that relief was permanent and the cure perfect. Can any Butler sufferer longer doubt the evidence?

A. A. Rowland, 408 S. Van Buren St., Auburn, Ind., says: "Some four years ago I had occasion to use Doan's Kidney Pills for a severe backache and a lameness through my loins. This remedy gave me prompt relief and I have since taken pleasure in recommending it to other kidney sufferers." (Statement given in April, 1906.)

A PERMANENT EFFECT

On February 3, 1909, Mr. Rowland said: "You may continue the publication of my former statement regarding Doan's Kidney Pills. The relief they brought me has been lasting."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Prolonging Life

While no way has yet been found to make life perpetual, it is a fact that life can be prolonged. Many people die before their time because the organs become clogged and cannot do their work. To keep the body open, active and free from impurities there must be no constipation, dyspepsia, flatulency, liver troubles, etc. If old or young people suffer from these complaints they can find a ready cure with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed and if you want to try it before buying send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1 a bottle. 18-1m

Enthusiasm Performs Wonders

WHEN the score is 1 to 1 in the last half of the ninth—your team at the bat—2 men on bases and no one out, there's something doing right away—you are up in arms yelling—rooting—doing all you can to rattle the pitcher—make him blow up—go ballooning—it's enthusiasm and it often turns the tide of battle from defeat to victory.

This same brand of enthusiasm directed towards Men's Clothes Perfection is pretty apt to turn out for YOU—Clothes that are right—that satisfy you as being right—It's the kind of clothes you want—the kind you get if made by Mrs. George Grund of Auburn and Mrs. L. Wade of Montpelier, spent Monday with Arthur Haley and family.

Patterson-Fletcher Co., Fort Wayne, are selling children's hose at 10c a pair that are as fine as you can buy in any other store for less than 25c. 1t

Mrs. Eugene Oberlin is working in Ina Druhot's place at the Lake Shore Freight Office, during her absence.

Mr. and Mrs. George B. Wilson and Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Miller of Hicksville spent Sunday with D. W. Steward and family.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Patterson and children and Miss Leta Carey of Garrett, spent Sunday with S. G. Stone and wife.

Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Maxwell returned the first of the week from Oregon, and expect to be in Butler for about six weeks.

The Masons held a special meeting in their hall last Monday evening and conferred the third degree work on Frank Eviston.

Miss Lizzie Wickard was called to Adrian, Mich., Saturday, to attend Mrs. John Barber formerly of this place and a sister of J. C. and Wm. Blaker.

A teacher's training class has been organized in the Christian church, Elder I. Konkle being the teacher. This is a biblical course and is open to any one.

The carpenters will begin work on Jacob Stuver's feed barn which is to be erected on the Otis lot next Monday and the building will be completed as quickly as possible.

Mrs. W. P. Reeder and Mrs Ernest Kemery, of Huntington, cousins of Miss Nora Brown, were here to attend the home talent play, Tuesday evening, and stayed over for a short visit.

Now that we have passed safely through the comet's tail, we can settle down and make garden until some unscrupulous metropolitan newspaper writer can hatch out something else.

Some who have grown tired of paddling their own canoe since our last issue: William P. Nuttall, 26, machinist, of Detroit, and Anna Krotke, 24, of Garrett; George A. Smith, 26, fireman, of Garrett, and Pearl Esther Case, 25, of Auburn; Abraham Forney, 59, farmer, of Ashley, and Nancy Jane Zent, 49, of Huntington.

The New Butler Brick and Tile Co., broke ground, last Monday, for a new shed and kiln. Their machinery and engine have arrived and will be unloaded from the cars on the ground, immediately. This promises to be one of the best enterprizes Butler has, as a brick and tile factory in Butler has been a long felt want. Mr. Groscup is a practical man in this business and will undoubtedly be a success. They expect to employ about fifteen steady men when in full operation.

Fully 3,000 people attended the laying of the corner stone for the Eckhart public library at Auburn last Friday. Gov. Marshall was the speaker of the day, although Mayor Culbertson gave a short talk that was highly appreciated. Charles Eckhart has endeared himself in the hearts of the people of Auburn, and he will live in the minds of the people for many scores of years to come. Butler has a citizen who will some day show the people that his heart is in the right place if we can guess correctly.

If nothing else, colleges keep a man from dying rich.

The rumor that Aunt Hetty Green is going to give away a large sum of money still lacks verification.

King Menelik has died, for the eleventh time during the past year. We earnestly hope it may not be fatal.

In 1842 the Chicago papers were voicing mild protests against the large spring bonnets. Millinery, like history, is a repeater.

Two Cincinnati girls have been left $8,000,000 apiece, with instructions to marry whom they please. With that much money they can do it.

An American girl has become engaged to a prince who is heir to an income of $1,000,000 a year. There are new things under the sun.

Governor Stubbs, of Kansas, declares that the tree is man's best friend. No doubt the farmer's hired hand will agree with the governor.

A Frenchman says he can understand the language of chickens. This will be a valuable accomplishment, if he can persuade a fowl to tell its age.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company is about to raise the wages of 175,000 men, but we predict that the butchers and grocers will continue to get it all, just the same.

"The mosquito lays between 200 and 400 eggs every ten days." Yes, if there were any commercial demand for them, the cold storage experts would be retailing them at 45 cents a dozen.

Even though the average wages of workmen in Germany have increased 20 per cent during the past twenty years, they still look small in comparison with the wages of workmen here in the United States.

An estimate of the bureau of statistics at Washington shows that while the number of people in this country has increased 10,000,000 during the past ten years there has been a decrease of 3,000,000 in the number of animals. A good many families must have quit keeping cows.

The superintendent of Chicago's anti-cruelty society says that there are 500,000 homeless cats in the Windy City, and he recommends that they be caught and destroyed by means of charcoal fumes. He adds that since the advent of cement sidewalks and modern flat buildings cats are not needed to catch rats and mice.

King Peter of Servia, who was raised to the throne after the murder of his predecessor, is at last to be received by another European monarch. He has been invited to visit the Czar in St. Petersburg. How much the desire of Russia to strengthen its influence in the Balkans had to do with the invitation to Peter will not be known till the secret history of the Russian foreign policy is written.

Regarded from a purely scientific point of view, the hunting trip of Mr. Roosevelt and his son was one of the most successful ever known. The party secured about five hundred large mammals, the rarest and most important of which are the giant eland, the white rhinoceroses, the bongos and the situtungs, a kind of antelope. Of some of these animals, the Roosevelt specimens are the first to be taken out of the country. The collection also includes many thousands of birds and small mammals, all of which, together with the larger animals, will go to the national museum, the Smithsonian Institution, in Washington.

Major Enver Bey, one of the leaders of the recent revolution in Turkey, is to be rewarded for the part he took in placing the present sultan on the throne. The Turkish ruler has selected a princess of the blood royal, one of his own nieces, as a bride for the man who did so much to end the old regime and send Abdul Hamid into miserable exile in a $5,000,000 palace, where only eleven of his wives were permitted to accompany him. Enver Bey has for some time been a member of the Turkish diplomatic corps in Berlin, and it was there that the glad news of his engagement to the sultan's niece reached him. Prior to the announcement of his engagement, he did not know of the young lady's existence; but he is greatly elated, as well he may be. To become the sultan's nephew must in the nature of things be quite an achievement for any good young Turk. Enver has, moreover, seen a picture of a brother of his future wife and likes his looks, therefore he expects to be very happy. We have admired Enver Bey from the time he began attracting public attention, and we earnestly hope his matrimonial venture may turn out satisfactory in all respects. At the same time his enthusiasm is not readily grasped by the occidental mind. We should think a man of spirit would in choosing a wife want something more tangible than a picture of the lady's brother as a basis for his affection.

It is the commonly accepted belief that the sons of great men rarely equal their sires in point of ability, and especially in the line of ability which distinguished the sire. There are some notable exceptions, as for instance the younger Pitt, and John Quincy Adams. But as a rule we shall find, both as a matter of history and personal observation, that the common opinion is correct. A writer in a current magazine attempts to account for this fact by assuming that the son usually inherits his intellectual traits from his mother, although in physique he is apt to take after his father. The writer cites a lot of instances to show that in the line of royalty it is quite common to see the qualities of a great king handed down to his successors for many generations. This is because that in royal marriages the bride of the heir apparent is carefully selected from among the great families, royal or other. Hence the high strain of blood is maintained in the descent. But among the mass of the people, from which the world usually gets its great geniuses, literary, financial, scientific or professional, marriages are made hap-hazard. A great man is often attracted by a woman far inferior to him intellectually. In the vast majority of cases no attention is paid to mating with a view to transmitting great qualities. A compensation of these hap-hazard marriages is that a very ordinary man sometimes becomes the father of a very great one. This view is fanciful to some extent. It cannot be based upon any accurate statistics. But it gives abundant food for thought. It may be used as an argument for the higher education and culture of women. It gives a hint of the advisability of arranging marriages with prudence and forethought. It may be admitted that love in marriage is an essential, but it will do no harm to season it with judgment and good advice.

TOO MUCH OF A GOOD THING.

Daughter Wanted to Show that Her College Education Was Useful.

Milicent and Cousin Linda were having their first talk when a voice from the stairs interrupted them.

"Milly, dear," it called, "I want the arnica for Sanna's wrist, and you've changed everything round so on the medicine shelves I can't find it!"

"There's an indexed list hanging right on the cupboard door!" Milicent called back, proudly. "Just look in the A's and you'll find it, with the shelf and row."

"Your writing is so scrawly I can't seem to, Milly. I'm afraid you'll have to come," persisted the voice, plaintively.

When Milicent returned the room was empty, but she heard talking in the library beyond. Cousin Linda was there, perched on a stepladder, at the foot of which stood the professor, hair rumpled, brows drawn in an anxious pucker, blinking upward.

"Four small fat volumes in brown leather, title almost erased," he was repeating. "It's very kind of you, my dear. I'm really rather lost since Milly rearranged the books. Of course, it's much better to give them classified and catalogued—only—I could have put my hand on anything I wanted in the dark—no, that isn't it—dear me! dear me! I'm giving a great deal of trouble."

"Father, if you'd only refer to the catalogue," said Milly, reproachfully, from the threshold. The professor started guiltily.

"Of course, my child, of course," he agreed, hastily. "But I keep thinking I see what I want, and when it turns out something different, I seem to catch a glimpse of it somewhere else." He uttered an ejaculation and made a pounce. "Got him! Ah, Pepys, my good friend, you won't elude me next time!" He clasped the beloved volume and carried it to his desk, adding, apologetically, as he sank into the deep chair, "You mustn't think I don't appreciate your work, daughter. I need a little time to get used to it, that's all."

"O Linda—do you think I'm just bothering them?" cried Milicent, tragically, as they came away. "I wanted so to be useful, and prove that college hadn't spoiled me for fitting in—and I seem just to make trouble whenever I try to improve things!"

"Not so bad as that," said Linda. "It's certainly worth while to have the library catalogued. But the medicine cupboard, and the linen closet, and inventorying the china—perhaps that's a little—well, extreme! You'll have to learn to balance method and theory against habit and custom. When you've been at home two years, like me, instead of two little months, it will be easy."

"I do like things done the best way!" said Milicent, with a sigh.

"Yes; but the same best way isn't best for all people and all occasions," replied Linda.

"And they managed to achieve results before I imported my methods," Milly acknowledged.—Youth's Companion.

SIGNATURES AND NAMES.

Fripters Often Experience Difficulty—Method French Critic Adopted.

One would imagine that people who are in the habit of writing letters would not be long in realizing that the word which ought to be the most legible is the signature, names being proper nouns which one cannot reconstruct by induction, says the London Globe. When one has to write for printers or the press one quickly learns the habit of writing all proper names so legibly that there is no excuse for making a mistake. Sarcey, the famous dramatic critic, used to say: "At the Rappel I have a marvelous printer. My writing is very bad, but he finds his way through it with incredible ease. He sees what I intended to say, and he says it, in the terms I use, or in others. But he says it. Sometimes there are literals and sometimes slips of one kind and another, but never nonsense."

"That is to say, that he could almost do your article himself?" said a quizzical friend?

"If I gave him the title, certainly. It's very handy."

"But the proper names?"

"Ah, that's true. But I never put any. I write, 'Comme dit l'autre,' and the printer puts 'Comme dit Montaigne.' And as Montaigne said everything, that does very well."

M. Emile Faguet of the French Academy relates of one of his old professors whom the undergraduates nicknamed "Soleil" that when the students had to pass a written examination he used always to say to them gravely: "Sign your name at the bottom of your paper and put your name alongside your signature."

The old man had learned by experience that a signature—at least that of a Frenchman—is not a name, but a zigzag.

We have noticed that the drunk man who doesn't believe he has Jim Jeffries outclassed, is apt to imagine he is Caruso's only rival.

Roosevelt as Dictator.

Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, in a lengthy editorial, among other things of like tenor, says: "History has agreed that the best of all government is a wise and benevolent despotism. If the government of the United States, under our written constitution of checks and balances, be a failure—as many think it—and if there be needed for its executive head a strong man having the courage to take all the bulls of corruption by the horns, and, regardless of obsolete legal restraints, to shake the life out of them, then, indeed, Theodore Roosevelt would seem one fitted by temperament, education and training for the work!"

We hasten to assure the Louisville editor that there is not the slightest chance that Americans will accept Theodore Roosevelt or any other human being as a dictator—a benevolent despot!

Yesterday (April 19), just one hundred and thirty-five years ago, a handful of American farmers settled that question on the village green at Lexington. There, in resistance to despotism (benevolent or otherwise), they "fired the shot heard 'round the world." That volley was indeed a world event. It has been traveling around the earth ever since, awakening other salvos of liberty until all mankind has caught, or are catching, its spirit. The world of to-day has no more idea of returning to despotism of any hue or flavor than it has of going back to the terrors of witchcraft or the superstitious fury of the crusades!

If the Tory sentiment now cropping out in many unexpected places should eventually become a dominant idea in the United States, impelling the people to repudiate the ideas of the fathers and go hunting for a master, it is not likely that they would select Roosevelt for the position.

Colonel Roosevelt has no characteristics which would place him in the category of benevolent despots. He has earned no reputation for "the courage to take all the bulls of corruption by the horns."

On the contrary, Theodore Roosevelt was in the President's chair seven years, and yet precisely during those seven years the predatory trusts made their most pronounced advances. If not aggressive, he was at least always demonstrative and had enormous influence with his party. Yet, somehow his party, during his administration in and out of Congress, gave the Big Interests such service as was never given before!

No President ever made so many changes in his cabinet; yet, strangely enough, in not one instance did he select any person with a record for anti-monopoly reform. On the contrary, the most distinguished friends, agents and attorneys of the "bulls of corruption" were invited to become Roosevelt's official advisers. John Hay, Elihu Root, Philander C. Knox, William H. Moody, Paul Morton, Henry C. Payne, Charles J. Bonaparte, Lyman J. Gage, C. B. Cortelyou were all eminent as the loyal friends of the trusts, and they were the lieutenants and cabinet confidants of President Roosevelt.

Some way, notwithstanding Roosevelt's courage and disposition to seize the horns of the "bulls of corruption," he did not seem to provoke any strong antagonisms among them. Morgan was and is his devoted friend, and "Dear Harriman" was accorded a liberty seldom, if ever, granted an unofficial citizen—the privilege of bluepenciling the message of a President!

Under his administration the Northern Pacific merger case evaporated into nothingness; the dressed beef combine was eased off with a mere injunction which would not take effect; the Santa Fe rebate cases went to the dump, the President himself giving Paul Morton, the chief railroad official, a certificate of innocency; and, as a climax to it all, in the midst of the last financial panic, Roosevelt, by direct and expressed interference, gave J. P. Morgan liberty to further centralize the steel trust by acquiring the property of its only possible competitor—the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company!

It is true that President Roosevelt's conservation policy seemed in a small way to demonstrate an anti-monopoly purpose, but evidence recently taken in the Pinchot matter shows that all through Roosevelt's last years as executive the Cunningham scheme to seize the Alaska coal fields went forward unembarrassed, except by the volunteer efforts of small officials, and that during the last year of his administration the Morgan-Guggenheim clique were heavy contributors to the Republican campaign fund! The people of the United States are not ready for a dictator—nor such a dictator!—Chicago Examiner.

At Last.

The announcement that Aldrich of Rhode Island and Hale of Maine are to retire from the Senate at the close of their present terms is welcome news.

Aldrich, by his subservience to the money powers, has for years been a disgrace to public life. Hale, while not as prominent as his Rhode Island colleague, has been his faithful aid. Men familiar with the inner life of Washington are well aware that he has repeatedly disgraced his high office.

The ultimate discrediting of Aldrich and Hale was inevitable. Their own disgraceful acts insured it.

Had they begun thirty years ago to serve the people, their names to-day would be honored household words. But they steadfastly disregarded their obligations, and always hastened to do the bidding of the tariff barons of New England and the money kings of Wall street.

To-day, old and gray, worn out in the service of their masters, Aldrich and Hale retire in disgrace, spurned by the people, reaping the bitter reward of their own deliberate misdeeds.

Hale, cowering before the wrath of his own people in Maine, realizes that his defeat is certain, and refuses to face his disgraceful record in a campaign.

Aldrich, high priest of standpatism, is hated from ocean to ocean. Republican leaders regard him as a handicap too heavy to risk. As a forlorn hope they are casting him overboard—a concession to the voice of the people.

The retirement of these two men in disgrace is a victory for the people, but it can not avert the storm. The Senate contains other men as disgraceful as Aldrich and Hale. If they do not retire voluntarily they will be retired forcibly when the voters come to pass upon their claims to be returned to the Senate.—Chicago Journal.

Well Done, Rochester.

The Thirty-second District of New York, as a protest against the Aldrich-Taft tariff and Republican grafters, converted a Republican surplus of 10,167 votes into a Democratic majority of 6,500.

The Republican candidate, George W. Aldridge, is the party boss of Rochester, and was supported by a powerful local organization and the utmost endeavors of the Taft administration. His opponent, James S. Havens, is an old-line Democrat, and made a rousing single-handed campaign, attacking the Aldrich-Taft tariff.

Mr. Havens' victory is due to the desire of Rochester workingmen to repudiate the tariff and rebuke the insolent bossism under which Monroe county has suffered for years. It marks the downfall of Aldridge and the disruption of the Republican organization he has controlled.

The specious oratory of Republican spellbinders could not explain the high cost of living, or excuse the grafters at Albany. Rochester voters thought for themselves, and voted for honest tariff revision as against the Aldrich-Taft trickery, and for decent Democracy instead of grafting Republican bossism.

Massachusetts has spoken. The Republican stronghold of New York has spoken. The thunder of their protest against tariff iniquity rolls out across the West, where the whole populace cries out in indignation.

Hale and Aldrich have read aright the signs of storm. Others of their gilded circle will also hear and heed, fleeing from the wrath to come.

No man who voted for the Aldrich-Taft tariff can honestly claim to be sure of re-election. The Rochester vote shows how the public is aroused, and indicates what may be expected by every Congressman who betrayed the people into the hands of the tariff barons at the behest of Aldrich.

Well done, Havens. Well done, Rochester.—Chicago Journal.

The Trust Cases.

Viewed solely from the standpoint of abstract principle involved, the action taken by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Standard Oil and American Tobacco Company cases would necessarily be regarded as unfortunate. Theoretically nothing is more desirable than an early and conclusive determination of the important legal questions at issue in these cases.

Notwithstanding the serious need for an authoritative declaration of the law applicable to the business practices that were called in question when the prosecutions were instituted against these two great corporations, it is quite probable there was a general feeling of relief in business circles throughout the country when it became known yesterday that the Supreme Court had ordered reargument of both cases. The relief grew from realization that another hearing means delay and so postpones the ultimate shock that is sure to come with a final decision affirming the action of the trial courts. This is the natural view of the average business man.

That combinations which restrain the freedom of trade and throttle competition should be prohibited by law is candidly conceded by many who at the same time dread the temporarily depressing influence they fear will follow enforcement of the governmental policy they know to be right as a pure matter of principle. The same feeling always stirs resistance to tariff revision. In some measure it brings opposition to any radical change in the existing business order.

It so happens that the disquietude that paralyzed the financial and mercantile business of the country in the closing months of 1907 is still something more than a memory. Indeed, it is an open secret that the great jobbing centers of the country have found trade distinctly sluggish, if not exactly inert, during the last thirty or forty days. Relief that the disciplining and reorganizing of two great industrial combinations is not to come just yet was not unnaturally, therefore, the most immediate effect of the Supreme Court action in postponing decision in the trust cases. Whether delay will bring the business interests to any different mood remains to be developed.—St. Louis Republic.

Civil War Stories

Gave the Organ a Bath.

George W. Perkins, one of J. Pierpont Morgan's partners, has repaired a curious bit of damage to the Episcopal church at Milledgeville, Ga., done by Sherman's soldiers more than forty-five years ago, during the historic march from Atlanta to the sea.

When Sherman and his huge army reached this quaint old town, then the capital of Georgia, they remained here some time. Milledgeville, in antebellum and war times, was one of the most important cities of the State. Many of the wealthiest families lived here; there was an abundance of fine provender for soldiers and horses and appliances for repairing damage to his army's equipment which were taken advantage of by Sherman.

His soldiers camped everywhere. One regiment took the Episcopal church as its home, the church being located in a large park close to the old capitol building. Sherman had many humorists in his army, who did strange things in Milledgeville, but the men of the regiment housed in the Episcopal church outdid their rivals when they poured many gallons of molasses down the pipes of the church organ.

That organ still does service in the Episcopal church, the Baltimore Sun says, and the molasses bath given it in wartimes has stuck to it ever since, notwithstanding years of pious effort by generations of good Episcopalians to rid it of the Sherman contribution. Twice a day on Sunday, morning and evening, and at funerals and other solemn occasions, the old organ wheezes pitifully and strangely.

The present organist is Mrs. Ruby Bland, a finished musician. Her husband, Marshall Bland, is the local representative of the New York Life Insurance Company. Twelve years ago, when George W. Perkins was the most conspicuous figure in the New York Life, a daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Bland. The Nylic organization, created by Mr. Perkins, was then at its height, and the girl baby was christened Nylic.

About a year ago a new rector came to the Episcopal church, Rev. Mr. Scarrett of Boston. He and his several daughters are all music lovers, and the poor old molasses-treated organ in the Episcopal church upset their nerves twice every Sunday. The Scarretts delicately inquired as to the cause of the organ's queer disability, and because of the rector's New England origin, hid the truth from him, not wishing to seemingly stigmatize anything northern, but finally a boy blurted out the truth, saying:

"The Yankees poured molasses down the pipes when that dog-gone old Sherman was here."

Steps to get a new organ were immediately taken. Since war time Milledgeville has never been overburdened with money, and the purchase of a new organ was a serious undertaking for the parishioners of Mr. Scarrett's church, even with cotton bringing 15 cents. Immediately schemes were hatched to raise money—societies and committees were organized and the dollars began to dribble in slowly when the 12-year-old brain of Nylic Bland worked out a solution of the problem to her own great surprise. She had heard her father speak of George W. Perkins, so she sat down and in school girl fashion wrote him an artless letter asking him to give something toward the purchase of the new organ. If Mr. Perkins had sent 5 or even $1 Nylic would have been overjoyed, but instead the little girl received this telegram:

"Buy the organ and send the bill to me. GEO. W. PERKINS."

A committee was at once appointed to buy the organ and the momentous purchase has just been made. The organ selected cost $2,100. Some of the committee were afraid Mr. Perkins could not afford to give away such a large sum of money and would not ratify the purchase until he was communicated with and politicly asked if he were willing to have such a fine organ purchased. Mr. Perkins' answer removed the last obstacle and in a few Sundays the poor old organ with its molasses-obstructed pipes will wheeze in the Episcopal church for the last time.

A Pair of Captured Shoes.

"The old army shoe," said a slender dark-haired man, "was a great institution. I have a pair at home that I have preserved, not as momentos of any long march, but as landmarks in a venturous life. It was a custom among the poorly shod Confederate troops to remove, after a battle, the shoes from the dead Union soldiers. This was not done in any spirit of vandalism or heartlessness. The shoes were taken off to supply men who had much marching to do in inclement weather. We simply changed old, worn out shoes for good ones worn by those who fell in battle. On one occasion I took a pair of nicely polished No. 6's from the body of a man who must have been in life a model soldier. I had worn these shoes with great comfort through the four or five remaining days of activity incident to the battle before I had an opportunity to examine them carefully. When we were again in permanent camp and were allowed to remove our cartridge boxes and shoes at night, I made a startling discovery, or rather I was greatly startled by a discovery that I made one morning as I took up the shoes to put them on. On the under side of the flap or tongue, written in a clear, round hand, was my own name. I was confident that I had never written it there, but there on both shoes were my initials and my family name, and I had taken those shoes four days before from the feet of a man killed in battle. The inference was I had stolen the shoes from a man related to me in some way. I could not put them on. I walked in my stocking feet to the commissary department, secured a pair of new shoes, and I have the other shoes yet. The affair troubled me for a long time. I had no opportunity for making satisfactory inquiry in regard to the man who bore my name, but in due time I did learn that there was no family relationship whatever. He had come to this country from England and had been in this country only a few months when the war broke out. He enlisted through a spirit of adventure and I was the means of giving his relatives definite information as to his fate. The only evidence I had bearing on points in which they were interested was a pair of old army shoes."—Inter Ocean.

Who Began Battle of Gettysburg?

At a reunion of the Second Wisconsin regiment at Madison, Wis., Gen. Fairchild (formerly colonel of the Second) was asked who began the battle of Gettysburg. He replied: "My regiment commenced firing first, and I know it as thoroughly as I know I am here this moment, surrounded by some of my comrades of that hour. We were in the advance of our brigade and had just gone over the crest of a ridge, when the enemy opened up on us. It was a death-swoop, 30 per cent of our boys falling. I know I was as calm as I am this moment, and recollect perfectly that that volley and our immediate reply constituted the first round of battle. A few moments after, and just before I fell, wounded, I heard the second firing on our right—I think in an open field just beyond the woods. These circumstances are as clearly fixed in my mind as anything that happened around me. A few months ago my recollection of it was undisputably proved to be correct upon consulting an official document. Major John Mansfield of my regiment, who succeeded me as colonel, the next fall, it seems had written out an official report of the battle, in pencil a few days after it was over. This report, which had never been forwarded to headquarters, became mixed up with his other papers until discovered recently, when he sent it to me. It is the written contemporaneous official statement of an eye-witness and proves beyond all peradventure all that I now or have always maintained. This report has been transmitted by me to headquarters in Washington, and will appear in the official publications in due time. Mansfield is now a Brigadier General in the regular army, and is stationed in California; he was a lawyer in Portage before the war. It is the Fifty-sixth Pennsylvania that has been claiming the honor due the Second Wisconsin; but Colonel Hoffman, an admirable gentleman, by the way, has no documents to prove his case, and simply rests it on his belief; but he is clearly mistaken. He may and probably did commence action very soon after our brigade, for there was then fighting all along the line, but not before. There is a New York regiment making a similar claim, I hear, but there is not even the shadow of a substance to it." This testimony, given by Gen. Fairchild, was corroborated by Generals Bragg, Richardson and others present, who regarded the facts in the case as well established as those connected with any event in the war.

How Gen. Grant Relieved a Sentinel

It was a drizzly day only a short time before Gen. Grant drove the enemy from Petersburg and moved toward Five Forks and Appomattox. A chill northeast gale made overcoats comfortable even here, and more men who could wore them than left them off.

A sentinel down toward the river near some storehouses shivered as he strode to and fro on his post, his gun lock under his arm to keep off the wet. He was a new recruit from "down East," sent out to help fill the ranks of a regiment which had lost one-half its men since that campaign began.

He saw a man in a regulation overcoat and a slouch hat, but with the steady carriage of a veteran, passing along a few rods away.

"Say, friend, have you any terbacco in yer clothes?" The passerby was smoking a cigar.

"No," he replied: "I can give you a cigar, but I don't chew."

"And I don't smoke, but I'm starvin' for a chaw," replied the sentinel, as he looked over to the other wistfully. "An' I chaw an' dasn't smoke on post. Say, couldn't you stand post for me jest a minute till I run over to the sutler's yonder?"

"I could," said the other, with a grim smile on his face, and then he added, "I will. Give me your gun and orders."

"There isn't no orders, only to hail anybody going a nigh them stores, and to stop 'em as has no business there."

So the sentinel, relieved on his post, hurried to the sutler's for the desired tobacco. Returning promptly, he took his gun and quaintly said:

"If I git a chance, I'll do as much for you, friend. What regiment be you in?"

"None; I command the whole army. My name is Grant," was the quiet reply, as a great cloud of smoke came out of the mouth of the speaker.

"Great Jerusalem!" gasped the sentinel; "I've been relieved by Gen. Grant himself, and didn't know him."

How could he, when not a mark of the general's rank was in sight, and the poor fellow yet too green in service to know what a fault he had committed in yielding post and gun to any but his regular relief.—E. Z. C. Judson ("Ned Buntline").

CHAPTER XXI.

Great was the astonishment throughout the neighborhood when it became known that Dr. Etwald, the clever physician, of Deanminster, had been arrested on the doubit charge of murder and theft of a dead body. Major Jen worked hard to procure evidence against the prisoner, and David Sarby worked just as hard to obtain material for the defence. The attitude taken up by the young barrister astonished everyone, and was universally condemned.

After that memorable interview in the library, when Etwald was accused and arrested, Arkel took away his prisoner in custody by virtue of the warrant and left Major Jen alone with the counsel for the defence. When the sound of Etwald's carriage had died away in the distance, Jen, who had hitherto kept silence, raised his head and looked at David.

"Will, sir!" he said, in an icy tone to his adopted son. "I am waiting for you to explain this very extraordinary conduct."

"Major Jen, I have no explanation to give you."

"What!" cried his guardian, rising. "Do you dare to sit there and tell me that you are a traitor, a coward, an ungrateful man? What will every one say, when they learn that you intend to defend Etwald?"

"They will say almost as cruel things as you have said," returned David, still composed. "But I do not care for the opinion of the public. I act according to the dictates of my own conscience. I have an excellent excuse."

"What is it, if I may be so bold as to ask?"

"I refuse to tell you at present."

"Indeed, and am I ever to learn the reason of your extraordinary behavior?"

"Yes, Major. You shall learn my reason at—the trial. I shall explain it when I make my speech for the defence."

"David, there is something very extraordinary in your behavior, and you refuse to give me your reasons therefor. If I wait until the trial, will you explain?"

"Yes. I have already told you so. In my speech for the defence you will be fully satisfied that I have good cause to act as I am doing."

"Very good," replied Jen, calmly. "Then I shall say nothing to anyone about your very curious behavior. I shall work hard to secure the condemnation of this scoundrel. You can do your best to save him. But against you, or for you, I shall not open my mouth. At the trial I shall expect an explanation."

"You shall have it."

"But," added Jen, "as until that explanation we are enemies—although not openly so—I shall require you to leave my house."

"I expected that you would do so," returned David, bowing his head. "Indeed, you can act in no other way. To-day I shall take lodgings in Deanminster and wait for the trial. I shall defend Etwald to the best of my ability; and then you can decide whether I am fit to re-enter this house."

Arkel had sought out as witnesses against Etwald seven persons. Firstly, Mrs. Dallas, who was to prove that she was hypnotized frequently by Dido. Secondly, Isabella, who was to depose that before the murder her mother had been sent by Dido to "Ashantee" to steal the devil-stick, which under the influence of hypnotism. Thirdly, Batterson, who was to give evidence that he had found the devil-stick within the grounds of Mrs. Dallas. Fourthly, Meg, who was to prove the offer of Batterson to sell her the stick. Fifthly, Major Jen, who could explain the engagement of the dead man to Miss Dallas, and the rivalry of his assassin. Sixthly, Jaggard, whose evidence would tend to show that Dido had drugged him for the purpose of stealing the body. And seventhly, the most important witness of all, Dido, who was to depose to the manufacture of the poison, the re-filling of the devil-stick, and the giving of it to Dr. Etwald, so that he might perpetrate the crime. With these seven witnesses Jen did not see how Etwald could escape the gallows.

"Are you sure that all these people will speak out?" asked the Major of Arkel when the list was submitted to him.

"I am certain of all save one," replied Arkel, in a dissatisfied tone, "and the worst of it is that Dido is the one."

"Does she refuse to give evidence against Etwald?"

"I should think so. Simply because he is the holder of the Voodoo Stone. The only change of getting the negress to confess the whole truth is for either you or I to gain possession of that stone."

"Where is it?"

"Etwald carries it on his watch chain. I saw him the other day in prison, and he showed it to me. A common little black stone it is, but Dido would kill him with pleasure to get it."

"Kill Etwald!" ejaculated Jen. Then, after a pause, he added: "I believe you are right, Arkel, for it is not the man himself she cares about, but the stone. However, I'll see Isabella and make her persuade Dido to speak against Etwald."

The Major went at once to "The Wigwam," but, notwithstanding all his eloquence, in spite of the tears and implorings of Isabella, the negress positively declined to say a word against the Great Master.

"While dat big man hab de Voodoo Stone, I do nothin'—nothin'," she said. And from this obstinate position they all failed to move her.

"Why don't you get the Voodoo Stone yourself, if you adore it so much?" cried Mrs. Dallas, exasperated by this obstinacy.

"Ah, if I hab dat Voodoo Stone, I be great; great—de queen ob the debbles. But he no let it go!"

"Go and see Dr. Etwald, and tell him you will give evidence against him unless he gives you the stone."

This suggestion came from Isabella, but of it Dido took no notice. Without a word to mother or daughter, who were both in tears, she left the room. In the afternoon she was nowhere to be found, and both Mrs. Dallas and Isabella came to the conclusion that she had fled to avoid being forced into giving incriminating evidence. They fell into one another's arms, and were beside themselves with terror. All the evil done by Dido and Etwald seemed likely to fall upon their innocent heads.

"Still, there is hope," said Isabella. "We will speak to Major Jen, and ask him to send the police after this wretched woman."

This opinion was at once acted upon, and a messenger was sent to "Ashantee;" but Major Jen was from home, and it was not till 6 o'clock that he presented himself at "The Wigwam" and heard the story of Dido's flight.

"But she can't be very far away," said Jen, hopefully. "I saw her in Deanminster, and thought she had gone there with a message from you. But even if we had forced her into court, she would not have given evidence against the holder of the Voodoo Stone."

"Dat so!" said a hoarse voice at the door.

The three people turned, and saw Dido, with an expression of triumph on her dark face, enter the room.

"Dido!" cried Isabella. "You did not run away?"

"No, missy. I tell de truth against dat man."

"But the Voodoo Stone," said Jen, wondering what she meant.

Dido opened her clenched fist. The Voodoo Stone lay in the palm of her hand.

How she became possessed of the Voodoo Stone, Dido refused to say. Jen had learned from Inspector Arkel that Etwald wore the talisman on his watch-chain, and he wondered in what fashion Dido had contrived to penetrate into the prison and to obtain it from the doctor. The whole result of the trial depended upon the transfer of the stone. If Etwald kept it, Dido would not dare to give evidence against him, and so, in the absence of incriminating details, he would go free. As it was, the stone was now in the possession of Dido, and for some reason, which Jen was unable to fathom, she was quite content to betray her share in the plot. By changing hands the Voodoo Stone had transformed Dido into a traitress.

However, as the advantage derived from the transfer was all on the side of the prosecution, Jen did not think it wise to inquire too closely into the means which Dido had employed to regain the talisman. He saw nothing of David, who pointedly kept out of his way. He made no inquiries of Dido, and simply informed the Inspector that the negress was ready to explain Etwald's secrets, without telling him why she was willing to do so.

When the trial came on, and after the evidence had been given, everyone, without exception, looked upon the prisoner as guilty, and they considered it futile when David Sarby rose to deliver his speech for the defence. The young man was even paler than usual, and when he rose laid down the devil-stick, at which he had been looking. When on his feet he glanced round the court and caught the gaze of Isabella, who was staring eagerly at him. Then he turned to his client. Dr. Etwald smiled coldly on his counsel. David shuddered, and picking up the devil-stick, spoke sharply and to the point.

"My lord, and gentlemen of the jury—You have heard the evidence, which makes out that my client is guilty. That evidence is wrong, as can be proved by one witness. I am the witness. In my rooms there is lying a confession, signed and witnessed, which sets forth that I am the guilty person. It was I, not Etwald, who murdered Maurice Aylmer. Yes. I was in love with Miss Dallas, and therefore was jealous of Maurice. I knew that Dido possessed the devil-stick—and I bribed her to give it to me. I pretended to go to the city on the night of the murder, but, instead of doing so, I remained in the grounds of Mrs. Dallas, where I obtained the devil-stick from Dido. I saw Maurice meet with Miss Dallas. I saw them kiss and part. Inflamed by jealousy, I rushed after him and met him on the road. He turned in surprise, and flung out his arms to keep me off. The devil-stick, with its poison-fang protruding, was in my grasp, and in throwing out his arm I wounded him in the palm of the hand, thus——"

David took the devil-stick firmly in his grasp and compressed the handle. At once the iron tongue, with its drop of venom, appeared. With the sharp point he made an irregular wound on the palm of his hand, and cast the devil-stick on the table before him. A moment afterwards, amid the silent horror of the crowded court, he fell down—dead.

CHAPTER XXII.

Naturally, the tragic end of the counsel for the defence created a great sensation. The trial was brought to an abrupt conclusion, the court was cleared, and the body of the dead man taken to the residence of Major Jen. In his rooms at Deanminster was found the confession signed by him, and which was substantially the same as that which he had made in court. At once Dr. Etwald was set at liberty on the charge of murder.

Whereupon he returned to his house as though nothing had happened. Mrs. Dallas and Isabella came back to "The Wigwam," but without Dido. On the day when the trial terminated in so tragic a manner the negress disappeared, and with her the famous Voodoo Stone.

"I wish I could have caught her," said Arkel to Major Jen. "She committed perjury in order to get Dr. Etwald hanged, and she ought to have been punished for her wickedness. It has been a terrible affair, Major."

Jen, who was now looking old and broken down, agreed with a sad shake of his grey head.

"My poor lads," said he, in a voice full of pathos. "First one and then the other—to lose them both in this awful fashion."

"What!" cried Arkel, in surprise. "Do you pity Mr. Sarby?"

"Why not?" answered the Major, quietly. "To my mind he needs more pity that poor Maurice. The lad was driven mad by jealousy and he was worked on by Dido to commit the crime. The cause of all these troubles, Mr. Inspector, is not Dr. Etwald, but that black witch. I wish she could be caught."

Dido was never caught. She was too clever to give the police a chance of laying hands on her. Like a stone cast into a wide ocean she disappeared from Deanminster, and, possessed of the Voodoo Stone, possibly took her way to her native Ashantee, there to become the high priestess in the horrible fetish-worship of Africa.

For the next two days Major Jen stayed in the house and watched over the corpse of David. The whole scene was but a repetition of that which had taken place when Maurice had died. Both young men had perished from the effects of the infernal African poison. Both had perished in the bloom of youth; and on the right hand of each was the fatal wound which had corrupted the blood. But the corpse of David was here. The corpse of Maurice, where? Only Dr. Etwald could answer the question, and he, released on the charge of murder, was now out on bail for the theft of the corpse.

While the Major was wondering what would be the outcome of all the terrible events which had filled the last few weeks, Jaggard entered the library, and announced that Mrs. Dallas and her daughter wishes to see him. Although he was unwilling to speak to those who had caused these troubles, Jen had no reasonable grounds for refusing an interview. Therefore he gave orders that the ladies should be shown into the drawing-room. When he repaired thither, however, he found to his surprise that Mrs. Dallas only was waiting for him.

"I could not get Isabella further than the door of your house!" exclaimed Mrs. Dallas, who was in deep mourning, whether for Maurice or David, or for the loss of Dido, it is impossible to say.

"Why did she not come in?" asked Jen, coldly, for he did not feel very amiably disposed towards the widow.

"I don't know. She is a strange girl, Major, and the events of the last few weeks have shaken her nerves."

"They have shaken mine," retorted Jen, grimly. "But we need not discuss these things, Mrs. Dallas. May I ask why you have paid me this visit?"

"To tell you that we are going away. Back to Barbadoes," replied Mrs. Dallas, with a sigh. "Yes, Major, after what has taken place here, I can stay no longer in America. I shall sell my house and leave for the West Indies with my daughter within the month.

"I think it is the best thing you can do," said Jen, brusquely.

GENTLEMEN OF OLD SCHOOL.

Some Observations About a Type Existing a Generation Ago.

Not very long ago there was a dapper old gentleman of 90-odd years who, having published in his youth a famous technical book that remains in wide demand even to this day, used to call frequently at his publishers, on matters of business, Harper's Weekly says. Although his face expressed an almost mummified effect of great age and his carriage was a little jerky in the nature of its spryness, he was, nevertheless, clad upon these occasions in the latest fashion of a beau about town. His clothes were not plain. One recalls their effect of having a pattern—was it an invisible check or plaid?—his trousers were creased and generally light in hue; his neckties were not those of a man of 90-odd and over his trim, pointed shoes he wore light tan gaiters. The crowning glory of his garb—like a brave wild flower glowing upon an ancient ruin—was the carnation which was never absent from the lapel of his coat, except when he presented it with a low bow to some fair lady. A gallant gentleman, who declined to surrender to age and was only conquered by death because of that iron necessity of our human fate.

The society of which he was a product has passed. Then men of his day regarded women as the fair sex, with all which the words imply; they cherished them, yet as something not too good for human nature's daily food, and they even wrote verses to them involving such phrases as "heart's fragrance," "modest eyes," "bashful sweetness" and the like, and in such a chirography! Theirs was not the handwriting of our contemporary "business men"; it had an almost feminine delicacy and a precision which is now supplied only by the typewriting machine.

There were many specimens of this verse and this chirography of 1828 in an old book which came lately by chance into the hands of the Weekly—one of those autograph albums bound in red leather and tastefully tooled in gilt, which were owned by the young ladies of the period, and within whose pages were embalmed the sentimental addresses of their admirers.

Openly chivalrous in tone, tender in spirit, what has become of the young men of 1828 who were not ashamed to write a copy of verses in their ladies' albums? Contemporaneous gentlemen, armored in the goggles and gauntlets of the motor car, might be inclined to sneer at them, but the record of men's achievement in the work of the world was at least as impressive in 1828 as it is now. Autre temps, autre moeurs, but the world moves on more or less the same.

Her Hired Help.

At Cumberland, Md., the colored servants, as a rule, go to their own homes at night. The cook in the family of the Episcopalian clergyman not only does this, but of late has frequently arrived at the rectory too late to cook breakfast. Hence her mistress lately told her that for each breakfast missed there would be a reduction in her wages. Dinah passively assented to this, but next day the mistress heard the maid next door say to her:

"'Pears to me you get to work mighty late."

"I get to work when I gets ready," was the reply.

"How do you manage 'bout the brekfus?"

"Oh, I pays the missus to cook de brekfus."—Harper's Magazine.

Proved His Innocence.

"He proved his client's innocence of burglary by producing an alibi."

"Then the prisoner didn't commit the theft as charged?"

"No. His lawyer established the fact that the accused was in jail for highway robbery at the time the affair happened."—St. Louis Star.

A Sharp Dog.

WOMEN AND FASHION

"That Middle Bureau Drawer."

High up in an old musty attic,
Deserted for ages or more,
Tripped a gay young bride (with her husband),
To explore the ancient lore.
The old, old books, from their sheepskins
Peered at them, as they passed,
While she viewed herself in a mirror,
Before which many brides danced.
'Way back in a corner, standing alone,
Thickly covered o'er with dust,
Stodd an old mahogany bureau,
Smelling of rose leaves and must.
Toward this the bride now wended her way,
And said, "My, what a pity!
We'll have this all done over, dear—
We'll send it to the city."
She opened the upper drawers, in turn,
And exclaimed, at the silks, and laces,
But when into the middle one she looked
A change came o'er their faces.
There were dainty shoes of every hue,
And tiny stockings of lace.
Little bibs and sacques and dresses,
Causing tears to roll down her face.
For on each and every article
She found the name of the little one
Who last wore the treasured dainty.
And from a mother's arms had flown.
In the heart of each fond mother
There's a middle bureau drawer,
Where reposes dainty treasures,
Some of them worn and tore,
Little shoes, all soiled and worn at the side;
Little bibs, all stained and wet.
But there aren't any treasures like them,
At least I've not found them yet.

Save for a Rainy Day.

There is one important thing for the wage earning girl to bear in mind, and that is the necessity of putting aside a certain part of her income in view of a possible "rainy day." The more easily you earn money the harder it is to save it, but if you have to work hard for it, you appreciate its value and the folly of wasting it.

A good many girls are earning their living simply because they want more spending money than their parents can afford to give them. They are the girls who find it hardest to save part of their earnings, for the reason that there is no real necessity of their working. Others are working because they prefer to be independent and their services are not needed at home, and still others—and these are the ones who work the hardest of all—are working through absolute necessity. These last are the girls who must appreciate the value of money and the necessity of providing for emergencies. It is hard to save when there are so many pleasures to be had for the spending of a little money and so many pretty things in the shop to tempt one.

But it would be harder still if you were out of work and ill and had to depend upon the charity of relatives or friends. You must remember that you will not always be young and strong and able to take care of yourself. You may marry and have some strong right arm to take care of you, but you also may not, and it is for that state of affairs that you must provide while you are still able to earn a good living.

Another important thing to remember is that you must not lend your money to any one. You cannot afford to run the risk of its never being repaid. No woman can afford to be sentimental when it comes to a question of lending her money. Where it is a matter of helping her own family it is quite another matter; she must be guided by the need of the case and her own judgment. Men are not sentimental about money matters, so why should women be?

Nowadays there are so many avenues of self-support open to woman that she is practically independent, and it is making her self-reliant and capable. But you will never be good business women until you learn the vital importance of saving part of your earnings.

Start a bank account, even if you have to begin with 5 cents. Buy a little bank and put all your spare pennies into it, and some fine day you will find that you have $5, and you can then open a real bank account.

Polonaise Costume.

A useful little costume for late spring and summer is shown in this one of white and dark blue foulard which has a slightly trained plain skirt over which falls a belted polonaise of the same material, widely banded with dark blue satin, overlapping at the pointed sides and apparently fastened with tiny buttons covered with blue satin. The fullness at the waist line is confined by a girdle of the satin, and the seamless shoulders elongate into elbow sleeves finished with satin cuffs and are trimmed with a frilling of embroidered muslin similar to that finishing the low-cut neck. White silk gloves embroidered with dark blue and a blue hat trimmed with white lace and plumes repeat the color scheme of the frock.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Collar and cuff sets are once more in favor.

Three-piece suits of foulard are an extreme novelty.

Narrow skirts increase in favor, although plaited skirts are popular.

Lace-striped dimities made over colored slips or petticoats are quite new. The stripes are sufficiently wide to permit the underneath color to show through. Such dresses need little or no trimming and styles are extremely plain.

Lace scarfs are fast taking the place of chiffon and crepe de chine as an evening headdress. The laces are fragile and show the arrangement of the coiffure beneath. The scarfs are made long, but are not tied, as they drape prettily.

A new edged batiste, showing a plain border one and a half inches wide, is made in plaited style with the border as a piping, not a band. The effect is charming, as the edging is a plain color and delineates any good feature of the dress.

The leather-colored linen is made into a suit of tailored features, with the jacket front widely separated to reveal a double ruffle of soft white mull. The hat is burnt ochre straw with trimmings of black taffeta silk and stiff black aigrets.

A smart spring hat is in biscuit-colored fine straw, with a big bow of many loops of black tulle set rather toward the back and veiling a great cluster of purple and green leaves. The violets and leaves are of satin, sufficiently bright in hue not to be completely dulled by the tulle.

Soft-thread tatting, set in soft net collars, is used in attractive neckwear. A ready-made tatting, resembling the hand-made variety, serves very well. Among the deep lace collars which encircle the neck is a round one made of mull, finely plaited and inset with leaves, tendrils and flowers of Irish crochet. There is sufficient weight in the appliqued trimming to hold the weblike collar in place.

The Feminine Revolt.

The relation between the cost of living and the activity in the issuance of marriage licenses is recognized as intimate, even though the economists may not be able to express the subtle fact in a mathematical formula. But there can be no doubt that Cupid keeps an eye on the market prices of provision, even though he may have little use for the tailor.

There can be no doubt that this sprightly promoter of felicity has abandoned the old fallacy, enticing but illusory, that two persons can live just as cheaply as can one. Perhaps that untruth in domestic mathematics took form at a time when girls were different in some material respects from the maidens of to-day. It was once the fad that they should be delicate, without appetite, taking food after the manner of birds, with anaemic results. They were more fond of cakes and sweetmeats than of prosaic bread, potatoes and roast beef.: In those days there might be more economy in the feminine menu. But the girl of to-day is brought up to be buxom and robust. There has been a reaction, both sensible and widespread. She takes proper pride in her appetite and in her muscles, which she has learned are not at all inconsistent with gentle sentiment. She emulates her bothers in fondness for the open air and for suitable athletics.

There is no longer any reason for her sentimal semistarvation. If she likes a ballad to her eyebrow, she is ready also for a lobster after the opera. She may approve of kisses from the one right man, but he must also be able to provide a menu more extended than bread and cheese. Hence the normal and active feminine interest in the revolt against high prices in the market place.—Washington Post.

Ways of Wasting.

Some women foolishly think it a reflection on their generosity to be careful about the little things, while other women economize unwisely.

Instead of making the pot full of weak tea for the sake of economy, or of strong tea for the sake of being considered generous, and throwing away half of it in either case, measure both tea and water and make enough good tea so that it is practically all used. Never make a big fire when a light one is sufficient. In cooking with gas or oil, turn off the heat as soon as through with it; if water is to be heated, do not heat more or hotter than desired. I know a woman who is endeavoring by means of allowance and bookkeeping to keep down the living expenses, who three times each day heats a huge kettle of water on her gasoline stove to the boiling point for the dish washing and then uses about half of it after it is reduced to a usable temperature. She wastes enough in fuel to buy the fruit and other dainties of which she deprives her family, in order to keep within her allowance.

Reserve all the left-overs, but utilize them simply. One woman will take the good bits of meat that are left, a little stock, a slice of stale bread and an egg, and provide a delicious meat course for the family luncheon from materials, with the exception of the egg, that were in themselves useless. Another woman will at once throw out the left-overs. Another puts them on the table in their unpalatable condition, until the family eats them in desperation, or they become totally useless. And yet another uses unlimited new materials to conceal the old, thus spending much to save a little.

When Women Ruled.

It seems to be pretty well established that originally the matters of relationship and descent, along with all that followed, were determined through the female line. Kinship, and, therefore, property, was governed by the mother. Hence the power of the early woman. When a young woman got married she took her husband home with her, and if he proved unworthy it was within her power to cast him out. The woman was the "boss," and when she said "Go" he had to get out. It is comparatively late in the history of human society that we first see the change from female to male headship in the matter of kinship and inheritance and in the consequent transfer of the power and importance from the woman to the man.—Chicago Examiner.

STRAWS OF LATEST PATTERN.

Here are two of the good new models in rough straw. Ribbon plays a large part in the trimming of one of them, and the band about the crown is festooned with a wreath of tiny roses. The other hat is turned up sharply at one side, and its trimming savors of the chantecler.

Novelty in Trimming.

Ribbon, which takes such a prominent place in millinery this season, is the most practical of trimmings. When used in a large flat loose bow, with compact little wreaths of small flowers, it is most charming in effect.

Labor Lifts.

If a gloss is desired on linen, add a teaspoonful of salt to starch when making.

In ironing handkerchiefs, it is well to begin at the center; if one irons the hem first, the middle will have a tendency to bulge or "full."

Few know that a cold boiled potato rubbed on a piece of paper for a few minutes will form a moisture of the consistency of glue, and is a satisfactory substitute for mucilage in case of an emergency.

Silk Should Match.

Where silk hose are rubbed into holes in the back by low shoes or pumps, it is usually useless to darn them in the ordinary way. Place a piece of silk of the same color underneath and darn the stockings to it.

Piling It On.

The young, inexperienced wife was in tears. "Just think, mamma," she sobbed. "Henry threw a biscuit at me. One I made myself, too." "The monster!" cried her mother. "He might have killed you."—London News.

HOUSEHOLD TALKS

The Wholesome Pineapple.

Pineapple is delicious to the taste and some one has discovered that it is a sovereign remedy for indigestion and that it a good fruit tonic, too. To a lemonade served at afternoon bridge and whist parties add pieces of pineapple and grapefruit, with thinly sliced orange and sprigs of mint. Do not serve sandwiches containing fish with this lemonade. Lettuce, egg and chicken sandwiches go well with the beverage.

Schnecken.

One cup of sugar, one pint of sweet milk that has been scalded; one-half cup of melted lard; one-half cup or one cent's worth of yeast; flour to mix quite stiff. Mix and set over night to rise. Knead as you would bread and set to rise again. Roll out one-half inch thick, spread with butter and currants, roll up and cut into inch slices. Set them to rise and, when light, bake.

White Fruit Cake.

Cream a cup of granulated sugar with one-half cup of butter, add the beaten white of an egg, a cup of sweet milk, a cup of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two-thirds of a cup of seeded raisins mixed with one-third of a cup of minced citron (both well-floured) and a teaspoonful of sherry or almond flavoring to taste. Bake in a loaf tin.

Vegetable Soup.

With a vegetable flavored soup a clear beef stock is best. Tomatoes are important, and carrots, turnips, leeks, celery, lima and string beans, corn, rice and sometimes barley are used in combination. All the vegetables should be neatly cut into cubes and added according to the length of time required for the cooking of the various kinds.

Cream Pie.

Beat three eggs light, add to them a cup of sugar, a pint of milk, and two-thirds of a cup of flour. Line a pie plate with pastry and bake. Cook the cream mixture in a double boiler until thick. When cold, flavor with vanilla, and pour into the open crust. Bake until set. This recipe will make a very large pie, or several small ones.

Baked Beans and Tomatoes.

Cover a quart of beans with lukewarm water and soak over night. Boil the beans until tender. Drain and put into a deep pudding dish, put a generous piece of parboiled salt pork in the center and pour over all a large cup of seasoned but unthickened tomato sauce. Cover and bake for two hours.

Chili Sauce.

One can of tomatoes, one large onion. Drain the tomatoes, chop the pulp, also the peeled onion and add the tomato juice, two teaspoonfuls of mixed spices, a cupful of vinegar—or enough to give a sharp flavor—one-third of a cup of sugar and salt to taste. Mix well, put in jars and seal.

Brown Bread.

Mix two cups of sweet milk with one cup of sour, add two cups of white meal, one cup of flour, one cup of molasses, two teaspoonfuls of baking soda and a little salt. Mix well, turn into a mold, and steam for three hours, then set in the oven for five minutes before turning out.

Hints About the House.

To remove tea stains lay the fabric over a bowl and pour boiling water through it.

A flat file is one of the best things on which to sharpen bread, meat and chopping knives.

When vegetables with roots become soft and withered, slice off one end and lay in water for a few hours.

If a pan smells of onions boil it out with tea leaves; this will make it perfectly clean and sweet smelling again.

To prevent starched articles sticking to the iron add a pinch of salt and a little lump of lard to the boiled starch.

Rusty knives can be cleaned by soaking the blades in paraffin oil and then rubbing them with finely powdered ashes.

A good way to tell when ham is fried enough is by the fat. When the fat is brown (not burnt) the ham is done.

Burning oil is spread by water. To extinguish it throw down flour, sand or earth. The idea is to prevent the oil's spreading.

When ironing colored garments avoid a very hot iron, as too great heat tends to fade the colors. Iron on the wrong side whenever possible.

Scrubbing brushes should always be hung up when not in use, so that the bristles have a chance of drying. They will last far longer if treated in this way.

To put starched curtains on the rod without tearing, first run a lead pencil through the hem, inserting the rubber end; that opens the hem easily and quickly.

When the mincing machine needs oiling use a drop of glycerine. This will prevent any risk of disagreeable taste or smell, and will make the machine work easily.

If new enamel saucepans are placed in a pan of warm water, allowed to come to the boil, and then cool, they will be found to last much longer before either cracking or burning.

Iron handkerchiefs in the middle first and the edges can then be ironed more easily. If the edges be ironed first the middle will swell out, and the handkerchief cannot be folded in a good shape.

When you get through using your wringer take a piece of cloth and wet with kerosene, and rub the rolls well with it. They will come just as clean and white as when new. Repeat every week after washing.

Between Two Fires.

"Lincoln stories" are common, and the tellers of them are not as accurate in ascertaining their genuineness as they are prolific in producing them. The following tale comes from a writer in the Chicago Journal, and may or may not be a "real Lincoln." It is in any event, a good story:

Two farm-hands, Lincoln used to say, were set upon by a huge bull while crossing a rocky field. One managed to gain a tree. The other took refuge in a hole in the tree that proved to have an exit in the rear.

The man who had chosen the hole was no sooner in at one end than he was out at the other. With a bellow, the bull made for him. He turned and again shot like lightning through the hole. The bull once more bore down upon him, and once more he was in and out of his hole.

This strange pursuit kept up for some minutes. At first it mystified the farm-hand up in the tree. Then it angered him.

"Hey," he shouted, "you Idiot! Why don't you stay in the hole?"

The bull was dashing from one end of the hole to the other at great speed and the man was bobbing in and out desperately. He heard, however, his comrade's shout, and found time before his next brief disappearance to shout back:

"Idiot yourself! There's a bear in the hole!"

POSTUM FOR MOTHERS.

The Drink That Nourishes and Supplies Food for Mother and Child.

"My husband has been unable to drink coffee for several years, so we were very glad to give Postum a trial and when we understood that long boiling would bring out the delicious flavor, we have been highly pleased with it.

"It is one of the finest things for nursing mothers that I have ever seen. It keeps up the mother's strength and increases the supply of nourishment for the child if partaken of freely. I drank it between meals instead of water and found it most beneficial.

"Our five-year-old boy has been very delicate since birth and has developed slowly. He was white and bloodless. I began to give him Postum freely and you would be surprised at the change. When any person remarks about the great improvement, we never fail to tell them that we attribute his gain in strength and general health, to the free use of Postum and this has led many friends to use it for themselves and children.

"I have always cautioned friends to whom I have spoken about Postum, to follow directions in making it, for unless it is boiled fifteen or twenty minutes, it is quite tasteless. On the other hand, when properly made, it is very delicious. I want to thank you for the benefits we have derived from the use of your Postum."

It is very probable that the county council will have to remain in session for a period of three days when it meets the county commissioners in the latters' regular June session. The council is being called to appropriate some money to build new bridges, repair old ones and to meet some incidental expenses. But the total amount asked for by the commissioners exceeds $3,000 which sum is the largest amount the council can appropriate without remaining in session the full three days of a regular annual meeting. Under $3,000 it can appropriate in one day but over it cannot. There will be requisitions for nine bridges face the council besides other items. —Dispatch.

TO RID LAWNS OF DANDELIONS

Iorn Sulphate Found to Be Effective For That Purpose

One of the most serious injuries to the beauty of lawns is the common dandelion, which crowds out desirable grasses and clovers. Cutting lawns seem to do little good, as the dandelion easily adapts itself to conditions detrimental to its growth and continues to flourish. Professor B. O. Longyear, Colorado agricultural college, describes a treatment for lawns infested with the weed as follows:

"The most effective and practicable method of clearing a dandelion-infested lawn, other than by hand digging, is by the use of iorn sulphate applied as a spray. The writer has succeeded with three applications in entirely killing all plants of this common lawn pest without injuring the grass. A portion of a lawn so badly infested that hardly anything but dandelions was visible a year ago is now without a single plant and the grass has thickened a good deal in consequence.

"A solution of copperas or iorn sulphate made by dissolving at the rate of one and one-quarter pounds of the salt in a gallon of water should be applied to the lawn with a spray pump so as to wet every plant. It will not do to use a common sprinkler. The solution must be put on in the form of a fine spray applied with some force to be most effective. A common bucket spray pump or even a hand atomiser for very small areas, is suitable, provided it makes a fine forcible spray. Do not try to hit the dandelions only, but cover every inch of the lawn. In this way all seeding plants will be killed. Put on a second application in two or three week and a third and possibly a fourth late in the summer if any dandelions start into growth. The grass will be blackened for a short time, but soon recovers and after a watering and mowing will appear darker green than before. Do not allow the solution to get on cement or stone walks, as it produces a rather permanent yellow stain."

FLIGHT OF THE EARTH.

Rushing Through Space at the Rate of a Million Miles a Day.

Our dear old earth, which seems immovable and solid as we go about our daily work or travel over its furrowed surface, is yet spinning and rolling and swaying in complex but orderly motion. Its axial rotation gives us day and night. Its circuit round the sun brings the seasons and the year. The circling of the poles produces the procession of the equinoxes. The planets perturb in its courses. The plane of its orbit sways up and down, and its perihelion is slowly shifted. The moon swings round a center of gravity common to both, while the sun and all our system speed onward to some far distant goal. And, if the bright star in the constellation Taurus is the central point round which this vast orbit sweeps, then Alcyone is the center of the universe for us.

As far as astronomers can judge, this motion through the vast abyss of interstellar space is at the rate of about a million miles a day, and it is in the direction of the constellation Hercules. The motion through space is believed to be away from Argus and toward Hercules. Some have thought that Alcyone in the Pleiades is somewhere near the center of the vast circuit swept over by the sun and his attendant worlds. If this is true, that beautiful star as it silently twinkles in the constellation Taurus becomes of surpassing interest to mankind.—Chicago Tribune.

LITERARY FEAST
By The Renowned Arthor and Poet
WILL CARLTON
Opera House, Butler, Ind., June 9th

Will Carleton is the author of Farm and City Ballads, Farm and City Festivals, Farm and City Legends and many other books and is to Michigan what Whitcomb Riley is to Indiana, and these two are the greatest living poets today.

There is only one "CARLETON." Now is the time to hear him---and it is the chance of a lifetime.

The joy, love and tender pathos pictured by him will carry his listeners from the heights of laughter into the vale of tears and back again on the joyous wave of happiness.

No one can hear him and not have a finer, grander view of life and be the happier for it.

The First Band Concert

The first open air concert by the Butler City band last Saturday evening, was greeted by a lsrge crowd of people, such as Butler usually has when they know there is something good in store for them. The sweet peels of music floated out on the still night air and were heard for blocks. Though there were signs of approaching storm, it did not seem to keep the people from enjoying the concert, and the two main thoroughfares were fairly lined with eager listeners, who lingered until the concert was over. The boys played splendid, and their new pieces are simply fine. The Butler City band is not an ordinary country band just picked up here and there from all the four corners within forty miles of town, but it is composed of artists, organized and drilled, who play the most difficult music with the ease of musicians. We have not been authorized to say, but presume the band open for engagements any time during the season. They have been engaged by the progressive merchants of the city to give Saturday night concerts all during the summer season, so that the people who visit Butler will have the honor of hearing one of the best drilled bands in northern Indiana.

Pres. Sniff to Return to Angola

ANGOLA, Ind., May 20.—A few days since it became known that President Jay J. Bryant had tendered his resignation as president of the Tri-State college in this city, the same to take effect at the close of the present school year. When seen by the Kist News reporter Hresident Bryant said that he had no public statement to make with reference to the matter of his resignation or his future intentions further than to say that it is his purpose to remain with the college and give it his very best effects until the close of the year. President Bryant came into the college work here one year ago, coming from Missouri.

Immediately on receipt of President Bryant's resignation the college management set about to secure his successor. Correspondence was opened with former President L. M. Sniff, who is at present in California with his family, and the call was extended to him asking him to return to the work in which he had served so well and efficiently for twenty-four years, and the management is delighted now to announce that President Sniff has accepted the call and will return to Angola, and with the beginning of the new year at the college will resume his former position as president of the Tri-State.—Journal-Gazette.

The Twentieth Century Mixer.

The Concrete Machinery Company people gave their Auto 20th Century Concrete Mixer a road test recently, which proved conclusively its merits as to traction. A five mile trip was made on the worst road conditions, that existed in DeKalb county, just after a heavy rain, while the roads were wet and mud six to eight inches deep, up and down some very steep hills, backing up and turning on a twenty foot sidling and landed the machine right on the job ready to mix concrete without a break or mar to any part of the machine, and had power to spare. In fact the machine did what it is estimated would have taken four horses to have done.

Notice

Dear Friends—Six months ago I began sending notices of your accounts, have sent you several notices since, and now in conclusion will say I shall come to Butler, May 26, and remain until the accounts of Acker & Kramer and M. M. Acker are settled. On the date stated above I shall bring suit against unsettled accounts, any costs that you will have to pay will be your fault, not mine, as I certainly have given you plenty of time and notices of your past due accounts. Any person desiring to settle their account can pay same to Dr. Kramer and receive receipt.

Say, boys, I hope your accounts will all be settled by May 26. I can have a much better time and leave Butler feeling that none but good honest people live there.

Very truly,

BUTLER MAY GET AUTO FACTORY

Butler Being Considered as Location---Trebert Gas Engine Co. Take in New Stockholders

Saturday last, a change took place in the stockholders of the Trebert Gas Engine Co., six of the stockholders selling out and two new ones were taken in. The new stockholders are D. A. Baker and Walter Snider. Those who disposed of their interests are, S. G. Stone, L. C. Harding, Dr. W. F. Shumaker, Geo. A. Powers, W. Elden and James Decker.

The company is arranging to put several experienced engine men to work soon and push the business as fast as possible. Several experts have examined the engine and are unanimous in their belief that the Trebert is a head of any other engine on the market.

The manager, Mr. Wagner, informs us that he is in correspondence with different automobile builders who are considering Butler as a location for their factories. It may be possible that before the HERALD goes to press again something definite can be given out regarding this proposition. Here's hopin'.

Married

On Saturday evening, May 21, Mr. Earl H. Grove and Miss Florence E. Madden at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph R. Madden, near this city, the Rev. Edmund F. Albertson, D. A. S. POWERS, ESQ.,
Butler, Ind.

Dear Sir—I received your letter a short time ago, but was obliged to be absent from town yesterday, so could not answer the same.

Replying to your inquiry, as to whether I was a candidate for the nomination for judge, I beg to say, that I am not in the strict sense a candidate, but will say further that if the delegates and people generally consider that I am available for that position, and see fit to nominate me, I shall accept and do my best, to secure my election, and if elected will do my best to merit the confidence and respect of the people.

Very truly,
FRANK M. POWERS.

Frank M. Powers is the choice of the democrats. He will be the choice of the people. He has the ability, is popular in both DeKalb and Steuben counties. As the Courier says, it's Powers, Powers, anywhere you may go.

Democratic Primary Election

At the county primary election to be held Wednesday, June 1, 1910, all democratic voters of Wilmington township living in precincts 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5, will vote at the city hall, city of Butler.

The following board has been appointed for this voting place:

Inspector—W. D. Boyle.

Judges—Wm. S. Troyer and Herm Tomlinson.

Clerks—Oscar A. Garber and J. H. W. Krontz.

Those living in precinct No. 6, will vote in the school house at Moores.

Voting places will be open from 11 a. m. till 8 p. m. Let us try and get out a good vote from Wilmington township.

At a meeting of the precinct committeemen last Thursday evening it was decided to hold a caucus later in the season for the nomination of township officers.

The Soldiers in Blue

Up the street gaily decked in their honor they come
Keeping step to the time of the fife and the drum.
They're all that are left of the soldiers in blue
Who saved this great country for me and for you.
And the flag floating there,
As it leaps on the air,
Starts a love in our bosoms that naught can impair,
Born anew from our country, the home of the brave—
And the flag which they offered their life-blood to save—
And quickens the thought of the debt that is due
Of respect we can't pay to the soldiers in blue.

The summers of sunshine and winters of snow,
That year after year pass away,
Leave their mark after them, and with each as they go
Is the hair turned a little more gray.
But the soldier looks back o'er the years that have flown,
And bright is his mem'ry today,
Of the youth that was safe in his own northern home
Before called to the front of the fray.

There are loved ones so dear, there are friendships so true,
That nothing save Heaven can part,
Yet oft there are times when the red, white and blue,
Holds the place that is nearest the heart.
So the soldier that marches again hears the cheers
Of the crowd as he signed with the brave volunteers,
He sees the lorn look, and he sees the hot tears
Of the wife or the mother, or sweetheart of years,
As he bids them farewell with the last kiss of love—
For aught that he knew till they'd all meet above.

Ah, many that started with musket and sack,
Went down in the battle and never came back.
And those who returned from the war's dreadful din,
Are called to the Camp-fire that never burns dim;
And so, keeping step to the fife and the drum,
The ones that are left with their floral wreaths come,
To strew o'er the graves of their comrades who sleep
To waken no more at the drum's stirring beat.
O soldiers in blue,
We promise to you—
For your glory and honor 'tis all we can do,
When all that are left are laid under the sod,
And the lilies and red roses over you nod—
The flag, which you trusted your lives to your God,
To keep floating skyward—we promise to thee—
If such sacrifice as yours ever need be,
We'll keep it still flying from sea unto sea—
O'er the land of the brave, and the home of the free.

—John William Barber.

DOCTOR ADVISED OPERATION

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Galena, Kans.—"A year ago last March I fell, and a few days after there was soreness in my right side. In a short time a bunch came and it bothered me so much at night I could not sleep. It kept growing larger and by fall it was as large as a hen's egg. I could not go to bed without a hot water bottle applied to that side. I had one of the best doctors in Kansas and he told my husband that I would have to be operated on as it was something like a tumor caused by a rupture. I wrote to you for advice and you told me not to get discouraged but to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did take it and soon the lump in my side broke and passed away."—Mrs. R. R. HUEY, 713 Mineral Ave., Galena, Kans.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has proved to be the most successful remedy for curing the worst forms of female ills, including displacements, inflammation, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result has been worth millions to many suffering women.

If you want special advice write for it to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. It is free and always helpful.

The Shah's Dagger.

One of the treasures of the shah of Persia is a diamond set in one of his scimitars, which renders its possessor invincible. There is also a dagger with the same property, but it is ordained that those who use it should perish by it. It is therefore carefully shut up in a sandalwood box on which is engraved a verse from the Koran.—Chicago News.

$100 Reward, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Saved by Fireflies.

The gigantic tropical fireflies which swarm in the forests and canebrakes of most of the low lying West Indian islands once proved the salvation of the city of San Domingo. A body of buccaneers, headed by the notorious Thomas Cavendish, had laid all their plans for a descent upon the place, intending to massacre the inhabitants and carry away all the treasure they conveniently could, and had actually put off their boats for that purpose. As they approached the land, however, rowing with muffled oars, they were greatly surprised to see an infinite number of moving lights in the woods which fringed the bayou up which they had to proceed, and, concluding that the Spaniards knew of their approach, they put about and regained their ship without attempting to land.

Looking Backward.

On the night following the Yale-Princeton game last fall, a young man who had slipped and fallen was assisted to his feet by a passer-by.

"Just a little shelebration of vic't'ry," the young man explained as he waved a bedraggled bit of orange and black ribbon.

"But Princeton lost," the other told him.

The young man looked painfully surprised for an instant.

"How do you know?" he asked.

"Why, it was on the bulletin board an hour ago," the other said. "Yale won to-day's game.

"I wash referrin'," said the young man with great dignity, "to th' game of 1903."—Lippincott's.

Postum Cereal Co., Ltd.
Battle Creek, Mich.

THE great game of baseball, during its six months' season, holds full sway as the national sport of America and exacts its tribute from the millions. It is estimated that 200,000 people saw the opening games in the National and American Leagues this year, and the prospects for a successful season were never brighter. Every year sees a greater attendance at the games and greater profits from presentation of the efforts of skillful players. Last year, for instance, the attendance at the games of the two major leagues were 7,978,108, while that at the games of the minor leagues has been put roughly at more than 25,000,000. This meant receipts estimated at $5,983,581 by the 16 teams of the two big leagues and of $8,750,000 by teams of the minor leagues, or a total of $14,733,581 for organized baseball in one year. The games were played in 267 cities.

The number of paid admissions to see the games of the two major leagues from 1901 to 1909, inclusive, was 50,134,235, or well over half the estimated population of the United States. So strong is the hold of the game on the American public that it has become a great business, in which men strive for franchises and give bonuses of thousands of dollars for star players. It is so profitable an enterprise that men are willing to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars for the provision of comfortable and safe accommodations for the entertainment of the great armies of spectators who daily, in the season, throng through the gates of their fields.

$12,000,000 Invested in Ball Parks.

The fields or parks in the different cities where the major league games are played have been valued at $3,000,000 for each of the leagues, or $6,000,000 for the two. This is probably an underestimate, for the ground value of the home of the Yankees, at 168th street and Broadway, New York, alone has recently been placed at $1,700,000. The valuation of the Polo Grounds, the home of the Giants, is probably in excess of $525,000. The owners of this famous ground have received more than $400,000 in rentals since 1890. Shibe Park, the home of the Philadelphia American League team, represents an investment of $750,000 to be carried by the profits of baseball, while Forbes Field, in Pittsburg, the home of the Pirates, is valued at $900,000. In addition, the value of the grounds used by the minor leagues has been placed at $6,000,000. This makes a total investment to be carried in the name of professional baseball of approximately $12,000,000.

The buildings in new parks are of fireproof construction and provided with club-rooms, with baths for the players and elevators for the ease of the spectators. Parlors with maids have been included for the benefit of the women patrons of the sport. Systems of drainage have been laid in the grounds, so that a shower need not make them "unplayable."

Pirates' Million-Dollar Field.

Forbes Field, in Pittsburg, is an illustration of the length to which baseball investment will go. The inclosure, which is so roomy and free from flaws that there are no ground rules, has been styled the million-dollar baseball park. The ground is valued at $500,000 and the fireproof stands, of concrete and steel construction, cost $400,000 in addition, making a total cost, as mentioned above, of $900,000. Even the bleachers are concrete, with metal seat supports. The field will accommodate more than 30,000 persons seated, and eventually will have provision for 50,000 spectators. There are private rooms with baths for star players and a fully equipped laundry for washing the suits between the games.

Philadelphia has two great modern baseball parks, the one erected by the National League three years ago, and Shibe Park, opened last year by the American League team, and second in luxury and beauty of equipment only to Forbes Field. Shibe Park represents an investment of $750,000, and its structures are absolutely fireproof. It will seat about 23,000 persons and accommodate probably 40,000 persons all told. The field is probably the largest in the world. A feature is a mammoth telegraph board, on which are displayed all the league games and other information of interest to those who follow baseball.

Patterned After Roman Coliseum.

The Chicago American League team, the White Sox, have a new home, representing an investment of $500,000. Those "fans" who are acquainted with the history and architecture of ancient Rome will be reminded of the city sitting on the seven hills when they approach the entrance to the arena upon which the sport of a modern republic is presented to the gaze of the populace. The facade is patterned after the Roman Coliseum. The seating capacity is 32,000 persons. There are elevators for their use. The Chicago National League team has a remodeled home, costing $600,000 and built of granite, steel and concrete. The St. Louis American League team also has new quarters of concrete and iron, opened a year ago.

What has been described as one of the "most complete" baseball structures in the world is the home of the Cleveland American League team. It will seat about 20,000 persons and accommodate 10,000 more on a pinch. The manager of the Giants does not intend to be obliged to turn away 150,000 "fans," as he is said to have been obliged to do two years ago because of lack of accommodations. The stands have been increased in size and will now seat 37,000 persons. There will be standing space for 3,000 more. The improvements cost approximately $150,000. Next year the Washington and Detroit American League teams will probably have remodeled homes. Both have purchased property for this purpose. Other clubs also are thinking of making improvements in their quarters.

Princely Salaries of Diamond Stars.

The cost of baseball is tremendous. The salary list of the players in the major and minor leagues has been affirmed recently by an authority to be $5,000,000 a year. This sum, doubtless, is exceeded, for there are some officials and players who receive salaries that seem regal for such a democratic game. Byron Bancroft Johnson, styled Ban Johnson for short, was recently re-elected president, secretary and treasurer of the National American League with a salary of $25,000 a year to continue for 20 years. Mathewson, the crack pitcher of the New York Giants, has a contract for $10,000 a year, but it is believed that he receives nearer $15,000. John P. Wagner, familiarly known as Hans, or Honus, is supposed to receive $10,000 for his six months' work as a shortstop on the Pittsburg National League team; while Lajoie, the second baseman on the Cleveland American League team, is a sufficiently able player to command for six months' services as much as a United States Senator receives from the United States treasury for his part in deciding the destinies of the great republic.

Railroad fares and hotel expenses also form a staggering item in the cost of baseball. It certainly costs more than half a million dollars a year for car fare for the major and minor leagues, and the hotel expenses of 7,360 players spending, perhaps, one-half of their time away from home, can hardly be less than $1,250,000 for an entire season. Add to this $25,000 for expressage, cab fares, trips to and from hotels and fields, tips and incidentals. The cost of shoes, masks, uniforms, gloves, bats and balls, all of the best material, is figured out at $356,000, over $100,000 alone being annually paid out for shoes.

Finally, to total everything, a game that involves a capital of more than $12,000,000, an annual expenditure of more than $8,000,000 and an annual income of $14,733,581 is surely a profitable business proposition and a game that is worthy of the patronage of all sport-loving Americans.

HERE THEY ARE—ALL THE OLD GUARD.

SOME FOLLIES OF THE LAW IN CRIMINAL PROCEDURE

THAT the criminal procedure of courts in the United States is sadly defective, that sweeping reforms are needed to prevent the growth of lynching outbreaks, and that this country may well learn of older nations how to administer justice in criminal cases, are some of the things pointed out by Charles B. Brewer in McClure's Magazine. Beginning with the statement that only one life is required for about one hundred lives taken in the United States, the writer gives detailed figures for some large cities. In Chicago, for example, he says there were in the fiscal year 1908 165 homicides and only one legal execution. In St. Louis for the same year there were ninety-two homicides and only one legal execution occurred.

Discussing what he calls "a smug complacency to place the responsibility for present conditions on the foreigner," Mr. Brewer admits that "there is more crime, proportionately, among those of foreign birth in the United States than among our native-born," but says it is "scarcely enough, however, to cause congratulation for our own righteousness."

A number of cases in which justice was diverted for trivial reasons are cited by Mr. Brewer, of which the following are examples:

"Because the indictment charged that the crime had been committed on a 'public road,' and the evidence showed that, though constantly used as such, the road had never been dedicated to the State.

"Because the indictment named a specific though a correct date, instead of saying 'on or about' a certain date.

"Because the indictment for murder charged that the deed had been committed 'unlawfully and with malice,' instead of 'malice aforethought.'"

Justice Brown of the United States Supreme Court (retired) is quoted as saying to Mr. Brewer that the choosing of a jury should never consume more than one or two hours, and as saying further:

"A court in conservative old England will dispose of a dozen jury cases in the time that would be required here for dispatching one. The cause is not far to seek. It lies in the close confinement of the counsel to the questions at issue, and the prompt interposition of the court to prevent delay. The trials are conducted by men trained for that special purpose, whose interest is to expedite and not prolong them. No time is wasted in immaterial matters. Objections to testimony are discouraged, rarely argued, and almost never made the subject of exception. The testimony is confined to the exact point at issue. Mere oratory is at a discount. New trials are rarely granted. A criminal trial is especially a serious business, since in the case of a verdict of guilty it is all up with the defendant, and nothing can save him from punishment but the pardoning power of the Home Secretary. The result is that defendants rarely escape punishment for their crimes, and homicides are infrequent."

OLD INDIAN FIGHTER TO THE RETIRED LIST

Brigadier General Howe, a Survivor of the Modoc Campaign, Soon to End Service.

WITH ARTILLERY 46 YEARS.

Soldier Took Active Part in the Fight Against Captain Jack and His Braves.

Brigadier General Walter Howe, United States army, who recently was in command of the department of the East in the temporary absence of Major General Leonard Wood, has served in the artillery forces for forty-six years. General Howe is soon to retire from the service under the age limit law. He is one of the few survivors of the officers of the United States army who took part in the campaign years ago against Captain Jack and his fellow braves of the Modoc tribe in the far Northwest.

It was during the campaign against the Modocs that artillery was used by the white soldiers as a weapon of offense against Indians who had taken the warpath. At that time General Howe was a second lieutenant serving with a light battery of the Fourth Artillery. Captain Jack and Scar-Faced Charlie, Modoc chiefs, and their following resented the attempt which was made to get them to leave land on which their tribe had dwelt for years.

Peace commissioners were sent to treat with the Indians, one of the members of the commission being General Canby. Captain Jack asked for a parley with the commission and the request was granted. As soon as General Canby and his fellow commission members met the Indians Jack and his following opened fire and killed every member of the peace party. The Modocs then took to the lava beds of the Northwest and it was found to be impossible to dislodge them by means of direct assault. The troops engaged against the Indians at the first were cavalry men, and all their operations had to be conducted dismounted. A battery of the Fourth Artillery, to which Lieutenant Howe was attached, was sent to the front and the shelling of the Indians' position was begun. It took a long time to dislodge them, for the lava beds were full of caves which made excellent bomb-proofs. Finally, however, starvation did what shells could not do and the Modocs surrendered. Captain Jack, Scar-Faced Charlie, Jim and one or two other Modocs were hanged for the murder of the peace commissioners.

BRIGADIER GENERAL HOWE.

Brigadier General Howe entered the United States Military Academy as a cadet during the Civil War. It was only a few years after he was graduated that the light battery to which he was attached was sent to the plains country and thence to Oregon.

After the Modoc war was over it became the practice to attach light batteries to expeditionary forces in the field against the Indians, and Lieutenant Howe served in the Sioux campaign of 1876, a campaign which saw the wiping out of General Custer and three squadrons of the Seventh Cavalry, the temporary triumph of Sitting Bull and then the final rounding up of several thousands of Sioux warriors who had taken to the warpath because of the invasion of their country by the whites.

In the army General Howe is known as one of the most proficient students in the artillery branch of the service. He was graduated from the artillery school in 1873 and has served with both the field and the sea coast branches of the service.

BATTLE FOR GIRL'S HAND.

Anton Stromme, aged 28; Joseph Kalpasch, aged 27, and Michael Wietrzick, aged 29, were taken to the Minneapolis City Hospital suffering from knife wounds as the result of a fight between five young men in a dark kitchen of Mrs. Rose Gieski's home. The men were rivals for the affections of Agnes Gieski, aged 16. The other two men, Stanislaus Dumbravitz, aged 20, and Edward Swolinak, aged 27, are at large. They are also believed to have been wounded. Jactic Kolanyak, a sixth man, is also being sought by the police as having been implicated in the fight. The men met at the Gieski home in the evening. A fist fight started in the kitchen regarding the girl's affections, and soon knives took the place of fists to settle the matter.

His Opportunity.

"How did you manage to go through every house on that block in broad daylight without being detected?" asked one burglar.

"Very easily," replied the other. "I selected a time when a moving van drove up to vacant dwelling. I worked while the neighbors were hanging out of the front windows to criticise the furniture."—Washington Star.

WESTERN CANADA

What Governor Deneen, of Illinois, Says About It

Governor Deneen, of Illinois, owns a section of land in Saskatchewan, Canada. He has said in an interview:

"As an American I am delighted to see the remarkable progress of Western Canada. Our people are flocking across the boundary in thousands, and I have not yet met one who admitted he had made a mistake. They are all doing well. There is scarcely a community in the Middle or Western States that has not a representative in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta."

MAN WITH ONE ACRE

Way to Independence Pointed Out to a Head of Family Who Has a Job.

DOESN'T NEED ANY EXPERIENCE

Intensive Farming a Side Line That Will Keep the Wolf from the City Toiler's Door.

The most independent man in the world is the man with just one acre. It isn't too much and it isn't too little. A man can get out of an acre all the vegetables that he and his family can possibly eat for the entire year; and he can also raise a good deal to sell. With an acre a man can have a comfortable home and plenty of space for grass and flowers, and he can grow fruit. I know all this from personal experience, Harry Sprackland says in the Saturday Evening Post. My family consists of a wife and six children. My place is just an acre; my home has nine rooms. I have got good returns and I started in without any real experience as a gardener or farmer.

As to grass and flowers, I thought from the first that we ought not to crowd them out, for they make the home so much more attractive; and though, in a narrow sense, they may seem to take up space that might be used for money making, there is a benefit from the beauty of such things that's worth more than money.

Three-quarters of my acre is given up to vegetables. Half an acre, including the house space, would be enough if all I wanted was to grow things for ourselves; but I want a chance to sell things as well. It's a mighty good thing to have something on the side as a help in good times and to fall back on in bad times. I feel that a man can get such a big success, and can do it so easily, that I want to tell about it.

I aimed, first, at growing all the vegetables that my family could eat. I think that ought to be a man's first effort, before he thinks of growing things to sell. Fill your own table and cellar first, and then on your surplus land you can raise things to sell.

There are several benefits in having a small piece of land. The money invested is much less; and then, too, the land itself can be worked to far better advantage, for you can give it much more personal attention and do so with much less expenditure of time. And you can fertilize it richly for much less cost than you can a large piece.

We had practically all the vegetables: tomatoes, potatoes, beans, peas, cabbages, beets, turnips. And besides these I gave attention to a few things with which I could get special results. That's the way to do. Grow everything for your family, and, besides, specialize with a few things for the market.

When one can do this sort of thing doesn't it seem as if everybody ought to have his acre, or at least his half acre? And it seems to me that no greater good could be done by rich men who want to help mankind than to buy up land not too far from the cities, at acre prices, and encourage men to take it from them in small lots at acre prices and let them begin a life of health and independence. I think there is nothing that can give a man such pride as owning his own place, and I am sure that no millionaire is prouder of his big estate than I am of my little acre.

FIRST SOCIALIST MAYOR OF AMERICA

The eyes of the country are resting on Milwaukee, the first great American municipality to elect a Socialist mayor and an administration favorable to his views. Of course, the principles of Socialism—State ownership and control—cannot be put into effect in Milwaukee, a correspondent asserts, but the mayor-elect and his supporters expect to institute a great number of reforms along Socialistic lines, and both in and out of the city the experiments will be followed with keen interest.

One thing which friend and foe alike must recognize is that the Socialist victory is no accident, the same correspondent asserts, but is the outgrowth of steady growth and the result of a constant propaganda. For a dozen or more years the Socialists have been active in Milwaukee and have won some minor victories. In 1898 the Socialist vote was 2,414, and four years later was over 8,000. In 1904 the Socialists polled 15,000, in 1908, 20,000, and the present year 27,622. Thus slowly and by degrees the Socialists have been growing in strength. A prominent factor in the Socialist victory was the fact that the party had representatives in the State Legislature, and that the work done by these legislators in the interest of organized labor had won the confidence of the unions. Union men who had no enthusiasm for Socialism had observed that the Socialist legislators worked for their interests, and the result was a tendency on the part of organized labor to support Seidel in preference to either of the old parties.

Emil Seidel

Until the close of Mayor Seidel's term he will be one of the most interesting figures in public life. He is a business man of good standing, is secretary and treasurer of the Milwaukee Pattern Manufacturing Company and since 1908 has been alderman-at-large. He is a little man, not much over five feet in height, and is slight of build. He has a high forehead, a big nose, and a strong, firm mouth. His eyes, which are blue, are keen and snappy. They suggest his manner, which is nervous and active. A mop of light yellow hair is tossed over his head. His brows are slightly bent, the reason for which may be suggested in the fact that he wears glasses.

He is a native of Pennsylvania and has been a resident of Wisconsin since babyhood. At the age of 13 he learned the trade of furniture carving. His recreation, even at that age, was the study of astronomy, and his evenings were passed at the public library. His father, a railroad bridge builder, sent him to Germany for his health in 1886, where he remained abroad for six years. When he returned in 1892 he joined the Social-Democratic party, in which he has ever since been active.

WOMAN'S GENTLE NATURE CALLS FOR GENTLE TREATMENT

Delicately formed and gently reared, women will find, in all the seasons of their lives, as maidens, wives or mothers, that the one simple, wholesome remedy which acts gently and pleasantly and naturally, and which may be used with truly beneficial effects, under any conditions, when the system needs a laxative, is—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna. It is well known to be a simple combination of the laxative and carminative principles of plants with pleasant aromatic liquids, which are agreeable and refreshing to the taste and acceptable to the system when its gentle cleansing is desired.

Only those who buy the genuine Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna can hope to get its beneficial effects, and as a guarantee of the excellence of the remedy, the full name of the company—California Fig Syrup Co.—is printed on the front of every package, and without it any preparation offered as Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is fraudulent and should be declined. To those who know the quality of this excellent laxative, the offer of any substitute, when Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is called for, is always resented by a transfer of patronage to some first-class drug establishment, where they do not recommend, nor sell false brands, nor imitation remedies. The genuine article may be bought of all reliable druggists everywhere; one size only. Regular price 50 cents per bottle. Get a bottle today to have in the house when needed.

FASHION HINTS

CANADA FORGING AHEAD.

Thomas C. Shotwell, one of the greatest market reporters in America, writes from New York, under date of March 20th, and says:

"The tariff tangle with Canada which President Taft has taken in hand is of importance chiefly because of the multitude of American farmers that are crossing into the Canadian northwest. Most conservative estimates of their number place it at 150,000 for 1910. Some say as many as 250,000 will cross. These are expert farmers and their places in United States are being filled by trained men from Europe and from the cities. Canada is gaining rapidly in agricultural importance and within a few years the United States will have to call on the Dominion for wheat. Production of wheat in the United States is not keeping pace with the population. A tariff war would complicate the problem of getting food. Even now Canadian farmers are getting higher prices for their cattle on the hoof, and Candian housewives are paying less for meat in the butcher shops than farmers and housewives are receiving and paying in the United States. The tariff on cattle and wheat must be removed as between the two countries before long."

Awful Burning Itch Cured in a Day.

"In the middle of the night of March 30th I woke up with a burning itch in my two hands and I felt as if I could pull them apart. In the morning the itching had gone to my chest and during that day it spread all over my body. I was red and raw from the top of my head to the soles of my feet and I was in continual agony from the itching. I could neither lie down nor sit up. I happened to see about Cuticura Remedies and I thought I would give them a trial. I took a good bath with the Cuticura Soap and used the Cuticura Ointment. I put it on from my head down to my feet and then went to bed. On the first of April I felt like a new man. The itching was almost gone. I continued with the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment and during that day the itching completely left me. Frank Gridley, 325 East 43rd Street, New York City, Apr. 27, 1909." Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the world; Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston, Mass.

Conceded It.

"Colonel, don't you think, as the result of your observation during many years of public life, that the holding of a government position tends to take away a man's independence and make him merely a machine?" asked the inquisitive acquaintance.

A Clean Man

Outside cleanliness is less than half the battle. A man may scrub himself a dozen times a day, and still be unclean. Good health means cleanliness not only outside, but inside. It means a clean stomach, clean bowels, clean blood, a clean liver, and new, clean, healthy tissues. The man who is clean in this way will look it and act it. He will work with energy and think clean, clear, healthy thoughts.

He will never be troubled with liver, lung, stomach or blood disorders. Dyspepsia and indigestion originate in unclean stomachs. Blood diseases are found where there is unclean blood. Consumption and bronchitis mean unclean lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

prevents these diseases. It makes a man's insides clean and healthy. It cleans the digestive organs, makes pure, clean blood, and clean, healthy flesh.

It restores tone to the nervous system, and cures nervous exhaustion and prostration. It contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs.

Constipation is the most unclean uncleanliness. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure it. They never gripe. Easy to take as candy.

FARMERS' CORNER

Planting Potatoes.

The prevailing, and we might say foolish, custom of most farmers is to plant potatoes just as they come, little and big. Indeed, some use the smaller ones for seed and retain the larger ones for cooking purposes, sometimes placing them on the market.

While such a course will not noticeably affect the potato crop for a single season, its continuation surely but slowly lowers the yield — not so much by an insufficient number of tubers, but by inferiority in size and quality. We believe this to be the chief blunder made by most potato raisers and that it accounts for more failures with this crop than any other one cause.

Assuming that you failed to select seed potatoes at the proper time last season (as nine out of ten fail to), great care should be exercised in selecting seed this spring. With the thought in mind that it was quite likely the healthy, vigorous plant which produced the larger tubers, these should be chosen for seed, since the smaller potatoes, which no doubt came from a weak or inferior plant, and, if planted, would produce a like growth. Is this not true of any other plant or animal life? Then why should it not be true of potatoes?—Twentieth Century Farmer.

Facts About Farms.

Nearly 1,000,000 new farms have been created in the United States during the last ten years. In the last ten years the total number of farms has increased 18 per cent. In the older States, from Ohio eastward, there has been going on for 20 years a tendency toward the amalgamation of farms distant from market into larger holdings.

HOW TO PLANT SHRUBS, ROSES AND TREES.

Correct way of making hole. Notice how the bottom is rounded. The roots lie with a downward turn. They are not cramped or crowded or bent from their proper course.

Incorrect way of making hole. Observe how the roots are bent upward. If the shrub lives the roots must bend downward again—not always successfully accomplished.

On the other hand, this section has witnessed the cutting up into smaller sizes of many farms nearer to market. There are now almost three times as many farms as in 1870, and an unprecedented increase in the value of farm lands and live stock.—American Agriculturist.

Tree Planting Device.

To those who will be planting shade and fruit trees, the following method may be of assistance. In preparing for planting stake out the plot having the stakes in line in several directions. After the plot is carefully staked the trouble is to get the tree set on the exact place occupied by the stake. The following plan will overcome this difficulty. Take a board about 8 ft. long and 8 inches diameter, as shown in illustration. Bore a hole in each end and cut a notch in the middle. Place the board with the notch against the stake and drive wooden or iron pins into the holes B. B. The board can then be removed from the pegs, place the tree in the notch and pack the soil around the roots. The tree will thus be in the exact spot occupied by the stake, and in line with the others.

Egg Imports.

The fact that eggs are not included in any lists of imports which we have seen published and from the results of the American hen's activities, as reported by the census office, leads to the supposition that importing eggs would be like carrying coal to Newcastle. In 1900 over 1,293,662,433 dozen eggs were produced in the United States. This number is large enough to provide each person in the country with seventeen dozen eggs a year. There are almost four times as many chickens in the United States as there are people.

The Egg-Eating Hen.

Some one wants to know how to keep hens from eating their eggs. Having had some experience along that line, I offer a few suggestions: A deep nest box, in which there is only room for the hen's body, so that she cannot get at the eggs when on the nest, and too deep for her to reach the eggs when standing on the edge of it, is a good thing. The best nest box I have used is 14 inches square and 18 inches deep, covered with a 6-inch door or opening at the top of one side.

The Various "Rocks."

A breeder of Buff Rocks wants some one to explain why it is claimed that Barred Plymouth Rocks are so much better market fowls than all other varieties, especially the Buffs and White Plymouth Rocks. All three have the same general conformity, all three have yellow legs and yellow skins, and the buffs and whites have no black pin feathers, as have the barred variety.—Exchange.

A Good Forage Crop.

Canada peas and oats is a favorite forage crop with many New York state farmers. The crop may be sown from early spring to the middle of May. By making sowings at intervals of two weeks, a succession of crops may be had. The common rate of sowing is one and one-half bushels of each per acre. The peas are usually scattered broadcast on disked or harrowed ground, and then turned under about thre or four inches deep. The ground is then harrowed and the oats drilled a few days later. The land may first be prepared and each crop drilled separately, but this is not usually as satisfactory as the other method. Peas and oats are good for hay or to cut and feed green. When the oats are heading and the peas blossoming one may begin to cut for green feed. For hay the oats should be in the milk stage, and the peas should have well-formed pods. Peas and oats can also be pastured to advantage with hogs. This crop will give a yield of five to seven tons per acre of green weight.

Temporary Sheep Fence.

A movable fence of this kind for soiling sheep is made in panels as seen in the picture. The panels are ten feet long, made of four-inch boards solidly nailed together. After this fence is once put up sheep or hogs are not likely to overturn it. A fence three and one-half feet high will turn most flocks.—Denver Post.

Value of the Silo.

The Missouri Experiment Station summarizes the value of the silo as follows: Silage keeps young stock thrifty and growing all winter. It produces fat beef more cheaply than does dry feed. It enables cows to produce milk and butter more economically. It is more conveniently handled than dry fodder. The silo prevents waste of cornstalks in the manure when silage is fed. The silo will make palatable food of stuff that would not otherwise be eaten. It enables the farmer to preserve food, which matures at a rainy time of the year, when dry would be next to impossible. It is the most economical method of supplying food for the stock during the hot, dry periods in summer, when the pasture is short.

Drainage.

One of the essentials about the poultry house and grounds is good drainage. For this reason a good hill slope is the best place for the grounds. The land should slope enough so that rains will wash it clean of all impurities. On flat land the grounds should be frequently changed and planted to some crops that will take up the noxious elements. The draining and surface draining the grounds will assist in keeping them dry and pure. Scraping off the top soil each year and filling with fresh soil from the field will aid in purifying the grounds. The soil from the yards may be used as a fertilizer for the field from which fresh soil is obtained.—Journal of Agriculture.

A Valuable Hatch.

A forcible illustration of the capabilities of a setting of eggs were seen in a poultry show not so long ago. A man bought a setting of eggs of one of the American class of fowls. Twelve out of 13 eggs hatched, one of the chicks died, but the owner succeeded in raising the remaining 11 to maturity. He brought them to the show, there were three cockerels and eight pullets and they were all of a uniform color and size. They won first cockerel, first and second pullet and first hen. They were easily worth one hundred dollars of any man's money, but the owner did not wish to sell them.

Farm Notes.

Cut alfalfa when it is dry.

A good milk cow never becomes rolling fat.

Milk sellers find the Holstein hard to beat.

Milk the cows quietly, quickly and on time.

Never buy pigeons unless the mating is guaranteed.

One bad butter cow will eat up the profit of several good ones.

Too much corn causes the bones of heavy hogs to break easily.

But the manure spreader first and the piano will come easier.

Clean the dairy stable in summer just as regularly as in winter.

Treat the cows kindly and they will repay you in dollars and cents.

It is imperative that sheep quarters be dry at all seasons of the year.

In the big cities the market for squab is good for every month in the year.

Red clover in bloom is not good for hogs, but when young it makes a fine pasture.

Do not fill the churn over one-third to one-half full. Give the cream room for agitation.

The woven wire fence makes hog pasturing easy compared with the old-fashioned rail fence.

Good butter must be properly presented to the market. It must not only be good, but look good.

The type of sheep that combines a large body with a good fleece is the one for the small flock owner.

Keep the pigeons' flying lofts clear of bolts as the birds are apt to injure themselves by flying against them.

A Minister's Constipation

Rev. Kemp Tells of His Digestive Troubles and How He Overcame Them—You Can Do So Free.

The lack of exercise in a minister's life makes him very prone to constipation—but for that matter, most everybody is constipated now and then. It is the national disorder. Many already know that a sure way to cure constipation and other stomach, liver and bowel troubles is with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which church people have been buying for twenty years. Rev. R. A. Kemp, of Rising Sun, Ind., Secretary of the Indiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, says in part:

Dr. W. B. Caldwell

"For years I have been a victim of constipation but I have never found anything to equal Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. I also had indigestion and heart trouble. I can certainly recommend it."

It can be bought of any druggist at 50 cents or $1 a bottle. If there is anything about your case that you don't understand, write to the doctor. If you have never used this remedy and would like to try it, send your address and a free sample bottle will be forwarded to your home. Address Dr. W. B. Too Slow for This Age.

"Grandma, you never took a joy ride, did you?"

"Yes, child, once; but you wouldn't call it joy riding nowadays."

"When was it, grandma?"

"Sixteen years ago. I took a ride in the Ferris wheel."

"How fast did you go?"

"The wheels made one revolution in about fifteen minutes."

"Shucks!"—Chicago Tribune.

All Tired Out.

Do you feel dull, occasionally—out of sorts? Headaches and Dizziness? The fault is either with your stomach or your liver.

The safe, sure and easy way to get rid of either trouble is to take NATURE'S REMEDY. Take an NR Tablet tonight—It will sweeten the stomach and regulate the liver, kidneys and bowels. Easy—sure to act. Get a 25c Box. The A. H. Lewis Medicine Co. St. Louis, Mo.

John and the Franchise.

A woman suffrage lecturer in England recently brought down the house with the folowing argument: "I have no vote, but my groom has. I have a great respect for that man in the stables, but I am sure if I were to go to him and say, 'John, will you exercise the franchise?' he would reply, 'Please, mum, which horse be that?'"

Aguinaldo To-day.

Aguinaldo is living the life of a country gentleman in a small estate just outside of Cavite. He takes no part whatever in the politics of his country. From the moment of his capture Aguinaldo took the position that it would be improper for him to express any opinion whatsoever regarding the rule of his country by Americans. So far as is known he has not commented in any way, either favorably or adversely, upon the administration of the white man.

"For a couple of years," said Manuel L. Quezon, the Philippine commissioner to Congress, according to a Washington correspondent of the Brooklyn Eagle, "I lived with Aguinaldo in his home. We were on the most intimate terms. Remarkable as it may seem, I have not heard him make any comment whatever about the change in the government of the islands. No one has been able to trap him into any kind of an admission. If he is asked whether he thinks conditions in the island have improved under the administration of the Americans he will reply: 'I am very busy with my farming.'

"Whether he approves or condemns the new order of things nobody knows. Still he seems to be contented. Once or twice a year he is invited to dine with the governor-general. He always accepts these invitations and seems to enjoy himself. He maintains an air of dignity and composure at all times and has the respect of every one."

THE HOUSEHOLD

The Kitchen Entrance.

The kitchen entrance of a house should be as attractive as the front entrance. A back porch with mops, brooms, buckets and scrubbing outfit scattered about is inexcusable. A large box, painted any desired color, could be used as a closet for them. Plant boxes placed along the porch edge and filled with flowers will add beauty. Vines over a door, where there is no porch, will prove bright and cheerful.

Salad Dressing.

One tablespoonful of flour, one tablespoonful of dry mustard, one tablespoonful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-half cup of sweet milk, one-half cup of vinegar, three-quarters cup of water, a lump of butter the size of a walnut. Mix flour, mustard, sugar and salt with a little of the water until smooth, then add the other ingredients and stir over the fire until thick.

Mock Mince Pie.

Roll out four crackers and stir into them one and one-half cups of sugar, one cup of molasses, one cup of cider, one cup of water, two-thirds of a cup of butter, melted, one cup of chopped raisins, spices to taste, and, last of all, two well-beaten eggs. Bake in a pie plate lined with good pastry and cover with an upper crust.

Hollandaise Sauce.

Cook together two tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour and pour on them a cup of heated milk. Beat to a smooth sauce. Take from the fire and beat in gradually the whipped yolk of an egg, a tablespoonful of salad oil, pepper, salt and sugar, a pinch of each, and the juice of half a lemon. Serve at once.

Bran Biscuits Again.

Two cups of cleaned wheat bran, one cup of white flour, one teaspoonful of baking soda, one teaspoonful of salt. Mix thoroughly and add one-half cup of molasses and one and one-half cups of sweet milk. Bake in gem tins in a slow oven for thirty minutes.

Chocolate Almonds.

Shell and blanch the almonds by pouring boiling water over them, then slipping off the skins. Lay on a towel until dry. Melt in a double boiler a cake of sweet chocolate and dip each almond quickly in this, rolling it over and over, and then lay on waxed paper to dry.

Bean Soup.

Cook small soup beans (which have been soaked over night) in the water in which the ham was boiled. About twenty minutes before serving add a couple of potatoes cut fine. No seasoning will be required. Serve very hot.

Looks Well and Tastes Well.

A round loaf-shaped sponge cake with the center scooped out and filled with diced pineapple and mixed with whipped cream and seasoned with sugar makes a sightly and tasty dessert. Decorate the top with cherries.

Oatmeal Soup.

Slice one large onion into one teaspoonful of melted butter. Add one cup of cooked oatmeal. Cook five minutes. Add two small cups of milk, one cup of stock and season. Strain. Boil up and serve hot.

Nut and Cream Sandwiches.

Chop very fine (or grind) two dozen English walnut meats. Whip half a cup of cream very stiff, add a little salt and add the minced or ground nuts and spread between slices of graham bread.

Olive and Cheese Sandwiches.

Chop a dozen stoned olives very fine. Rub a Philadelphia cream cheese to a paste with the minced olives and spread between crustless slices of bread cut thin.

Hints About the House.

Slice bananas over the cereal and serve with milk or cream.

A cloth wrung out of vinegar and wrapped round cheese will keep it from molding.

Stuffed potatoes are made by mixing cheese and bread crumbs in with the contents.

Ammonia water that has been used for washing may be used for plants. It is an excellent fertilizer.

Suede shoes that have become shiny and worn looking can be freshened by rubbing them with fine sandpaper.

A coarse cloth dipped in salt and water and rubbed over straw matting will prevent it from turning yellow.

Pour a little melted butter on top of cereals and cover with stewed prunes, figs, canned peaches or raspberries.

Boil pots and pans in water and washing soda. Scour enameled ware with one part of fine salt to two parts of fine sand.

A few allspice are an improvement to stews, thick soups and gravy. They give almost the same flavor as if wine had been added.

Plaster figures in hard or alabaster finish are easily cleaned by dipping a stiff toothbrush in gasoline and scrubbing into all the crevices.

Garments that are to be hung out to air can be put on hangers rather than pinned to the line. This prevents sagging or marking with the clothespins.

After the weekly washing rub a little vinegar and spirits of camphor over the hands. This will keep the hands in good condition summer and winter.

To remove ink stains from colored wash goods cover spots with lard, rub well, then wash in usual manner. While this method is simple, it is sure, and will not injure the most delicate colors.

When beating the whites of eggs for any purpose the busy housewife will find it a saving of time and the eggs will be stiffer and nicer in every way, if a pinch of salt is added before the beating begins.

Frederick M. Kerby, the young interior department stenographer who was dismissed because he admitted that Oscar Lawler, and appointee of Ballinger, had practically dictated President Taft's letter exonerating Ballinger, was the sole support of a mother, wife and babe. He had worked hard and conscientiously for five years to reach the position he occupied when dismissed.

Kerby was positive he would be discharged if he told his story. He thought tee matter over carefully for several weeks.

"I concluded that any allegiance I may have owed Mr. Ballinger," said Kerby, "was cancelled absolutely when, by his silence, he became a party to an attempt to smother the truth."

By making his exposures Kerby was probably treacherous to Ballinger and Ballinger's plans for turning over Alaska coal lands to the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate. But it is difficult to see how he was treacherous to the public in whose service he was employed.

In his speech on the tariff Champ Clark of Missouri declared that if President Taft had vetoed the Payne-Aldrich-Smoot bill, he could have written his name among the country's greatest benefactors. "But he let the golden opportunity go by unimproved," added the minority leader, "and it will never return to him as long as the grass grows or water runs."

EDWARD MAY, Your Tailor

REAL LIVE WASHINGTON GOSSIP

(BY TAVENNER)

The Payne Aldrich-Smoot tariff revision was upward!

It was upward by approximately 1.17 per cent!

It has already resulted in increased prices all along the line!

Thus did Champ Clark of Missouri, leader of the democrats in the House of Representatives, thunder his reply to the speeches of President Taft and other republican leaders who have attempted to feed the public on the assertion that the Payne-Aldrich bill "was the best tariff bill" ever passed.

Mr. Clark's speech had been carefully prepared. It was a complete and effective answer to the countless bald misrepresentations that have been manufactured by the Republicans, who are desperately in need of campaign material of any sort for use in the approaching Congressional election.

The Minority Leader denounced the proposed apprypriation of $250,000 of the people's money for toe purpose of enabling the republicans to gather data with which to prove that the new tariff law is a God-send to the country.

He denounced the joker in the sugar schedule. He depored a condition which permits the steel trust and other monopolies to sell their manufactured products cheaper to foreigners than to Americans. In short, Mr. Clark's speech will go down as one of the democratic keynotes of this session of Congress.

"It is true," admitted Mr. Clark "that we reduced the duty on lumber, and that the lumber trust marked up the price of lumber $1 per thousand feet before the last of us got out of Washington. And if the department of justice had done its duty it would by this time have filled the jails so full of lumber trust magnates that their arms and legs would stick out at the windows and the doors.

"Mr. Payne, the republican leader says that he and his cohorts will meet us in November. Glory be! glory be! I never looked forward to any day with such joy as I do to the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November except to mv wedding day and the days on which my children were born.

"My democratic brethren, at last, after hard trials and great tribulations thank God we stand here shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, solid as a stone wall, inspired by the hopes of coming victory. Democrats are getting together everywhere, while the republican party presents to the astonished gaze of men the appearance of a dissolving view.

"Oh yes, my republicrn friends, you will meet as in November, because you cannot help yourselves. And when you do meet us in November you will receive the bloodiest licking you have had since 1892. 'Up, guards, and at them!' "

"The new tariff classifications in the cotton schedule," says Senator Dolliver, republican, "operate to increase duties very materially on most cotton cloths used for women's and children's summer wear, and on mercerized cottons, figured curtain and upholstery goods, etc. In fact, the Aldrich revision of this schedule was one of the most daringly iniquitous features of the tariff. The production of agricultural implements is largely in the hands of a trust, and the trifling reduction of 5 per cent on these products was merely for the purpose of attempting to fool the farming community."

Although the colossal sum of $5,000,300 is carried by the sundry civil appropriation bill for the maintenance of soldiers' homes, the republicans are forcing the old soldiers of the nation to subsist on from 11 to 14 cents worth of food per day.

An inspector of the war department reported that the food in the soldiers' homes was no more in quanity than that supplied to prisoners in the federal penetentiaries.

An idea of the wasteful methods employed in conducting the homes may be hod from the fact that although the cost of maintenance more than double in the 10 years between 1898 ane 1908, the number of soldiers cared for had increased but 7 per cent.

"Let your imagination spread this outlay of 14 cents over a day's food supply," suggested Representative Cox of Ohio, "and you have an accurate picture of how the nation's heroes are being fed. Observe the evening meal and you will appreciate what it was that moved Inspector Brewster to pity, and inspired his recomendation that there be at least a bowl of milk added to the scant evening fare."

FREE TO YOU—MY SISTER

Free to You and Every Sister Suffering From Woman's Ailments.

I am a woman.
I know woman's sufferings.
I have found the cure.

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from women's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand women's sufferings. What we women know from experience, we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhoea or Whitish discharges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths; also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete ten days' treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember, that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial; and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book—"WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER" with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young. To Mothers of Daughters, I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhoea, Green Sickness and Painful or Irregular Menstruation in Young Ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality who know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all women's diseases, and makes women well, strong, plump and robust. Just send me your address, and the free ten days' treatment is yours, also the book. Write today, as you may not see this offer again. Address

Prolonging Life

While no way has yet been found to make life perpetual, it is a fact that life can be prolonged. Many people die before their time because the organs become clogged and cannot do their work. To keep the body open, active and free from impurities there must be no constipation, dyspepsia, flatulency, liver troubles, etc. If old or young people suffer from these complaints they can find a ready cure with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed and if you want to try it before buying send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1 a bottle. 18-1m

WORK THAT TELLS

The Kind Butler Readers Appreciate

Cures that last are cures that tell. To thoroughly know that virtues of a medicine you must investigate the cures and see if they prove permanent. Doan's Kidney Pills stand this test, and plenty of proof exists right here in this locality. People who testified years ago to relief from backache, kidney and urinary disorders, now declare that relief was permanent and the cure perfect. Can any Butler sufferer longer doubt the evidence?

A. A. Rowland, 408 S. Van Buren St., Auburn, Ind, says: "Some four years ago I had occasion to use Doan's Kidney Pills for a severe backache and a lameness through my loins. This remedy gave me prompt relief and I have since taken pleasure in recommending it to other kidney sufferers." (Statement given in April, 1906)

A PERMANENT EFFECT

On February 3, 1909, Mr. Rowland said: "You may continue the publication of my former statement regarding Doan's Kidney Pills. The relief they brought me has been lasting."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other. 20-2

Last Friday Howard W. Mountz of Garrett, was nominated by acclimation by the republicans at their convention, which took place at Waterloo. We have heard it said by some of the party that he is the weakest man of the three that were out for the place. It is easy to imagine what the democrats think.

The price of Butler real estate is on the upward grade. The lot that Will Tomlison sold at auction last Saturday, brought $250. It is located on the west side of North Broadway, and will be hit by the pavement assessment and a side walk which will run the price of the lot to something like $475. L. D. knisley was the purchaser with W. D. Miller bidding against him. Mr. Knisely is as good a judge of real estate as any man in Butler, and he thinks he got it at a bargain. The lot is one of the most desirable building sites in the city, and no doubt will be worth double what it sold for in a short time. Mr. Miller is an Indianapolis man, who sees a bright future for Butler, hence his bids.

Mrs. Marion Knepper is on the sick list.

Mrs. Mary Scoville, of Angola, is the guest of relatives here this week.

The rabies season is here again and with the experience of other year's before us, it would seem unnecessary to urge that precaution should be taken and yet we see dogs running at large all over the country without muzzles. Let us not wait till the horse is stolen to lock the barn.

Many Butler people are looking forward to the coming of Will Carleton, June 9, with a great deal of pleasure Herr Co. No. 63, U. R. K. of P., will have work on that date and the city will be full of people from the neighboring towns of Kendallville, Waterloo, Hamilton, Edgerton and perhaps Auburn. It is the enterprising spirit of this company that brings Mr. Carleton here. The company is not going into it for the money consideration. Having heard the great poet, Captain Geo. W. Geddes became his admirer, and for a long time has had his application in for an open date, when at last the word came that he could be here on the above date. One thing about Mr. Carleton, whatever he says in his entertainments is his own thoughts and not something which originated in some other man's brain. Here he comes after years of experience and a successful life to visit Butler and give the people an evening of entertainment. Nearly every family library has one or more volumes of his works, and now is the time to hear the author recite what you have many times read, and laughed and cried together. Price 35 and 50 cents. Tickets reserved at Stone's drug store. Don't miss it.

THROUGH NATURE TO GOD

Written For the Herald By Rev. Edmund F. Albertson, D. D. of Methodist Church

Every thing exists for something higher than itself. Here is the ministry of sacrifice. Substitution and advancing order are evident. You do not live by bread alone. Myriad agencies combine to furnish you with food, raiment and comfort. All things are yours These earthly creatures are a scaffolding for the heavenly temple of those who are heirs of the Infinite. Hail, snow, sun, wind are golden argosies freighted with treasures for you. Can you count the number of forces or persons whose combined effort resulted in making the loaf of bread you have on your table?

We may see God in all His creations. In the study of plant life we see marvelous proofs of His goodness and power. If you, beholding these wonders, conclude that in the making of the earth with its abundant stores of rich treasures the Creator had you in mind, you will not be far from the realm of truth. He thinketh upon you. He would lead you to His own bosom, and give you of His bounty.

It is easy to so spell out the history of creation that you see order, law, regularity, variety, utility, beauty "Consider the lilies." There is a fine relation between the world of plants and humans. The completer ministry of trees, flowers, and fruits is evident only as it offers help to man.

All flowering plants are devided into two families, the rose family and the lily family. The plants of the former are an immense number of genera and species. In beauty of form, color, structure, and manifold utility they outrank the lily family, comprising some of the rarest and fairest flowering plants, and highly prized fruits, as the cherry, peach, and apple. Here we find the flowers with five petals (or multiples of five) In the lily family the flowers have three petals (or multiples of three. This family is not so beautiful or useful as the rose family.

Wondrous, indeed, are the methods of our Creator for perpetuating the species of plants. One grain of corn will, when planted under favorable conditions, produce eight hundred grains. One plant of the chickweed will produce in one season as many as three thousand seeds. A plant of shepherd's purse will yield sixteen thousand seeds to a root.

Consider the growth of corn. After it is a few inches high it forms nodes, or joints, with a long, narrow leaf at each joint. Theses leaves act as a kind of trough to conduct moisture to the stalk, and the plant grows upward at each joint. In this way the growth of the cornstalk is very rapid. Wheat and many other kinds of grain and grasses have this same provision. Trees do not grow in height this way, but only at the uppermost extremity of the branches. Grains of wheat were found in the wrappings of an Egytian mummy. Being placed in warm, damp soil, they grew, and produced grain.

There are just as many grains on an ear of corn as there are silks at the end of the ear. These silks must each be touched with the golden pollen from the cells of the tassels ere the grain will ripen. What a sermon in a stalk of corn or blade of grass or a lily! "If God so clothe the grass of the field . . . will He not much more clothe you?"

In all nature's laboratory there is no loss. The flower "born to blush unseen" does not "waste its sweetness on the desert air." It has its mission, and fulfills its Maker's purpose. Humboldt found a graceful little flower blooming on the side of a mountain in the melting snow. His emotions were aroused more by that fragrant blossom growing there, than they had ever been as he gazed upon gardens of roses. A poet found a modest violet blooming from the sight of men. He was taught a lesson, and prayed that he might learn to grow in sweet humility. Linnaeus constructed a floral clock, based upon the regularity of the growth of plants and the blooming of flowers.

An apple is only a modified form of the branch. An illustration of this is seen in the pineapple, where the branch or limb has grown on beyond the fruit. The thorns on the tree are also dwarfed, modified branches. Should we not rejoice that all the modified, dwarfed branches are not developed thorns? In the growth of the apple it represents some of the very laws that govern the universe. It is a chemical laboratory. Some of the greatest wonders of the physical world are at work upon its form. It is a creature of the tree, earth, moisture, Sunshine.

In its growth from the five-petaled blossom of the early springtime to the autumn harvest it speaks of nature's mysterious ways, and says to the thoughtfull one, to the student of nature, that the very laws that mold a sphere, and guide the courses of the planets have operated to bring it to petfection, and to show forth the glory of God, for He is in all this. And this God is our God.

The wise woman marries a homely man because the contrast is in her favor.

The man who expects to get legal advice for nothing should marry a woman lawyer.

The government is going to give us weather tips while we wait. That's the way to get the weather.

It is not the size of a woman's hat so much as the cost of it that worries the man who pays the bill.

Andrew Carnegie recently referred to "that worthless dross called money." After all that money has done for him, too!

If that London bank for women desires to win a big success it should make a specialty of 99-cent and $1.98 deposits.

An elevator has been installed in St. Peter's at Rome. Will somebody now please give the Sphinx an extension telephone?

A professor tells young women they should pick their husbands. Of course, but they shouldn't pick them before they are ripe.

In our Atlantic fleet there are 2,500 sailors who cannot swim. They prefer to be the men behind the guns, which they hope will keep afloat.

Being the divorced wife of a New York millionaire is a much more lucrative position than some others in which the duties are more exacting.

One of the college professors wants to know why Americans are unhappy. One reason is that the people next door make it so difficult to live as expensively as they do.

Little Evelyn announces that she is going to Paris for the purpose of studying sculpture and living quietly. No mercy should be shown to anybody who attempts to hold her.

Now a London doctor has arisen to declare that mankind is losing the sense of smell. Those who live within range of tannery aroma will welcome the news with unalloyed joy.

A Philadelphia magistrate has held that taking an umbrella from a friend is not criminal, but taking one from a stranger is larceny. But a man who has his umbrella taken can scarcely be called a friend of the taker.

Men who are willing to pay $50 a seat for the purpose of witnessing the fight between Hon. Jeffries and Hon. Johnson should at least have the good taste to refrain from complaining around home about the cost of living.

Perhaps not a cruel, but certainly a most unusual, form of punishment was that inflicted upon the young women of a Western college, who for some forbidden frolic were required to commit to memory the Constitution of the United States.

American men of science are more gallant than those of England. For example, a London anthropologist has lately declared that a human skull found at Gibraltar is that of a woman six hundred thousand years old. Americans pooh-pooh the idea, and decline to be so ungentlemanly as to look at a woman's teeth to discover her age—the idea of treating a lady as a horse!—and insist that the only way to tell anything about her is by a study of the circles in which she lives.

Foreign steamship companies doing business with American ports must pay the corporation tax, according to a recent opinion of the Attorney General. His opinion is based on the provision of the law which makes all foreign corporations amenable to the tax on that part of their business done here. There are great difficulties in the way of ascertaining on what proportion of its income a foreign steamship company should pay a tax; but if the Supreme Court finds that the law is constitutional, a way can be found for collecting an approximately just tax from the steamship companies. The government maintains that the tax is in the nature of a license fee levied on the privilege of doing business. Its opponents insist that it is a direct tax on property, and is therefore unconstitutional.

There are so many things suggested for the multimillionaires to do that it is not strange that they halt and hesitate. But nowhere among all the objects in the vast range of American giving, from marble medical colleges to orchestral music, is the great cause of the American theater to be found. It must be pretty low down to have earned so singular an isolation. In all the giving has anybody been known to set aside anything for raising the common level of American cultivation through the drama? And is not this specialty puzzling, considering how immensely fond of the theater the American people are and how much money they spend in going to the play? Perhaps Mr. Carnegie would say that people must learn to read before they can get the highest good out of the drama, which embraces literature and the fine arts; while, of course, so moral a millionaire as Mr. Rockefeller, who has probably never entered a theater, would not wish to promote or even countenance anything so manifestly tending to immorality.

Friendship among nations does not spring from the same causes which promote friendship among individuals. Blood relationship does not assure it. For a century America and England, similar in race and identical in language, were suspicious and irritable when not openly hostile. Propinquity does not count for much. France and England were enemies for centuries, and France only forgot her hatred for "perfidious Albion" when she transferred it to another next-door neighbor, Germany. Likeness of temperament, political institutions or religious belief is not its source, else why the traditional friendship of Russia and the United States, unlike in every particular, and the famous rivalry between France and Austria, superficially sympathetic, which for a hundred and fifty years after Richelieu established it was the central fact of European politics? As a matter of fact, national friendships or enmities are determined not by the people themselves, but by their governments; not by reasons of race or principle, but by reasons of policy. Commercial or political rivalry, the preservation of the "balance of power," identity or divergence of material interests, lie at the bottom of wars and alliances alike. That is why England, for centuries naturally attracted to German friendship, is now in strained relations with the Kaiser's empire. It accounts also for her alliance with distant Japan, who, like herself, is jealous and suspicious of Russia. The sentimental admiration for Japan, which roused the United States to sympathy for her during the Russian war, already shows signs of cooling as a result of political conditions. National friendships, then, are rarely permanent; they shift with the changing face of world politics. But national animosities may be forgotten almost as easily, and it is an encouraging fact that in spite of the bitterness of modern commercial competition, open hatred between peoples is less common than it ever was before, whereas the good-will which shows itself in a readiness to arbitrate disputes without straining national amity increases year by year.

RIGHTS OF AUTHOR.

New York Court Rules on the Legal Aspect of the Nom de Plume.

A decision of interest to authors, especially to those who have written at some time under a nom de plume, was made by Justice Seabury, in special term of the Supreme court to-day, the New York Evening Sun says. He granted the application of Edward S. Ellis, author, for issuance of a temporary injunction restraining Thomas D. Hurst and Richard Hurst from selling, circulating or disposing of the books known as "The White Mustang" and "In the Apache Country," containing thereon the name of Edward S. Ellis, and from using the name of Ellis in connection with the books in any manner for advertising purposes.

Justice Seabury set forth in his decision that Ellis has been a writer of juvenile and historical books for more than 40 years, and that his reputation as a writer has been established under his own name.

The court said that "The White Mustang" and "In the Apache Country" were first published in a periodical called the Argosy in 1889, when they were published under the nom de plume "Lieut. R. H. Jayne," and were not copyrighted.

Nathan Burkan, counsel for Ellis, asserted that the defendants did not have the legal right to publish the two books under the name of Ellis or to use Ellis' name on the books or the wrappers. In sustaining this contention the court said, in part:

"The name of the plaintiff was in no way used in connection with these publications until the defendants assumed to use the plaintiff's name in this connection. It is admitted that the plaintiff never granted to the defendants the right to use his name. . . . The plaintiff claims no literary property in the stories and does not seek to restrain their publication, sale or distribution under the name of Lieut. R. H. Jayne. The purpose of this action is to restrain the defendants from using the plaintiff's name in connection with the publications."

In conclusion the court said that in his opinion Ellis was entitled to an injunction which shall restrain such illegal use of his name.

HIGHEST CRIMINAL RECORD.

One In Every Five Natives Has Been in Jail in the Rand.

According to the recent report of J. de V. Roos, secretary of the law department and director of prisons, the Rand contains more criminals to the thousand inhabitants than any other place in the civilized world, the London correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger says.

The population is about 1,500,000. In 1909 one out of every 245 was convicted. These convictions have risen from 33,255 in 1904 to 89,005 in 1909. There were also last year 5,585 undetected crimes, including 27 murders, 21 cases of arson, 12 forgeries and 131 robberies. Arrests for 1909 included 4,335 male whites and 834 women, 91,063 colored males and 3,493 colored women.

The most serious part of the report is that dealing with the marked increase in native crime. Native prisoners sentenced by the courts as first offenders are constantly being recognized as old offenders, nor will this defect disappear until the finger-print records as to natives are made universal. Nominally 92.42 per cent of all criminals of all races are given as first offenders for the year under review and 7.58 per cent recidivists.

During the last five years 182,680 natives have passed through the prisons—roughly, one-fifth of the total native population. In other words, the prison has lost its terrors for the native. It has been made too cheap, and familiarity breeds contempt for it. It was quite a common thing for the natives who had on them money sufficient to pay their fines in petty offenses to select the alternative of the week's or fortnight's imprisonment, with the usual risk of the native petty offender being locked up with hardened criminals and educated to crime.

Enchanted Rock.

The "Enchanted Rock," in the San Saba valley, Texas, rises 200 feet from a plain, and can be seen for several miles. In the moonlight it presents a striking resemblance to an immense castle with many windows brilliantly lighted, this effect being caused by the reflection of the moon's rays from numerous polished surfaces of quartz and pyrites of copper. The Comanches believe it to be one of the abodes of the Great Spirit, and regard it with much reverence.

We have progressed so far that "being good about taking medicine" is no longer regarded as the principal virtue of childhood.

MARK TWAIN.

Chicago Record-Herald.

His hands fall from the wheel; he looks no more
To see what reef or shoal may be ahead,
What narrow channel there may be to thread,
What jagged rocks may jut out from the shore!
What message is it that the leadsmen send?
"MARK TWAIN!" The troubled engines cease to throb,
The song the breezes sang ends in a sob;
The trip is done—the world has lost a friend.

On lips he taught to smile the laughter dies,
The sun shines with a lesser, fainter glow;
Along the shores where mirth was spread a low,
Sad murmur passes, and, with tear-dimmed eyes,
Men look out on the stream, yet, while they gaze,
In silence share the comforting belief
That, safe in port, beyond the last dread reef,
His soul is gladdened by a Captain's praise.

THE ENCHANTED SHEEP-FOLD.

The hills far off were blue, blue,
The hills at hand were brown;
And all the herd-bells called to me
As I came by the down.

The briars turned to roses—roses;
Ever we stayed to pull
A white little rose, and a red little rose,
And a lock of silver wool.

Nobody heeded—none, none;
And then True Love came by.
They thought him naught but the shepherd boy,
Nobody knew but I!

The trees were feathered like birds, birds;
Birds were in every tree,
Yet nobody heeded, nobody heard,
Nobody knew save me.

And he is fairer than all—all;
How could a heart go wrong?
For his eyes I knew, and his knew mine,
Like an old, old song.

—Josephine Preston Peabody.

A Woman's "No"

Cyril Otterson proposed to me for the first time at Henley regatta. We were in a Canadian canoe, and Cyril pleaded his cause passionately into my left ear in the intervals between pushing boats and punts out of our path. Why he chose such a ridiculous time I have never understood, and I found it exceedingly difficult to convey my answer to him with the decision and clearness I should have liked—that answer being a decided negative.

A widow of 23, with a tidy income, never lacks admirers of a sort; add a certain amount of good looks, which I know, without conceit, I possess, and men become a positive nuisance.

"No, Cyril, dear," I said, "I really couldn't. You know I like you awfully, and, what's more, you amuse me, and, of course, we shall always be pals. But marriage, dear, never again; so let's leave it at that."

"All right," said Cyril, in that peculiarly aggravating way he has; "all right, old girl, but I'm a long way from beaten, and you wait and see; I shall marry you somehow."

The second time he proposed to me was in a box at the theater. It happened to be a very pathetic play, and Cyril, who has no idea of the fitness of things, kept whispering words of love and adoration, while the audience were in a state of dreadful suspense as to whether an erring wife would return to her husband or no. When I had the opportunity, which was during the entr'act, I said to him: "Now, Cyril, don't be silly; you know quite well that I have given you my final answer."

Cyril said nothing much beyond reiterating his former statement that I was the only woman in the world for him, and other nonsense of that sort, and that he was not beaten. The third time that he proposed to me was in my own drawing room. He had been in a more or less dormant state for awhile, and that being so, I thought there was no great harm in asking him to tea. We first of all talked about the usual banalties; but, somehow, though I tried desperately hard to keep off dangerous topics, we soon found ourselves in deep water.

"I say, Muriel," he said, Muriel being my name, "it's going to be beastly not seeing you all October and November, and I've been thinking things over, and I have an idea, rather a good one, I think."

"Oh," I answered "what's the idea? Something sensible, I hope. You know my mind quite well on certain points."

"Yes, I know all that, but, as a matter of fact, you don't know yourself as well as I do. What are the plain facts? Firstly, that I simply adore the ground you walk on, that I am head over ears in love with you, with the complete You, mental, physical and spiritual, or, if you like it better, body and soul. I want your companionship all my life, and with it can do things, without it I can't. Secondly, you are all alone, and you admit I amuse you; well, then, why shouldn't I amuse you perpetually? Anyhow, you can't really suppose that I'm going to accept a negative answer. Why, Muriel, dear, it's impossible, and if you won't make up your mind the way I want, then I am going to do it for you. I propose we get married on February 7. I'll go ahead and make all the arrangements and it'll just give you time to clear off your engagements."

I must admit his cheek simply paralyzen me, and I said: "Now, look here, Cyril, you know I am quite fond of you, but there is a limit even to friendship. The idea of your daring to make a cold-blooded proposition like that to me is simply staggering."

He made no direct reply, merely murmuring some nonsense about Monte Carlo having points over Cairo in the month of February. Then he buttoned up his coat, and said he must be off; kissed my hand—he's never dared to go farther than that—and said: "All right, Muriel, don't worry; you'll hear from me, and remember the seventh."

The next I heard of Cyril was about a month later, that being towards the end of November. He wrote a long letter, narrating all his shoots and so on, and then, if you please, ended up with the following postscript: "Don't forget the 7th of February. I am quite sure that Monte will be more amusing than Cairo, unless you particularly want to go to Egypt. We shall have a ripping time, and I can't tell you how I'm looking forward to it."

Of course, I had to answer, and likewise gave him my views on the matter in a postscript. It ran: "Don't be an idiot. I hate silly jokes, and I don't even know where I shall be on the date you mention."

December passed off quickly, Cyril only writing once, saying he was making all his arrangements, and sending me a perfectly lovely bracelet—a flexible gold snake with an emerald head and tiny ruby eyes. It was simply too fascinating, and, as Cyril said it was for Christmas, I saw no harm in keeping it, besides which I was fond of him in a way.

I WENT.

In January I was once more back in town at my own flat, and he came to see me. He looked awfully fit and nice after his country spell, and never even referred to what I call unpleasant subjects till just as he was going, when he said casually, "Don't forget the date, dear, will you?"

"I thought that joke was quite exploded," I answered uneasily, for somehow there was something very compelling about him, which I wished to hide from myself.

"Exploded, dearest; what do you think I am about?" and he caught me by the hands and looked straight into my eyes. "Don't you know the truth yet, that I love you with every fiber of my being, and don't you also know that I'm going to make you love me every bit as much?"

With his departure, a feeling that I had been very near the brink of surrender overcame me, and I began to allow to myself that my life was at times more than a little lonely, and that being looked after by Cyril had its points. Day by day I turned the question over in my thoughts, and day by day I found myself weakening.

Moreover, I had seen no more of him, and he had not even written. Men don't realize what a weapon is theirs—one which always conquers the weaker sex—the feeling that perhaps they are not paying one as much attention as heretofore. In fact, I was becoming actually worried—it was not the end of January and I had made no plans. Somehow I felt disinclined to, and the most absurd part was that I found myself packing mechanically all my prettiest dresses, to the astonishment of my maid, who asked me where I was going. I said Monte Carlo, which I positively hoped now was true.

February came and still no news, with the result that I began to work myself into a fever.

It seems almost incredible, but the silence remained unbroken till the evening of the 6th, when I received a telegram containing three words, "Remember the 7th!"

Remember, why I had done nothing but think of it all the time, and now, at the very last minute, came a message like that. The man must be mad; how could one be married at a minute's notice?

I spent a horrible night, and came down in the morning feeling miserable, and, what was much worse, ugly.

About 10 o'clock in walked Cyril, calm and collected as though it was a most ordinary proceeding.

"Well, little girl," he said, "are you coming? I've got a special license from doctors' commons, and we've just time to get married, have a bite of lunch at The Berkley, and catch the afternoon Continental express."

I went.—Alan Sethbridge in M. A. P.

ALFONSO HAS A DOUBLE.

King Enjoys Joke Played on Matador Who Had One Great Ambition.

It is said that all have their "double" in this world, and apparently kings are no exception to this rule. King Alphonso has his and thereby hangs the following tale:

A matador who styles himself El Valientito has or rather had an overpowering ambition—one indeed which had become a perfect obsession with him—and this was to be presented to King Alfonso; but months passed on and his desire did not seem likely to be gratified.

A certain youth residing in Madrid is the image of the king in nearly every particular, a correspondent of the New York World says. Indeed, when in Paris some three or four years ago he was often mistaken for him, many newspapers of that capital announcing that his majesty was there incognito.

This youth determined that if El Valientito could not be received by the real king he should salute his double, and so, with the connivance of trusted friends who quite entered into the spirit of the thing, arranged that on a certain afternoon "his majesty" would visit the bull fighters' casino so that the matador should then be presented to him.

El Valientito was duly informed and, arraying himself in his best, convinced that the dream of his life was about to be accomplished, awaited the visit of "his majesty" and in due time was presented to him. He afterward expressed himself as charmed with the "king's" affability.

Not for a long while did the matador learn of the hoax which had been played on him. Now he has vowed vengeance on its perpetrator.

No one laughed more heartily over this adventure than King Alfonso himself when he heard of it. It is rumored that in the kindness of his heart he may send for El Valientito and concede to him an authentic interview.

Staggering.

Suffragette—What is a party without women?

Mere Man (flippantly)—A stag party.

Suffragette—Exactly. And what, sir, would this nation be without women but stagnation?—Christian Register.

Even baseball fans can't keep the flies off.

Democracy the Nation's Hope.

There is a tidal wave of Democracy rising in the hearts of the people of this country. Whether the Democratic party rides on its crest, or is smothered beneath it, depends upon the Democratic party being Democratic. If the party is dominated by the agents of special privilege, it will not benefit by this growing sentiment against privilege. If the party anywhere bows down to the Golden Calf and prostitutes itself to the greed of special interests, this tidal wave will sweep it into deserved defeat.

Thomas Jefferson taught that the leaders of the party must hold their power by heeding the just demands of the people, not by hushing them. When a breach occurs between the leaders of the party and the masses in any State, the party must either have new leaders or its disaster is near. If the Democratic party is to succeed it must be progressive, not reactionary. There is a battle going on in this nation today between progress and reaction, between dollars and men, between money and morals, between privilege and equal rights. If the Democratic party is true to its ideals it must stand for progress and put men above dollars, morals above money and equal rights above privilege. If the party is not true to its own principles, it cannot expect the people to be true to it.

There has been too much shouting of party names and too little teaching of the principles that political parties are supposed to stand for. We have reached the point in this country that when a man says he is a Democrat, or a Republican, it does not necessarily reflect the principles he believes in, and if he expresses the principles of government in which he believes we cannot tell from that what political party he belongs to. The hope of the nation must be in the principles of Democracy, and what the Democratic party needs is to take an affirmative stand for them. There is an independent spirit abroad in the land to-day, and it is to this spirit we must appeal. The party must convince the people not what it proposes to do for itself, but what it can do for them. An aggressive fight for progressive ideas will do more in winning political battles than all the gold that could be poured into the party treasury.

If the Republican party does not represent privilege, then it has no reason for existence, for the Democratic party represents the other side, founded as it was upon the maxim, "Equal rights to all, special privilege to none." This motto embraces every essential of real Democracy. Whatever the political problem before us, we may safely seek its solution by this rule.—Joseph W. Folk in the National Monthly.

Insurging in Unexpected Spots.

In the most unexpected places insurgency is turning up in most unexpected strength. In Maine a movement closely allied with the insurgent movement of the West has already made astonishing headway against Senator Eugene Hale.

In the direction of party affairs in his home State this son-in-law of Zach Chandler has adopted many of the Chandler methods. But things that were tolerated a generation ago are obnoxious to those of this generation, and in all the thirty years of his service in the Senate things have never looked as threatening for Mr. Hale as they do this year.

Judge Frederick A. Powers is the candidate against him, and it is declared that if the direct nomination prevailed in Maine he would easily win the election. And his prospect before the Legislature is by no means unfavorable. Senator Hale has a strong-arm hold on the party as a whole, but it happens that the counties in which he is strongest have lately been sending Democrats to the Legislature quite regularly, whereas most of the Powers counties send Republicans. If this colleague of Mr. Aldrich, the man who ranks second to him in the party of the Rhode Islanders and standpatters, escapes defeat, he will at least have gathered a heightened respect for the strength of insurgency.

And another place where insurgency is showing up strong is none other than the district of John Dalzell, original standpatter, who is so intimately identified with another phase of Republican policies that if Cannonism did not bear that name it would be called Dalzellism. The graft scandal in Pittsburg has unsettled everything in politics and there is a vociferous demand for a change in Congress as well as elsewhere. Mr. Dalzell is described as seriously alarmed, for the first time in twenty-two years, and hastily left Washington Saturday for Pittsburg to look after his political interests.

In discussing Beveridge, Governor Marshall of Indiana, in an interview in the New York Times estimates that "not more than 40 per cent of the Republicans of that State are insurgents," while 60 per cent are standpatters and not specially interested in Beveridge. Forty per cent! How much would the most enthusiastic insurgent want? If there are 20 per cent it will mean a Democratic Indiana delegation in the next Congress.—St. Louis Republic.

The Firing Line.

The Republican party promised, in its last national platform, to lessen the tariff burden of the American consumer.

What intelligent Republicans think of the so-called redemption of their party's pledge is seen by the Republican revolt from Massachusetts to the Pacific coast, and particularly throughout the Middle West.

There is now little doubt that the States of Indiana, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Missouri and Iowa will solidly oppose the administration's standpat policy on the tariff.

There is deep significance in the fact that most of the great producing States of the Middle West—the seat of the nation's agricultural empire—are in active revolt against the Republican party's failure to lift the tariff burdens of the country's real workers.

In the Middle States the Republican party was born. And it is here that the party for its faithlessness will receive the death blow.—Chicago Journal.

Roosevelt Against Cannon.

That the former president will put a climax to his hunting with the scalp of Joe Cannon is the belief of many shrewd observers of affairs. The insurgent faction in the House will doubtless avail itself of the "big stick" if other means fail of their aim. They tentatively propose to bring Roosevelt to Congress and run him for Speaker against Cannon. This is the purport of a story by Alfred Henry Lewis, in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. In accounting for the causes which turned his own party against Cannon, Mr. Lewis says:

"Mr. Cannon is to-day deeply hated in his district. By his knee-bending subserviency to the money god and his prompt willingness to sway the House to its dull worship, he has reared up against himself a wall of opposition. Mr. Cannon is the House despot, with powers in excess of those which appertain to nominal despots, as czars or sultans. Tariffs, appropriations, all House things, are under his thumb. And while a certain list of favored members seem free to talk and vote and act, should you look closely you will see that they are but Mr. Cannon's puppets, talking with his tongue, voting by his decision, acting through his strength.

"Each morning Mr. Cannon brings into the House a list of what members he will 'recognize.' No one goes upon that sacred roll until he has explained to Mr. Cannon in private what he will talk about and what he will talk. The gavel, plus the rules, is a gag, and Mr. Cannon can hold what member he will, for what period he pleases, as wordless as the Sphinx."

Navy and Ship Subsidy.

Secretary Meyer's plan for a grand naval parade around the world in 1912 does not appeal to peace-loving, sensible Americans. Nor should Congress entertain his requests for vast appropriations to that end.

The man who arms himself to the teeth and calls on his neighbor with his weapons displayed invites trouble, and is pretty sure to be accommodated. The nation that persists in parading its navy in foreign waters on a war footing must take the blame if its challenge is accepted.

The friendly visit of an American warship or two to a foreign port is an act of peace; a score of warships, outfitted for a naval campaign, assume very much the appearance of a hostile demonstration.

But danger of disturbing the international peace is not the only argument against the around-the-world parade of American ships. If Congress can be persuaded into providing battleships for this imposing pageant, the next cry will be for colliers, and the country will be told that a sufficient number of colliers to accompany the fleet can only be insured by a ship subsidy.

The proposed voyage can add no laurels to the administration, and would serve no purpose, except possibly to bolster the failing ship subsidy scheme. The possible relation of the Meyer plan to the subsidy propaganda is alone enough to stamp it as undesirable.

The Dial of Discontent.

The stubborn fight in the House of Representatives between fellow members of the ruling political party is more significant than appears on the surface.

Only short-sighted readers of the political dial claim that the Republican split can be patched up again by diplomacy, and everything made harmonious for the November elections. Everything points to a revival of true Democratic principles on the great issues that confront the American people to-day.

The smashing of "standpat" machinery in the House of Representatives was only an incident. It came, in the fullness of time, because behind it was the overpowering discontent of millions of American voters.

The average Congressman knows every shade of fluctuating opinion on public issues among his constituents. The destruction of the House "organization" by a coalition of progressives of both parties was in response to an avalanche of public opinion.

The conviction in the minds of the American people that special privilege "interests" were running Congress to suit themselves developed into a demand for action.

The Republican split is not an ordinary party difference, but a new alignment, based on new habits of political thought and action, which can not be reconciled.

The Call to Arms.

Patriots, all over this broad land, are preparing to take the control of Congress out of the hands of the agents of robber trusts, which have raised the cost of living to the danger point. To do this they must ignore normal party alignments. They face a national crisis.

That is the sole explanation of the rising tide of independence within Republican party ranks. The Republican "regular" leaders find their party shibboleths useless. A new issue has arisen that dwarfs even the past glories of that historic organization.

This would cease to be a true government of the people if intelligent patriots did not place principle above party. The most terrific drubbing in the Republican party's history is due. And it will come at the hands of its own members and followers.

The present call to arms is the call of enlightened, conscientious statesmanship to break the chains that bind the plain American people to the chariot wheels of monopoly and special privilege.

The Newlyweds.

"Dearest!"

"What is it, pet?"

"I simply must have a new morning gown."

"But, lovey——"

"Listen! The new cook will be here before noon, and I haven't a decent frock to receive her in!"

The Wand of Sleep
OR
The Devil-Stick

By the Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," Etc.

CHAPTER XXII.—(Continued.)

The door opened to admit—Dr. Etwald. Both the Major and the Creole stared at him in surprise, as neither for the moment could grasp the idea that he had been bold enough to present himself before those whom he had so deeply wronged.

"Ah," said Etwald, as complacently as ever, "I thought I should find you here, Major; but I hardly expected to see Mrs. Dallas."

"You villain!" cried that lady, starting from her seat. "Do you think I want to see you after all the misery you have caused? Why, I refuse even to remain in the same room with you!" And with a furious gesture the Creole swept past Etwald and out of the door, which she banged loudly. Etwald looked at the door, shrugged his shoulders, and turned politely to the Major.

"It is just as well she is gone," said he, quietly. "It is better than our conversation should be private."

"I wish to hold no conversation with a scoundrel, sir!" cried Jen, purple with rage. "I'll have you turned out of the house."

"In that case you'll never hear what I have come to tell you."

"What is that, sir?" demanded Jen, in a calmer tone.

"The truth! My story is quite different to that of Dido."

"David's was different also."

"I know it. But my story—the true story—differs even from David's. Will you hear it, Major, or shall I leave your house before I suffer the disgrace of being kicked out?"

The Major considered for a few moments before replying. There was a hinted mystery in the manner of Etwald which puzzled him not a little. Moreover, he wished to know the actual facts of the case, and now that Dido had fled, Etwald was he only one who could tell them. Acting upon these considerations, Jen sat down again in his chair and sulkily gave Etwald permission to remain and explain. This the doctor proceeded to do at once.

"As you are aware," said he, calmly, "I escaped the charge of murder, and very right, too, seeing that I was innocent of the crime. But as to the stealing of the body I am guilty. I am out on bail and must come up for trial soon, on the charge that I spoke of. However, I am not afraid, as I can defend myself in a manner you little dream of. But being out on bail, I came to see you."

"To tell me more lies."

"To tell you the truth, my dear Major; and I assure you that the truth will surprise you not a little. But, by the way—Major—Dido?"

"She has fled."

"I saw it. She was afraid of me."

"Hardly," replied Jen, a trifle spitefully. "You have lost the Voodoo Stone, remember."

"Yes. I was taken advantage of for once in my life. A cunning woman, that Dido. She got permission to see me in prison, and to talk to me alone, under the pretence of seeing me about her evidence. Knowing that I could compel her to do what I wished by means of the Voodoo Stone, I saw her with pleasure, as it was my intention to put the words likely to get me off—to prove my innocence—into her mouth. However, while I was talking to her, she suddenly produced a phial of the devil-stick poison, and threw it in my face. Of course, I instantly became unconscious, and it was then that she wrenched the talisman off my watch-chain."

"Is the poison so quick in its effects, then?"

"I should think so," said Etwald, coldly. "You saw how David fell in court, after wounding his hand. I fell in prison quite as quickly, but as my skin was not scratched, and the drug only took effect through the nostrils, I recovered."

"And when you recovered?"

"The gaoler told me that Dido had called him in, saying that I had fainted. While they were getting me round Dido went off with the Voodoo Stone. Those about the prison had no reason to detain her, so she left. When I found the Voodoo Stone gone," added Etwald, impressively, "I knew that the black wretch would give evidence against me, and that the game was at an end."

"You expected to be hanged?" suggested Jen.

"Well, no," replied the doctor, with wonderful coolness. "I did not expect that. If the worst came to the worst, I knew that I could protect myself; but I must admit tha he confession of my counsel, Mr. Sarby, ook me somewhat by surprise."

"Poor David!" sighed Jen, thinking of the young man cut off in the bloom of his youth.

"Poor David!" echoed Etwald, with a sneer. "Foolish David, you might say, to die for the sake of a woman."

"Yet you risked death for the same woman."

"I risked danger for the woman's fortune," retorted Etwald, with revolting candor. "It was the money I wanted. But death, no, I did not risk that."

"I am not so sure of that, Etwald. How did you know that David would confess in so dramatic a fashion?"

"I did not know it, Major. As I said before, his confession took me by surprise. Still, as I was innocent, I knew that I could not be hanged."

"Well," said Jen, growing weary of this long-continued conversation, which seemed to lead to nothing, "at all events, you'll not escape a long term of imprisonment."

"Why?" said Etwald, with an agreeable smile. "There are two opinions about that. Mine is that I shall go free. Then," he added, coolly, "I intend to seek Barbadoes, and search for that black witch in order to recover the Voodoo Stone."

"I hope you'll get the change of going; but I doubt it. However, if you do get as far as the West Indies, you'll find friends there. Mrs. Dallas and her daughter go back to their estates in Barbadoes within the month."

"Really!" said Etwald, again. "Then I may marry her after all."

"She won't have you."

"Oh, I think so. I have a means of compelling her to marry me."

Jen jumped up with a scowl.

"I'm tired of your enigmas," he cried, angrily. "What is it you wish to tell me?"

"The name of the person who committed the murder!"

"I know it. David Sarby!"

"Not at all! He accused himself to shield the real person!"

"To shield the assassin?" gasped Jen, thunderstruck. "And who is the assassin?"

"Can't you guess from his self-accusation? Why, the woman he loved!"

"Isabella?"

"Exactly. Isabella Dallas, and none other, killed your boy, Maurice."

CHAPTER XXIII.

"Isabella killed Maurice!" said Jen, pushing back his chair. "Impossible, Doctor. You must be mistaken."

"I don't think so!" replied Etwald, dryly. "I saw her do it. So did David."

"You must be mistaken!" insisted the Major once more. "David was in New York on the night when the crime was committed."

"By his own confession in court, David was in the grounds of Mrs. Dallas on that night."

"Yes, yes. You are right!" said Jen, in a bewildered tone. "Still, I cannot believe that Isabella killed Maurice. She loved him dearly, and had no reason to murder him."

"None in the world. Yet she certainly took his life. Come, Major, I won't worry you any longer with inquiries. Dido hypnotized the daughter to commit the crime, as she had willed the mother to steal the devil-stick. Isabella is absolutely ignorant of what she did, and firmly believed that I was the guilty person. Now, of course, she thinks David—by his own confession—is the assassin."

"But David confessed himself guilty to save her?"

"Of course; but Isabella does not know that. She thinks—and, on the face of it, with reason—that David killed Maurice out of jealousy."

"How was it David saw the crime committed?"

"I shall explain," said Etwald. "David found out that Maurice was going to meet Isabella that night, secretly, in the grounds of Mrs. Dallas, near the gate. Determined to see the meeting, and to learn if there was any hope for him, he feigned a journey to New York in order to lull any suspicions which Maurice might have that he was being watched. Instead of going, however, he concealed himself at a spot where he could see the gates, which opened on to the highway. Now," added Etwald, with a side glance at the Major, "it so happened that I also wished to see that meeting."

"How did you know it was about to take place?"

"I learned the fact from Dido. Well, I saw David in his place of concealment, and guessed his reason for coming. Maurice appeared at the rendezvous, and shortly afterwards Isabella, under the hypnotic influence, came down the avenue. In her hand she held the devil-stick, and came swiftly towards Maurice. He, not understanding the deadly weapon with which she was armed, came to meet her with outstretched arms. She thrust the devil-stick before her, and wounded him in the palm of the hand. With a cry he fell—dead."

"Within the gates?" asked the Major, much agitated.

"Yes, within the gates," responded Etwald. "When Isabella had struck the blow, she dropped the devil-stick in the grass where, if you remember, it was found by Battersea. Then she returned to the house by the little path which leads thereto through the surrounding trees. The body lay in the bright moonlight, full in the center of the path, not a stone's-throw from the high-road. David and I rushed simultaneously from our hiding-places, and I explained hurriedly that the body must not be found in the grounds. He understood, and we carried the body on to the road. Before we had time to deliberate what was to be done, we heard the noise of approaching footsteps, and afraid—both of us—of being accused of the crime, we fled. Then you came down the road and discovered the corpse."

"Yes. I heard the poor lad's cry," said Jen, simply, "and I ran down at once. You must have been very quick in your movements. I wish both of you had been more open with me."

"I am afraid that would have been impossible, Major," said Etwald, rising. "You were so distracted over the death of Maurice, and so unjust in your hatred of me, that it would have been dangerous to trust you."

"Am I unjust in my hatred of you?" demanded Jen, getting on his feet. "I think not, Dr. Etwald. Your desire to marry Isabella, or, rather, her fortune, has been the cause of all these ills. Dido was only your instrument, whom you compelled to work by means of the Voodoo Stone. That she betrayed you in the end was your punishment. I do not blame her so much as I do you. You alone are responsible for the death of those two poor lads of mine."

"Well, have it your own way," said Etwald, carelessly. "I am a scoundrel in your eyes, I dare say; but if you will permit me to see you to-morrow at 11 o'clock, I shall be able to prove that I am not quite so black as you have painted me."

"I never want to set eyes on you again," said Jen, bluntly.

"Nor will you—after mid-day to-morrow. But you will regret if you do not grant me this interview. If you are wise you will arrange to let me come here to-morrow at 11, and meet Mrs. Dallas and her daughter."

"Both of them will refuse to meet you. You saw Mrs. Dallas to-day, how she behaved."

"Like the fool she is," said the doctor, putting on his hat. "Well, I am going. Will you see me to-morrow morning?"

"Yes. I don't know what possible things you can find to say to me after this interview; but, as you make such a point of it, I'll see you."

"And ask Mrs. Dallas and her daughter to be present."

"Yes. I'll try and get them to come."

Later on in the day Jen sent a letter to "The Wigwam," asking Mrs. Dallas to come with her daughter the next morning at 11 o'clock. He did not explain that Dr. Etwald would be present, as he knew the temper of Mrs. Dallas. Whatever might be at stake, even if it were to her own interest, she would refuse to meet the men towards whom she bore so strong a hatred. Therefore Jen decided to be diplomatic, and keep silent as to the visit of Etwald. During the afternoon a note was brought to Jen, in which Mrs. Dallas promised to come and to bring Isabella.

At 11 o'clock next morning Mrs. Dallas arrived with Isabella, the latter looking wan and ill. Even had the Major not promised to be silent, he could not have brought himself to tell the poor girl the truth at that moment. After all, she was perfectly innocent, and had committed the crime unwittingly. Dido was the culprit, not Isabella; and the Major felt a profound pity for the miserable girl, who had been made a tool of by the unscrupulous negress and the evil-minded Etwald.

"Well, Major," said Mrs. Dallas, after the first greetings were over, "what did that wicked man say to you yesterday?"

"He explained how my poor Maurice was killed."

"Ah!" said Isabella, clasping her hands, "I am sure that it was that terrible man who made David kill Maurice. Oh, if I had only met Maurice on that night, I might have prevented the quarrel."

"Did you meet Maurice, my dear?"

"Of course not," replied Isabella, in the most truthful manner. "I did not leave the house, and Dido was with me all the time. I expect Maurice was waiting for me, and that David saw him. No doubt they quarreled, and then the death took place. I had a nervous headache, and Dido hypnotized me. When I woke up it was too late to see Maurice."

The Major had learned all that he wished to know, and, not wishing to pursue the subject, turned the conversation by explaining that Etwald was coming in a few minutes. Mrs. Dallas rose up in a cold fury.

"Did you ask me here to insult me, Major?"

"I asked you here at the particular request of Dr. Etwald."

"Why? What can he have to say to my mother?" cried Isabella, in surprise.

"Miss Dallas, I know no more than you do; but he evidently desires to make a clean breast of this whole miserable business."

"I have heard quite enough about it," said Mrs. Dallas, marching towards the door, "and I refuse to meet that monster of iniquity!"

(To be continued.)

SANDOW WAS HUNGRY.

Famous Strong Man Nearly Starved Seeking Job as Model.

I would never say die while there remained a sculptor unvisited, and in course of time I knocked at the door of the atelier of a well known sculptor, Krauk by name, writes Eugene Sandow in the Strand. He answered in person. "Do you want a model?" I inquired in my best French. His "non" was mighty, and meant to be conclusive. Spurred on by desperation, I rattled out some explanation, but he shook his head, and in his hurry to return to his work almost thrust me from the door.

In sadness and with weary steps I descended the stairs, and the lower I got the greater became my anger and indignation at the treatment I had received. At the bottom, in the court, I stood undecided, but bitter. Upstairs I had seen through the doorway of the studio that Krauk was working on a statue endeavoring to model in clay a Greek god; and there was I, with the very perfect bodily development he was trying to reproduce in clay, starving on his doorstep.

It was more than flesh and blood on an empty stomach could stand. The courtyard was deserted, the staircase silent and none too light. That decided me. I stripped off my upper garments and wasted no time in mounting to Krauk's studio. I thundered at the door. It flew open and I prepared to follow in, but—it stopped on a chain. Krauk was evidently determined that callers should not worry him. He came to the door yelling, apparently in anger. As I could not get my body in I thrust in my arm. It stopped Krauk; for a moment he was struck dumb.

The next instant he had removed the chain and pulled me into the studio, where I stood with his gaze fixed upon me in profound admiration of my muscular development, which held him speechless. Then, his eyes agleam with excitement, he launched himself upon me, and, as is the way of foreigners, embraced me in his wild enthusiasm, kissing me on both cheeks, while I thanked heaven that my persistency had met with its reward. My anxiety at the moment, however, to be fed, not admired, and finding that he was a good linguist, although when I had on my first application endeavored to persuade him to see me stripped he had feigned ignorance of my language, I told him that I was hungry—ravenous; that food had not passed my lips for three days. My heart gave a bound of joy when he replied:

"Terrible, my poor fellow; terrible!" he exclaimed. "You must have food at once and then," he added, "you must come and sit to me."

A few minutes later I was enjoying the much longed for meal in a neighboring cafe—a meal I shall never forget, for steak followed steak, and still another, with the best part of a chicken and a bottle of champagne, which Krauk ordered to celebrate what he called his "find." And then I lived again.

A Business Conference.

"The junior partner wants to see you right away," announced the bookkeeper. "I guess it's the bounce for yours."

"Nix," responded the office boy. "He only wants to find out what new players have been signed."—Washington Herald.

FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN

Should Eliminate Drudgery.

Especially is the woman of to-day changing in the scope of her mental development, states Judge Willard McEwen, of Chicago. She has a much better understanding of what is going on in the world and her interest is more vital in the things outside her own particular sphere than it formerly was. Woman is waking up to a desire for individuality, which is just as natural an impulse as the desire for immortality. It is in a consciousness of individuality that people get their real happiness.

Under past conditions man has been the individual and woman an impressionable creature, whose religion, training and sex instincts made her satisfied with children, and home, and working for a man, who is most of the time a false ideal.

She is modifying that condition. In my judgment the real question of woman's independence as a factor in the partnership is a question of sex. Taxation without representation, improvement in government through woman's participation are idle arguments so far as being of any effect is concerned. Woman has been long in a condition of subserviency and is coming to realize it. Man might as well recognize this and figure that it is going to cost him something that he ought to pay. An economic question must be considered with reference to present conditions. If tested by the days of our grandfathers, woman's present attitude and manner of looking at life is to be deplored, but tested by our times woman's situation and change in her relationship to man have injected a new element into the conditions which should be charged up to the account as legitimate expense. The drudgery in a woman's life should be eliminated as far as is consistent with the family purse. It is not incumbent on a woman to get tired out and overheated baking bread when a few nickels invested at the corner bakery will provide the table with bread that no doubt will prove much more palatable. The day of the woman drudge is fast nearing its close, and we are not going to turn back to the good old days of the thatched roof and the dirt floor.

Sleep and the Brain.

When the brain is at work marshaling ideas, producing mental pictures, and calling into action stored-up memories and impressions, the cells of its mysteriously potent "gray matter" undergo a change of form. Cavities are formed in them, which, as the brain becomes wearied by long-continued action, fill with a watery fluid. Part of the substance of the cells appear to have been consumed in the process of thinking, but in the hours of sleep the exhausted cells regain their original form, the supply of recuperative material coming from the blood, and on awakening, the mind finds its instrument restored and prepared again for action.

Dainty Class Day Frock.

Summery frocks are absorbing most women now, and the pretty girls who are making ready for commencement are especially busy with the dainty summer fabrics. A pretty pink linen model is shown here, a braided tunic of the linen dropping over a plaited skirt and extending up to meet a deep yoke of pin tucked pink batiste. The sleeves are of the tucked batiste, straps of the linen extending down the length of the arm. On these straps and all through the braided pattern are worked coin dots with pink linen floss. The hat is a Gage leghorn model faced with pink satin and trimmed with pink roses and white tulle.

Many Women in the Law.

Few people realize that fully 20,000 American women of to-day have qualified for the law, says the New Idea Magazine. Nearer the average conception is the number who have become advocates before the United States Supreme Court—40. Yet it is undeniable that there are splendid opportunities for women lawyers, and the 20,000 of to-day promises to be largely increased in the coming years, one of the most authoritative legal publications declaring that women are needed to analyze, digest and classify the quarter million decisions of Federal and State courts handed down in the ten years ending with 1910. The fact that out of 20,000 admitted lawyers only 40 appear before the gowned justices at Washington does not imply that the remainder are engaged in housekeeping or other pursuits. These women lawyers are representing their clients and appearing before the courts in their own states, doing valuable and remunerative legal work.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Bordered materials make many summer gowns.

Plumes to match the gown are used on black hats.

In Paris short-skirted evening gowns are fashionable.

New combing jackets are made of flowered cretonne.

Some of the cotton foulards are as beautiful as the silks.

Hats of black straw are seen trimmed with silver braid.

Crochet lace is smart on gowns, jabots, blouses and even on hats.

Cornflower yellow is one of the newest shades for evening gowns.

There is a craze for brown and many new shades have been shown.

Many of the new turbans are trimmed with huge bows of changeable ribbon at the back.

Parasols are seen with long, fantastic handles of carved wood, such as elephant and bulldog heads.

The black hat is probably most durable from its power to withstand dust and spots and its satisfying harmony with any color of costume.

Women's Clothing.

Dr. Haig Ferguson in a lecture at the Edinburgh Royal Infirmary the other day had some severe things to say about the clothing of an adult woman. It was hampered by fashion and superstition and nothing could be a greater tribute to the strong nerves and powerful muscles of women than the fact that their health had survived for centuries their habits of clothing.

A woman's clothing was the despair of the hygienist. Children and girls were more sensibly clad, but when girls grew up they were often clothed in a way which made them unable to walk, run or breathe. Weighty skirts, low-necked gowns, "pneumonia blouses," the modern hat, the high-heeled shoe with its pointed toe, were all condemned. But, then, women will have it so and so it will remain.

To Wash Corsets.

First rip the front seam on both sides and take out the steels. Then dissolve some soap jelly, made by shredding half a pound of the best yellow soap in one quart of boiling water, and simmering until dissolved in warm water. Two tablespoonfuls of jelly to half a gallon of water is usually sufficient, but hard water may require more. Put the corsets into the suds and allow them to soak for five minutes. Then spread them on a board and brush thoroughly with a well soaped nail brush, dipping them occasionally into the suds to remove the loosened dirt. When clean, rinse through two lots of warm water and hang up to drip dry. When almost dry, iron on the inside with a warm flat iron, and after thoroughly airing replace the front steels and sew them firmly in. If this is carefully done, the corsets will emerge from the washtub as good as new.

A Disappointment.

Artists, poets and writers generally conspire to represent woman as being beautiful, gentle, self-sacrificing and the embodiment of love. With this extravagant ideal of woman formed for them in their youth, is it surprising that many men are doomed to disappointment?—Truth.

To Soften Paint Brushes.

To soften an old paint brush in which the paint has been allowed to dry, heat some vinegar to the boiling point, and allow the brush to simmer in it a few minutes. Remove and wash well in strong soap suds, and the brush will be like new.

Woman and the Motor Car.

Can a woman drive a motor car? Robert Slass says she can, and in the Outing Magazine tells why. In one place he says:

"Unusual physique is not necessary for the woman motorist. Neither sex needs extraordinary muscular development in automobiling, and also any woman not an invalid can master its mysteries quite as well as a man, provided she has the will and the patience to acquire the know-how. Certainly in the sphere of patience woman by nature is equipped to give man a long handicap. The woman motorist is not half so likely as man is to swear and call loudly for a tow when anything goes wrong with the car. She will more probably set quietly to work to find the trouble and remedy it quite as thoroughly as if she were cleaning out the kitchen range.

"Remember, nevertheless, that though sex and slight physique are in no sense disabilities to the woman who wants to do her own motoring, and though her feminine patience and intuition stand her in good stead, she must not expect to succeed by intuition alone."

A World Upside Down.

Another announcement was lately made of the perennial discovery that women are alike the world over—that gentle birth, training, environment do not of themselves create a new feminine type. The fact is as old as the race. The beggar maid, we have been assured for generations, proved an excellent queen for King Cophetua. Maud Muller would have quickly learned to adorn the station to which the judge might have called her.

So the recent scheme of so-called "social leader" had not even the excuse of being a novel demonstration. Madam took two girls from ordinary boarding houses to her house, dressed them in her clothes, loaded them with her jewels, and introduced them to her millionaire friends. The next day she told the newspaper of her successful trick, exulted over the enthusiasm with which "society" had accepted her victims, and thus demonstrated that "wealth and false pride form the barriers between the classes."

The contriver of the scheme said to the reporters, "I once dressed up my cook in one of my gowns, and she mingled with my guests. Her figure was beautiful, and she made a stunning appearance. But she did not feel at her ease, and stayed only a short time. Back to the kitchen she went."

It is to be hoped that the girls in her latest experiment, nay, that the hostess herself, may show as good sense as did Mary, the cook. But the task of the two young women is not an easy one. Will they go back to simplicity and industry and honesty and womanliness? Or will they plot to force their way, by hook or crook, in the not too genuine world of which they have caught a glimpse?—Youth's Companion.

Inertia of the Nerves.

The researches and experiments of a French scientist have led him to the conclusion that the cerebral nervous system is incapable of perceiving more than an average of ten separate impressions per second. After each excitation of the nerves a period of inertia follows, lasting about one-tenth of a second, and during this period a new impression cannot be made. According to the investigations of this scientist a person cannot make more than ten, or at the most a dozen, separate voluntary movements of any kind in a second, although the muscles, independently of the will, are capable of making as many as thirty or forty.

Summer Sleeve Suggestions.

Very few sleeves now are all in one piece. An over and undersleeve are used in almost every case. The first sketch shows a foulard silk sleeve with deep cuff over an undersleeve of dotted net. The second sketch is a lingerie effect in white batiste, strapped with lace insertion, No. 3 shows the "peasant" or seamless shoulder, an extension of the bodice forming the sleeve, which falls over an undersleeve of heavy lace. Nos. 4 and 5 show sleeves taken from two mohair frocks, one a tailored street gown and the other a little white mohair house dress. The last sketch is a ponge sleeve trimmed with oriental embroidery and mounted over an undersleeve of cream tucked batiste.

To Wash Oil-Painted Walls.

Oil-painted walls must be washed with soap and water, using a soft flannel cloth and taking care to wring it well before using. Use cold water to finish and dry with a linen cloth.

Slang Tabooed.

Slang is tabooed in the home of a West Philadelphia family principally because there is a bright little girl who displays a persistent aptitude in retaining expressive but uncultured phrases.

The other evening at dinner the mother, father and daughter drifted into the vernacular and a fresh start was necessary. The little girl started it. "I'm not stuck on this bread," she remarked.

"Maggie," said her mother, "you want to cut that slang out."

"That's a peach of a way of correcting the child," commented the father.

"I know," replied the mother, "but I just wanted to put her wise."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

When a negro was arrested the other day for wandering around the streets, he wore one of those invincible smiles. When he was taken before Magistrate Briggs he was still smiling.

"What's your name?" asked the magistrate.

"Ah don't know, sah," smiled the negro.

"Where do you live?"

"Ah don't know, sah."

"Where do you work?"

"At the Tem Hotel, sah."

The magistrate thought that perhaps there was some truth in the negro's place of employment, so he thought he would see if the negro knew any of the students in the college near this particular hotel.

"Do you know any of the students at Tem College?"

"No, sah," answered the negro, his smile bigger than ever. "Ah nebber goes in de bar!"—Philadelphia Times.

THE LAST MARCH

Foremost of nations, the United States owes stability, integrity and power to the patriotism and devotion of a fast vanishing volunteer soldiery by whose sacrifice of personal interest, valor in action and endurance of momentous campaigns, the beautiful ensign of the great republic was nobly upheld, its unity restored and the foul blot of slavery washed out in blood. By a participant in the honors awarded eight corps of the Union armies at a Grand Revier before their muster out of service, held at the city of Washington, D. C. on May 23 and 24, 1865, the following narrative is written true to the life.

The Confederate forces depleted by duration, disease and casualties had been overwhelmed, captured and paroled to their homes and the four corps that had made a devastating tour of Georgia and the Carolinas had marched north through Richmond, over the battlefields of Spettsylvania and Chancellorsville and their innumerable shelter tents dotted the hills westward of Alexandria on the Potomac. Within all those immense camps, a Sabbath quietude prevailed. Of military details there were none and the march-wearied soldiers enjoyed a needed rest. Lively interest was awakened by promulgation of the order: "All commands will hold themselves in readiness to move at 5 a. m. tomorrow; two days' rations will be carried in haversacks and knapsacks on the wagons."

The morrow came and the men were early astir. Tents vanished like magic, routine commands were executed on the instant and presently in concerted movement compact columns were marching from the heights down upon the highway where all united and set out for the national capitol.

Buoyant of spirits, in light marching order and with habitual swinging stride, the men had soon covered intervening distance and passing through Fort Runyan, one of the long chain of forts guarding Washington, closed in mass near the Ohio and Chesapeake canal and there resting, lunched and waited orders. Presently a silvery bugle call was sounded, and the corps commanded with staff and colors rode forward. A second group marked the division headquarters, and a third the brigade, and then a head of column issuing from the great blue mass, a fine quadruple file spun out prolonging without a break to over the broad Potomac upon the mile "Long Bridge" connecting Virginia with the District of Columbia.

Silently and swiftly as when moving to battle, regiments, brigades and divisions detached in regular succession advanced with faultless precision across a bayou, an island and the famous river lay full and fair to view. The prospect was unobstructed and extended back to the hills and forward to the capitol. As we came upon the foot of Maryland avenue, threshold of approach within the environs of the city, there were met idling about men fantastically arrayed in red, baggy breeches upheld by broad belts, corded blue jackets and red turbans with dangling tassels. A silence of wonder was broken by a running fire of caustic questions and bursts of laughter, but a wholly different reception was awarded an infantry detail uniformed in light blue posted along our route to keep the way open to troops. These gallant fellows were recognized as of Hancock's Invalid Veteran Corps and respected accordingly.

The huge proportions of the incomplete capitol with far extending wings and high towering dome shining silvery white dwarfed by contrast to Lilliputians the troops passing its base and strongly affected the mind by its colossal dimensions. Briefly halted to reduce number and equalize companies formed in double ranks, close order, the last march began. Bayonets fixed, flashed in the sunshine from lines of rifles carried on right shoulder, left oblique, and burnished brasses relined the dark blue uniforms. To spectators, all idea of individuality was wanting and the deep, armed columns forcibly impressed them by a sense of their potentiality, but every soldier silent and alert took sweeping note of immediate environment and the general view.

By left wheel the seried ranks swept past the "old capitol" whose every window was crowded by faces of the imprisoned whose staring eyes showed magnetism of the moment to forgetfulness of misfortune and restraint while from beyond sights westward was heard the smothered chorus of children's voices in patriotic song and bursts of music from consolidated martial and cornet bands. Again to the left wheeling, advance was made over a rise flanking the capitol and the massive columns steadily debouched upon the head of Pennsylvania avenue to enter upon and bear part in a grand and wonderful pagiant.

Far, far away down the long stretch of the broad and splendid thoroughfare extended a solid column, cavalry, field batteries and infantry. Down its center was borne a line of colors, national and state, storm and battle-sent and then was heard a heavy tramp of feet, thousands upon thousands dominating the music and aweing the multitudes that thronged sidewalks and crowded buildings. Hour after hour, corps followed corps as billows of an ocean tide concealed at intervals by great flags pendant across the street to break monitory of continuity while spell-bound beholders seemed terrorized by a power so imposing and discipline so perfect. Compactly banked a numerous assemblage of children in holiday attire were seated on the right and continuously greeted the soldiers with songs and cheers. It was the time of their lives, a happy episode and ground to middle age, remembrance of this great occasion will ever prove a proud and stirring recollection.

Enormous letters in evergreen extending along the capitol front bore prophetic inscriptions: "The only debt our country cannot pay is the debt she owes her soldiers." And there were her soldiers, volunteers not conscripts, who had heroically attested their devotion upon long marches and in great conflicts and although uniforms were soiled and worn, faces bronzed by exposure to sun and storm, their arms were clean and bright and their colors bore upon their stripes gilded inscriptions of many battles. Very many were the mottos, flags and banners upon buildings, mercantile and national, and enthusiastic spectators at windows and on house tops clapped their hands and gave utterance to feelings in vociferous cheers. Cavalrymen patrolled the avenue to prevent intrusion upon the column, but women and girls were not restrained from tendering cold water in glass or cup to assuage thirst and by sweet smile and kindly speech making known their loyal sentiment.

How cheering to those men was this spontaneous and general acclaim. It was at once a recognition of service and a compensation for sacrifices. How hearts beat and nerves thrilled under such stimulus, and how proud they were to have place in the ranks of the Union army on such extraordinary occasion! Forgotten for the moment were all perils and hardships, fatigue and exposure. Far away were remembrances of bruised feet in soleless shoes, aching shoulders galled by rain-soaked blankets and craving stomachs with empty haversacks. As a feverish dream was the memory of all night labor on mud stalled wagons and chilling contact with icy swamps and river inundations.

Never again would bugle sound 'advance" upon earth-built works against lines in gray, and never more would cannon boom and musket crackle to stir the pulse and quicken the step, for defenses were abandoned forever and the armies of "The Lost Came" had passed into domain of history. In vivid contrast the glorious past, enthroned triumphant present, as all day long that mighty column marched down the avenue and near the White House passed in review before the president, his cabinet, commanders and many a personage conspicuous in civil service, diplomatic station and military rank. One of homely features and loving heart, a man of the people and friend of the soldier was not there and few in that host of veterans but deplored his absence. Tragedy had marred triumph and the central figure was wanting in the grandeur of the nation's farewell greeting to her gallant and devoted sons.

Well might this great concourse of beholders improve the opportunity for the soul-stirring scene would have no future counterpart upon a scale of such mighty proportions in the capital of their restored United States. Great was their privilege to witness this last grand review of these corps. In these ranks marched survivors of arduous campaigns and great battles, men who had compelled surrender of strongholds and return of states to allegiance and to these soldiers on parade before discharge, the occasion had the significance of approval, benediction and dismissal to their homes and to former pursuits in the varied walks of life.

In the forces represented lay a potent reserve of national strength and strong guaranty of permanent stability, an influence for law and order and a faithful observance of the duties and obligations of the commonwealth. For seven long hours that living tide flowed on, each rank in faultless alignment, each division in perfect unison. In regular succession fresh bodies came in view from right of the capitol, as others having covered the line of march the full length of the avenue, wheeled aside and once more in habitual formation proceeding to allotted camp grounds in the suburbs soon left the city, and the crowds far behind them. Night had fallen ere the rear most passed and the last march had ended. It had been a colossal first and last appearance upon a mighty stage ere the curtain of oblivion had fallen upon them forever.

Last Tuesday, Mrs. John Brown and daughter Nora, entertained about thirty ladies at a five o'clock tea, in honor of Mrs. Reader and daughter of Huntington. The ladies were invited to the dining room and told that they were to find their places at the table by answering a rebus, the answer being the name or business of their husbands which caused lots of fun, and finally, by helping each other, they were seated and served to an elegant two course luncheon. After spending a pleasant evening, good nights were said, each voting Mrs. Brown and Nora royal entertainers.

Saves an Iowa Man's Life

The very grave seemed to yawn before Robert Madse, of West Burlington, Iowa, when, after seven weeks in the hospital, four of the best physicians gave him up. Then was shown the marvelous curative power of Electric Bitters. For, after eight months of frightful suffering from liver trouble and yellow jaundice, getting no help from other remedies or doctors, five bottles of this matchless medicine completely cured him. Its postively guaranteed for Stomach, Liver or Kidney troubles and never dissapoints. Only 50c at Stone's drug store. 18-1m

By The Renowned Author and Poet
WILL CARLETON
Opera House, Butler, Ind., June 9th

Will Carleton is the author of Farm and City Ballads, Farm and City Festivals, Farm and City Legends and many other books and is to Michigan what Whitcomb Riley is to Indiana, and these two are the greatest living poets today.

There is only one "CARLETON." Now is the time to hear him---and it is the chance of a lifetime.

The joy, love and tender pathos pictured by him will carry his listeners from the heights of laughter into the vale of tears and back again on the joyous wave of happiness.

No one can hear him and not have a finer, grander view of life and be the happier for it.

The Winning Appeal.

The intrepid general (in the new order) was rallying her wavering troops.

"Women," she cried, "will you give way to mannish fears?"

A murmur of indecision ran through the ranks, whereupon the leader shot the last arrow in her quiver.

"Will you," she fiercely demanded, "show the white feather in a season when feathers are not being worn?"

The effect was electrical. "Never!" roared the soldiery, and, forming quickly in battle array, they once more hurled themselves on the enemy.—Puck.

CAME EAST TO CLAIM SUICIDE

Mrs. Frank McNabb and Children Arrived Today

Today Mrs. Frank McNabb arrived at the bedside of their suicide husband and father who ended his earthly existence at the home of his brother, George NcNabb, northeast of Corunna two miles, by emptying a shot gun into his side.

The McNabb family resided at Kiowa, Kansas. Mr. McNabb was a rural mail carrier but because of ill health had come east some five weeks ago to visit relatives and recuperate but despondency overtook him and he ended it all—but the suffering among his bereft ones.

Mrs. McNabb was wired immediately of the tradegy. She notified that she and children would leave at once.

The deceased was about 46 years of age and was born in Fairfield township. When a young man he went to work in the B. & O. shops at Garrett and after a time drifted to Kansas. He resided there a number of years but later when he became heir to some land here, a part of the old homestead, he returned built a house upon it and lived there for sometime. Selling the land he again returned to the land of the sun flower state which has since been his home. He is a brother of Warren McNabb of Columbia City, Mrs. Fred Dellenback and George McNabb of Fairfield township.

Coroner Briggs of Butler, was called and found that the despondent man ended his own life.—Dispatch.

MEMORIAL DAY OBSERVED IN BUTLER

Services Preceded By Pastors Delivering Patriotic Sermons

Although the weather was anything but pleasant, a goodly number of patriotic citizens turned out to help observe Memorial day.

A little after one o'clock the Grand Army boys and Ladies Relief Corps formed in line, headed by Miss Nora Brown, a number of flower girls and the marshal band, marched to the Christian church where a church full of people had assembled to hear the address by Rev. Parker of the United Brethren church and the patriotic songs by the choir of the Christian church.

Miss Ann Albertson rendered a very sweet solo, and after the usual ceremonies the soldiers were joined by the Uniform Rank of the Knights of Pythias and proceeded to the cemetery where the graves of the dead heroes were decorated.

One of the features this year which has never before been practiced, was the patriotic services held in all the churches of the city on Sunday evening preceding Memorial day. This new feature which is original for the Butler pastors proved to be most interesting, and it is a practice that should not be neglected in the future. With the steady influx of emigrants to our country, the pride and patriotism of the American people is liable to wane. Therefore it is the duty of the preachers, teachers and newspapers to keep the spirit of love for our country alive in the hearts of the people.

For the benefit of those who were not out to either of the patriotic services we herewith produce extracts from the different sermons:

A GOOD SOLDIER OF JESUS CHRIST

Following are a few extracts from Eld. I. Konkle's Sunday address to the soldiers.

All who have been good soldiers and fought the battles of their respective leaders know what it is to endure hardness.

Every good soldier must be a man of courage. Men manifest their courage by action. Many do not succeed because of laziness.

In order to conquer the enemy we must always have our faces toward the foe. "Looking back" hinders our holy religion. We are not living in the past, but today. "He that putteth his hands to the plow and looketh back is not fit for the Kingdom of God."

Every good soldier must learn to stand.

Every good soldier must be well equipped. The girdle of the Christian is the "word of God." It sustains, its promises strengthens, and it holds argumements with which can conquer the enemy.

The breast plate of the Christian is righteousness, right living. God the Father does not ask what one is your "profession"? but what is your "life"? Christianity is a life. Christians fail through carelessness and indifference.

The Christian soldier is commanded to shoe himself with the gospel of peace. Pure religion consists of three things—a wise government of the tongue, active charity and personal purity.

A person KNOWS whether he is a Chrisitan or not.

The sword of the Christian pierces even to the dividing assunder of soul and spirit, joints and marrow and is a discerner of the thoughts and interests of the heart.

Rev. Albertson of the M. E. church preached a patriotic sermon Sunday evening that was interesting and instructive. He said in part:

Ours is called a Christian nation. Soon after the close of the Revolutionary war the best men of that age met to frame a national constitution. Among them was Benjamin Franklin, who made this speech: "I have lived a long time and I am more than ever convinced that God rules among the nations of the earth. If a sparrow cannot fall without His notice, a nation cannot rise without His aid. Therefore, I move that before we proceed with our business a minister be sent for to ask God's blessing on our deliberations." The constitution which these men made at that time is emphatically a Christian document. No principle of law declared therein is taken from Solon or Lycurgus; but all are borrowed from Moses and from Jesus Christ. It is the first instrument of its kind that ever clearly and fully expressed Christ's ideas of popular government. This was to be a government of the people, for the people and by the people.

In this form of government righteousness must be exalted. The ten commandments must be considered and obeyed. They are as forceful now as in the past. God is to be worshiped and His law is to be regarded. Public worship must be maintained. The synagogue is more efficient than the navy or the army. It stands for the education of our people in the moral law. The history of other nations proves that it is impossible to maintain national supremacy for a long period unless it be built upon the foundation stone of righteousness.

Edward Everett Hale writes a most thrilling story of "The Man Without a Country." Have you seen the man without a God, a religion, a church? As you read Mr. Hale's narrative your pity is excited for the young man. Ah! rather weep for that individual who disregards his moral obligation, who is an alien and stranger from the truth of God. Pity the people who have no church home, who do not love the synagogue.

Those who have loved this nation and proved their love by heroic deeds, by zealous service, by sacrifice, have been persons of strong faith in God. The Declaration of Independence speaks of certain rights "derived from the Creator," and in the closing words it says to all the world: "For the support of this declaration we rely upon the protection of Divine Providence." In the first article of our constitution we have a law providing for the observance of Sunday. Those who framed the constitution expected the president to be a Christion man, and the White House to be a Christian home, where Sunday would be a day of rest and worship. They made the same wise provision for the courts, legislative bodies, banks and commercial institutions.

Every president has, with more or less regularity, made public acknowledgement of God's help in the discharge of his official duties. George Washington said in one of his presidential addresses: "Of all the dispositions that lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports." The politicians and all the people ought to cherish and respect these firmest pillars of free government. Thomas Jefferson said: "When I consider that God is just, I tremble for my country." Cleveland said in his last inaugural address: "Above all, I know that there is a Supreme Being whose goodness and mercy have always followed the American people, and I know He will not turn from us now if we humbly and reverently seek His powerful aid." And in his speech at the dedication of the St. Louis fair he used these momentous words: "Our thoughts and surroundings on this occasion should lead us to humble recognition of the Providence of God in all that has made us a great nation. . . We should be aroused to higher and more responsive patriotism by the reflection that it is a solemn thing to belong to a people favored of God."

President Roosevelt said at St. Louis: "We are unworthy of our forefathers if we make their heroic deeds an excuse for our lying supine instead of an incentive to show ourselves by our acts worthy of them. If we come short in any of these qualifications we shall measurably fail; and if we develop these qualities in the future, as I believe we shall, then in the century now beginning we shall make of this Republic the freest and most orderly, the most just and most mighty nation which has ever existed."

Rev. W. F. Parker delivered the Decoration Day Address and spoke in part as follows:

Ladies and Gentlemen, Fellow Citizens and Grand Army of the Republic. I am called upon today, this national holiday May 30, 1910, established by congressional enactment in 1874, to address you in behalf of our national heroic and patriotic dead. As we stand today at the graves of the nation's dead and drop a silent tear on the grassy mound where sleeps heroic dust, it is meet that a redeemed nation should come to pay its homage at such tombs, wreathing the memory of its dead in the emblems of grateful affection. These grass grown mounds, these flower decked graves, these beautiful boquets of flowers, these sweet songs of patriotism, and the dear old flag, awaken the memories of the past and the history of our nations perils, and its triumphs, come crowding on us here. It was an auspicious day in American history when on Dec. 22, 1620 the May flower landed at Plymoth Rock. It was a glad day July 4, 1776 when John Hancock President of the U. S. signed the Declaration of Independance and the day of National prosperity had dawned, and a nation was born.

It was a dark day in our nation's calendar when a dutch slave ship landed at Jamestown, Va., its freight of human chattels, slavery at length spread its deadly virus through every avenue of the body politic, until four millions of God's poor human creatures lifted their manacled hands before heavens high alter and implored deliverance, Priest and people put their hands on God Bible at his holy altars and swore that slavery and appression was divine. Repeated attempts to silence the voice of freedom both from the platform and pulpit were heard and made. The voices of Garrison, Phillips, Wilson and Summer were heard in the van—and following these, John Brown struck the blow for liberty that shook as with commipotence, the pillars of oppression's pagan temple, and when the immortal Lincoln signed the emancipation proclamation the shackels fell from millions of human slaves. Two conflicting ideas were taught among the people and arrayed them in hostile parties. One was that we were not a nation but a confederation of sovereign states which at all times have a right to withdraw from the union. The other contended that the U. S has a nationality, a common constitution, a common flag, with a government having a right to enforce its own laws and preserve its existence by force against all enemies without and within. These two ideas moved the contending hosts on the great battle fields, of the rebellion, until it was decided that we have a government, a common country, a flag, with a bond so strong that no foe can break it. And here by the graves of these martyres of liberty, inspired by the sacrifices they have made, let us resolve that cost what it may, this union shall be preserved forever.

All people in all ages, of all nationalities, and of all religions, have ever paid the highest honors to the memories of those who died for their country for liberty and the rights of men, they have been the heroes before whom the world has bowed down all honor to our nations heroic, and patriotic dead. We honor them most, by being patriotic and true men, by faithfully fighting the battles of our day as they fought the battles of teeir day. The flowers of a true and beautiful life is the flowers to put on the soldiers grave, the best citizen is the best patriot, the best son of his country, is he who gives the best manhood to his country, he is the man who writes upon his nature the 10 commandments and the 8 beattitudes, you can have a grand army only when the ranks are filled with grand men. The Union Army all told consisted of 2,772,408 men, at this time only a few remain with us. More than two and a half millions, have gone from earths battle fields, hospitals and prison pens to their reward. Now can we ever forget our comrads, who fell on the battle fields by our side, or died in camp and in hospitals, and worse than all these the thousands who was shot, starved to death and brutally murdered in the prison pens of the south—Andersonville 35,000, Libby prison 4000, Smith prison, Scott prison, Pemberton, Petersburg, Savanna, Castle Thunder and others.

These flowers that we strew on these graves today are the alphabet of our hearts, and with them we are spill out Faith, Hope, Charity, Heaven. Oh let these sephulcres of the brave be made worthy resorts of weeping freedom. The graves of these noble dead should be adorned and shielded against all desecrations for from age to age the honorable fame of this patriotic army will endure. For never did a soldier fight for a nobler end, bled for a grander idea, or die for a better cause, no eloquence can be as commanding as the eloquence of these graves, no flowers of rhetoric, as appropriate as these flowers of spring, with which we honor the remains of the patriotic dead. Today there are two divisions in this grand army of the republic; one of the living and the other of the dead. One encamped on the shores of time, the other on the plains beyond the river, the one that has past over is much the larger of the two But why should we not honor those who still live, as highly as those who have already fallen. In the beginning one did as much as the other in giving himself to his country. During the war, they took the same chances of danger, life and death, therefore the recognition of worth and heroism, is justly due to you who survive as to your brothers who laid down their lives on the battle field and elsewhere. We can reward you my brothers, only by bestowing upon you and your families the honors you have so nobly won.

Rev. Crouse of the Lutheran church spoke as follows:

"That this may be a sign among you that when your children ask in time to come, saying, what mean ye by these stones, and these stones shall be for a memorial unto the children of Isral for ever."—Joshua. 4 C. V. 6 & part of 7.

The ejection of Abraham Lincoln, in 1860 to the presidency of the United States, faud to a flame the smoldering embers of unrest, that had existed in the south for some time. They be-

THE FIRST CLOCKS.

One at Padua That Was a Wonder of Mechanism.

It was, we are told, in 1309 that the first clock known to the world was placed in the tower of San Eustargio, in Milan.

The greatest astonishment and admiration were manifested by crowds who flocked to see the timepiece. In 1344 a clock was installed in the palace of the nobles at Padua. This was a wonder of mechanism indeed, for besides indicating the hours it showed the course of the sun, the revolutions of the planets the various phases of the moon, the months and the fetes of the year.

The period of the evolution from the clock to the watch was seventy-one years—not so very long, all things considered—and the record of the first watch is 1380. A half century later an alarm clock made its appearance. This, we are told, was looked upon by the people of that age as "un instrument prodigieux."

The fortunate possessor of this clock was Andrea Alciato, a councillor of Milan. The chroniclers have placed on record that this clock sounded a bell at a stated hour, and at the same time a little wax candle was lighted automatically. How this was done we are not told, but it must not be overlooked that until about seventy years ago we had no means of obtaining a light other than the tinder box, so that the Milanese must have been centuries ahead of us in this respect.

Not much progress was made with the watch until 1740, when the second hand was added.—London Globe.

RAILROADS in A GREAT STRUGGLE for SHARES in A BLACK KLONDIKE

A Little Section of Southern Illinois into which $20,000,000 has been poured in the last few years, making PLUTOCRATS of PLAIN FARMERS and building CITIES where before were open fields.—

The marvelous COAL FIELDS of WILLIAMSON and adjoining Counties, and how Railroad Kings are battling for them.

MAP SHOWING PRESENT RAILROAD HOLDINGS IN THE WILLIAMSON COUNTY COAL INTERESTS.

IN THE heart of Southern Illinois—in "Little Egypt," once a term of derision, but now synonymous with prosperity and modern progress—a section of perhaps a thousand square miles, embracing parts of four counties and not all of any one of them, has developed almost untold wealth and has become the theater of struggles none the less titanic because the outer world has not heard much of them, so silently have they been carried on. Fortunes have been made, and, what is more marvelous, have not been lost, in the rapid advancement of the section. Communities have grown prosperous far beyond the dreams of the earlier settlers, and their prosperity continues. Within these precincts the busy hum of trade has never been stilled. "Everybody who wants to is making money," is the way one of the busiest of business men puts it.

Such in brief and in general terms is the recent history of the immense and new coal-producing area of Williamson, Franklin, Saline and Jackson counties. There lie the immense deposits of bituminous coal, which in a few short years have brought Williamson County from a negligible part of the coal-producing State of Illinois to the very first rank in the coal counties of the commonwealth, now fifty-five in number, and every one of them high in the race of fuel production. How this has come about, all within less than a decade, if we neglect the little local shafts which have existed merely for provision of home consumption, makes an interesting chapter in the history of Illinois which has not yet been written. Such history is compressed within that decade, indeed, in large part within the last half of that decade, as to be almost unbelievable were not the confirmation so ready to hand. And the end is not yet, for with it all scarcely more than a quarter of the total coal-bearing area is in the hands of actively operating companies. The other three-quarters is still held by the original owners, some even held under the original government patents without a single transfer since the days of the homestead, of the "bit act," when land was purchasable for 12½ cents per acre, and of the $1.25 act. The railroad struggle for traffic and ownership supremacy is still on, beneath the surface. New lines are to be built, new surveys are being made, and with the coming of the Panama canal this little section of Illinois will bear its share not alone in the production of long-haul tonnage to the gulf ports, but in the provision of the power for other tonnage, and as a centering point for the big transportation lines which are reaching out for the gulf coast against the time when the annual traffic will have its weight with the movement of freight from the Northwest and from all the Middle West and the Upper Mississippi valley.

Such railroad kings as Hill, Gould and Yoakum all have had their eyes glued upon this favored spot, and all have shown their interest in the grasp which they already have upon it, but there is more to be done, and more will be done, even though it be silently and without the sounding of brass.

All this by way of explanation, for the sudden accretion of wealth in the heart of Little Egypt has come about through the railroad battle for coal and coal traffic. The other developments have been concurrent with it and are only to be understood with the aid of this knowledge. Every move that has been made has been in the silence so characteristic of the railroads when they reach out for anything they really want, and with these moves have come the rapid growth of town and country and the sudden increase in individual prosperity. The last decade has seen Harrisburg grow from a village of 1,000 or more souls to a thriving inland city of 12,000, with national banks, handsome business blocks, beautiful churches and paved streets. Herrin, laid out but fifteen years ago, is to-day a town of more than 10,000, and is still growing at a rate hard to conceive. Marion has sprung from 1,200 to 12,000 within the same time, while Johnston City, once but a prairie site, and that but a half dozen years ago, is a thriving place of 6,000, with its modern conveniences and up-to-date structures equal to the pride of many a larger town. Benton, which is the county capital of Franklin and once ruled the country round with the majesty of 1,000 residents, is now a busy place of 8,000, with the end not yet.

Many an interesting story is told of the earlier residents of the section, of the days when coal was not figured among the assets of the farmers and the pioneers of Illinois, especially the Illinois days of Dickens and his "American Notes." One is of Charles Carroll of Shawneetown, to whom fell a stretch of land upon which he was inclined to refuse to pay the taxes. It all came about in this wise: In the early days of Little Egypt, Goodall and Campbell of Marion were tobacco factors, shipping heavily to Europe and conducting a business which was large for those days. By wreck at sea and defeat in their bottomry they were sent to the wall and their assets largely fell into the hands of Sawyer, Wallace & Co. of New York, also in the same line of business. For a number of years the land remained in the possession of the New York firm, which planned to develop it as farming land, and sent a Col. Manning out to look after it. He scarcely proved a success, though this is of no moment, for before he was able to work out his plans for the development of the tract the New Yorkers failed in their turn and in their settlement the land was turned over to Carroll in partial adjustment of a claim of some $40,000. Carroll had doubts about the value of his new property and was on the point of refusing to pay the taxes, when his caution prevailed and he decided to hold the land a while and take the risk of the few additional dollars it cost him. The rest of the story is quickly told. The real extent of the coal deposits became known and a part only of the Carroll holding was sold for $400,000, or ten times the bankruptcy claim of the owner. This is but a single instance. There are many more.

Still another instance—and this of having one's cake and eating it, too. A conductor on one of the roads running through the coal district became possessed in the early days of a tract of perhaps 250 acres of land on which he did little save rent it out and pay the taxes, for he continued in the service of his road. Only recently he became incapacitated for railroad work and determined to quit the work. Almost at the same time he received an offer for the coal rights of his possession, which he had permitted, almost, to lie fallow. The offer was $25,000, and this conductor will retire, put his coal rights price out at interest and then farm the surface of his holding, for it is still his.

The geological estimates of the coal-bearing area included within the thousand or so square miles referred to are that the seams which are now being worked are capable of outputting approximately 9,000 tons per acre—this without considering other seams not now considered of value, but which, in the event of higher prices and shorter supplies, would eventually become of marketable character. Inasmuch as the field embraces something like 600,000 acres, it is easy to calculate the total deposit as in excess of 5,000,000,000 tons of coal of a quality which has rapidly made its impress upon the coal-consuming world. Basing values upon the lowest leasing basis, 2 cents per ton, the coal values alone represent a land value in the neighborhood of $150,000,000, and the land is still left to farmers, one of the richest of agricultural sections whose productive value, even before the mining of coal began, was considered the peer of any in the State.

ON BOARD A LEPER SHIP

Three Thousand Afflicted Were Transferred to Philippine Isolation Pen.

STORY OF AMERICAN SAILOR.

Heartrending Scenes When Relatives and Friends Attempted to Rescue the Victims.

"Alf" Jorgenson, second mate of the American ship Atlas, in port from the far east, is back in his native land after an absence of three years, with a thrilling narrative of his experience during that time, says the New York Evening Telegram. Jorgenson hails from Seattle and shipped on a sailing vessel from San Francisco three years ago. He landed in the Philippines, and there attached himself to one of the numerous coast guard steamers maintained by the government to patrol the coasts of the islands and keep down the piratical Moros, whose main desire in life is to murder the pearl divers and destroy the native industries of the Philippines.

"After a year on various coast guard steamers doing patrol duty," said young Jorgenson to-day, "I was transferred to the Basilian, also a coast guard vessel, which, however, had been detailed to transfer lepers from the various ports of the Philippines to Culuon island. For three months we transferred hundreds of the lepers to the isolation pen on Culuon.

"While the American officers used every kindness and gentleness in the work of taking away the unfortunates from the villages and towns to the lonely island, they often had to use force to prevent rescues by friends and relatives. Sometimes the scenes were heartrending when families had to be separated because there was no room for the lepers to take their kin to Culuon.

"In many instances the Moros, under the pretext of assisting the friends and relatives of the lepers, would attack us, and on one occasion a numerous force surrounded the Basilian, but were repulsed.

"As leprosy is not contagious to the European or American, none of us were afraid to handle the lepers. Three months of this was enough for all of us on the Basilian, and to a man we asked for a transfer to another steamer. Capt. T. A. Hillgrov, who, by the way, is a New York man, was in command of the Basilian. All in all, we transferred about 3,000 lepers in the three months we were on this detail. I quit the leprosy transfer work in August of last year and a month later shipped on the Atlas bound for home."

AUTHOR, AND WOMAN HE GAVE TO ANOTHER MAN AS RUSKIN DID.

J. M. BARRIE.

John Ruskin's world famous act in giving his wife to his friend, Sir John Millais, has been duplicated by J. M. Barrie, author of modern days. The divorce which Barrie sought in England, when he found that his wife loved Gilbert Cannon, a young dramatic critic, has been made absolute and the infatuated couple is free to wed. Barrie gave his former wife a deed to a palatial home at Franham and $750 a year income for life. The author admits that he dearly loves the woman he divorced, but for the sake of her happiness gave her to Cannon.

Stage Superstitions.

An umbrella opened on the stage is supposed to bring bad luck, and many actors would hesitate about wearing new shoes on the first night of a play. The evil effects of new shoes are said, however, to be averted by wearing them on the wrong feet. In fact, any player who makes this mistake in the hurry of dressing regards it as a good omen not to be disturbed. Whistling on the stage during rehearsals is believed to insure a frost on the night of production, and in operatic circles a yellow clarinet in the orchestra is held to bring about the same dire result.

WOMEN'S ILLS.

Many women who suffer with backache, bearing-down pain, headaches and nervousness do not know that these ailments are usually due to trouble with the kidneys. Doan's Kidney Pills remove the cause.

Mrs. M. McFadden, Iowa City, Iowa, says: "I would have died had it not been for Doan's Kidney Pills. For years I suffered from terrible backaches. I gradually grew worse until I had to take to my bed, where I lay unconscious. I began using Doan's Kidney Pills after the doctors had failed to help me and was completely cured."

Remember the name—Doan's. For sale by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Women Wear Nightcaps.

Hush-h-h! It is quite possible you know it already, but it is a secret just the same, and it never would do to have it talked about; but the fact is that all we girls are going back to the fashion of our grandmothers and—yes, wearing nightcaps. But the nightcap of to-day is a very different affair from those that were worn fifty or sixty years ago. Those were frankly ugly, usually made of some coarse and heavy material, which covered the head completely, extending over the ears and under the chin. They were worn for warmth, for there was no steam heat at that date, and bedrooms often were chilly. The nightcaps of to-day are beautiful affairs of laces and silks and all kinds of dainty weaves, the New York Press says, and though the man who buys one might be inclined to doubt it, they have the reason of their existence in the motives of strict economy. With the elaborate styles of coiffure that now are in fashion women find they can fritter away a most unwelcome proportion of their pin money on their hairdressers, and they have taken to nightcaps so that after their hair has been fixed up for a dinner or theater party in the evening they can save it from being mussed up at night and preserve the effect of a single visit to the hairdresser for at least two or three days.

Governor Hughes of New York, whom President Taft has named for the Supreme bench, is to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Justice Brewer of Kansas. Justice Brewer was the second of his family to serve with Chief Jsutice Fuller in the capacity of associate justice. Stephen J. Field, whom Justic McKenna of San Francisco succeeded in 1897, was his uncle. Others who have been members of the court since Fuller was appointed by President Cleveland are Joseph P. Bradley of New Jersey, Stanley Mathews of Ohio, Horace Gray of Massachusetts, Samuel Blatchford of New York, Lucius Q. C. Lamar of Mississippi, Henry B. Brown of Michigan, George Shiras Jr. of Pennsylvania. Chief Justice Fuller is the oldest member of the court, though Justice Harlan, who is the oldest in point of service, having been a member since the Hayes administration of thirty-three years ago, is a close second. The baby of the court, William Henry Moody, is 57, while the other four range in age from 61 to 69, so the court is a living exemplification that old men are for counsel.

The honor and responsibility of naming the chief justice of this high tribunal is given to comparatively few Presidents. In the 120 years which have passed since the Supreme Court held its first session in the Exchange of the City of New York, Feb. 4, 1790, twenty-six men have served as President of the United States, but there have been only eight men to serve as chief justice. John Jay, John Rutledge, Oliver Ellsworth, John Marshall, Roger Brooke Taney, Salmon P. Chase, Morrison R. Waite and Melville Weston Fuller form the distinguished list. Marshall served the longest term, thirty-four years. He and Taney together covered a period of sixty-three eventful years.

GOVERNOR C. E. HUGHES.

In 1890 the centenary of the Supreme Court was celebrated with fitting ceremony in New York, the city where it first sat. At that celebration Edward S. Phelps said of this tribunal: "Judges will be appointed and will pass. One generation rapidly succeeds another. But whoever comes and whoever goes, the court remains, keeping alive through many a century we shall not see, the light that burns with a constant radiance upon the high altar of American constitutional justice."

MOUSE IN THE CHOIR.

During a service in the Presbyterian Church at Milford, Mich., a sly little mouse crept out from a hole in the wall and darted toward a row of young ladies who sat back of the pulpit and composed part of the choir. One of them espied the little rodent and instantly there was a hubbub which interrupted the service for several minutes. Skirts were hastily gathered together and the female singers quickly got off the floor, using their chairs as temporary retreats. Alarmed at the racket the mouse made off in another direction, to the relief of all present. The minister then resumed his sermon.

PLAN OF THE ARENA FOR THE JEFF-JOHNSON FIGHT.

DIAGRAM OF THE SEAT PLAN OF THE FIGHT ARENA.

Those who are going to see the Jeffries and Johnson fight can glean some sort of an idea regarding the location of the seats from the accompanying reproduction of the architect's blue print of the seating scheme. Octagonal in form, the arena is planned to seat 30,000 at present, but it can be enlarged to accommodate twice that number should the occasion warrant. The highest priced seats will be $50. These will be ringside boxes. Right behind them are the $30 seats, then two divisions of $25 and $15 seats, and around the outside the $10 and $5 seats.

What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:
"I would some raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your market will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel 150 miles north of the international boundary. FARM AND GARDEN

A Ground Leveller.

A cheap and effective contrivance for levelling uneven land is shown in the accompanying illustration. The leveller may be made of any convenient length up to 12 feet; the steel smoothing plate is very light, but will last a long time. It is brought from the middle 3x2 in. beam to the underneath of the back 6x3 in. beam, and holes are cut in it for the ties and the bolts. It is a flat steel sheet with ends turned 1 in. and secured with 1 in. screws. The cutter is shod with 2½x¼ in. steel plate, with bevelled edge, secured with 2 in. screws. The stand for the driver is of pine, 2 ft. 9 in. by 6 in. by 1½ in. In use the driver standing on the plate, by moving forward causes the front beam with its cutting edge to enter the ground, and carry forward any soil cut off. By moving backward he raises the cutting edge, allowing the accumulated earth to pass under in as great or as little quantity as he pleases; while the sloping steel sheet smoothes it out, crushes the lumps and spreads it into any depressions.

Biggest Farm in World.

The announcement that the republic of Mexico is about to make some effort to curb the princely aspirations of Don Luis Terrazas of the State of Chihuahua promises to bring into the public eye one of the most remarkable and at the same time one of the least known of the world's unusual men. Four years ago a German prince traveled 5,000 miles to visit a "farmer," and this farmer was Don Luis, whose "farm," Mexicans are now beginning to believe, is getting too large for the public health. In short, it is the biggest farm in the world. In area it ranks with the largest of European kingdoms and empires, and would make one of the big States of the Union. It measures 150 miles from north to south and 200 miles from east to west, or 8,000,000 acres in all. It embraces whole ranges of mountains, entire water systems, volcanoes, mineral lands and thousands of lakes. Over it roam 1,000,000 head of cattle, 700,000 sheep and 300,000 horses. The "farmhouse" is the most magnificent in the world—a palace costing $1,600,000 in gold, superbly furnished, with rooms to accommodate 500 guests.—The Bookkeeper.

A Labor Saver.

The little picture tells it all. This little device may be worked through any cellar door or window. It will save many steps when your time is most valuable. Try it once and be convinced.

The Queen Bee.

The queen bee lives from two to five years, according to the manner in which she is raised. When raised by the natural way, as by the swarming of the bees, and the mother queen is two or more years old, she often lives four or five years. The life of the workers varies from forty-five days in the honey-making season to five or sometimes six months during winter, taking the time of October to April. Drones very seldom live more than four or five weeks in hot weather.

A New Pear Disease.

A new disease among pears has been noted in Belgium. The diseased fruit shows round brown spots, which increase in size until the greater part of the fruit is affected, after which it falls. In one instance the loss due to this fungus was great, fully one-half of the fruit being destroyed. Where the pears have been bagged they did not suffer from the fungus. Spraying with Bordeaux mixture, it is believed, will prevent the disease.

Ensilage.

Corn ensilage possesses numerous advantages for early forage, as it is at hand many times when it would be difficult to get spring crops available for early feeding. An acre of corn will produce more succulent food in the form of ensilage than an acre of any other kind of forage. The feeding value of ensilage is so well known that it is useless to discuss its merits.

A Co-Operative Market.

The price of living has become such a bugbear that something will have to be done beside boycotting the butchers to make things cheaper. Some of the farmers and gardeners in and about Denver are organizing for the purpose of supplying consumers with products at one-half the rate of the retailers. They propose to sell independently and have a co-operative market store, where all the farmers belonging to the association will sell their goods. This has not been done in Denver before because the wholesalers and jobbers have control of the transportation facilities.—Field and Farm.

Need of Exercise.

Keep the chicks busy and hustling for all they get to eat; never feed them on a bare surface where they can eat without scratching. This is the easiest and surest way to insure strong, rugged chicks that will not be failing ill with "leg weakness" and similar ailments. Scatter all feed in a litter, making the chicks hunt and dig for it. This litter should be about 2 inches deep for chicks less than a month old, and composed of cut straw or hay, or chaff from the hay mow or floor. Sawdust is not very good for this purpose, because the chicks usually will eat more or less of it, and sometimes with bad results.—Agricultural Epitomist.

For Seed Potatoes,

Experiment shows that the most economic potato seed is made by cutting a medium-sized tuber into quarters. It also shows that larger pieces of seed potatoes will produce a very much heavier yield, as the young plant has more nourishment to begin with; under field conditions, however, the medium-sized tuber cut in quarters is the best and most economical. If this can not be done, spread the seed out in a thin layer in a cool, dark place, and they may be used at any time within ten days after cutting without appreciable loss. Never sack or barrel the cut seed, nor expose it to the hot sun.

The Milker.

Many times the milker goes to his task after brushing horses or doing other dirty work, with his hands soiled and his clothing thickly covered with dust. Both soiled hands and dusty clothing are loaded with germs that injure milk. Before commencing to milk the milker should cleanse his hands and slip on a clean suit and cap, which are used for no other purpose, and which may be easily washed. He should always milk with dry hands and never allow his hands to come in contact with the milk.—Missouri Dairyman.

Poisoned by Eggs.

That many people are poisoned by eggs, and not by spoiled eggs only, but often by those that are freshly laid and apparently good, is asserted by a French chemist. Numerous cases of poisoning due to eclairs, or cream cakes, have occurred recently in Paris, and it was in the course of an investigation of these that the conclusion was reached that the toxic action was always the fault of the eggs in the custard, never of mineral poisons introduced accidentally or of the other ingredients of the cream. French eggs, it is said, become infected before they are laid.

Cross-Cut Saw Support.

Two pieces of lath or other light strip of wood bored together as shown at 3 in the accompanying illustration, will stiffen a cross-cut saw so that one man will be able to saw with it without difficulty. The strips of wood tend to control the wabble of the free end. A piece of stove wire twisted around the saw and a strip at 2 will aid in keeping it in place. A wire twisted about the laths at 3 will help to maintain the strength.

A ONE-MAN SAW.

The Lighten Woman's Work.

Women are coming into their own every day on the farm. Time was when labor-saving devices were thought of only in connection with farm work. But that is changing. Woman's work at the best is hard, but is rendered much easier by the employment of handy devices which cost but little.

The telephone and the rural mail delivery have wrought great improvement in the lives of the farmer's wife and daughters of the farm and have done more to cultivate the spirit of true neighborliness than anything else.

The Use of Plaster in Manure.

Land plaster of gypsum is sulphate of lime. Plaster was formerly used largely on clover, but now in many sections of the country it is rarely used except in stables or in manure piles. This is because it has the power to hold the ammonia by making a chemical change, which holds the ammonia or part of it as a solid. In the soil plaster has some effect in breaking up combinations of potash, so they are available as plant food.

Squash Bugs.

Striped bugs and squash bugs, which are some seasons so very destructive, are directed to their favorite food by the sense of smell, and a most effective way of baffling them is to place two or three moth balls in each hill. The strong odor constantly given off by these will so overcome the natural scent of the plants that few will find them.

Corn from China.

The Department of Agriculture is experimenting with corn shipped from China. Plants raised last year averaged less than 16 inches in height, with an average of 12 green leaves at the time of tasseling. The ears averaged 5½ inches in length and 4½ in greatest circumference, with 16 to 18 rows of small grains.

"Richness" of Milk.

What is commonly known as the richness of milk depends upon the amount of butter fat it contains. There is so much difference in the composition of milk from cheese factories that many large butter and cheese factories now test all the milk they buy, and pay for it according to its butter fat content.

Australia's Wheat Crop.

Australia had a wheat crop in 1908-09 of 82,400,000 bushels, or 31,400,000 bushels more than in 1907-08.

HOUSEHOLD TALKS

Fig Sandwiches.

Chop eight figs very fine and cook to a paste, with water to nearly cover. Add a dozen blanched almonds minced and pounded fine and season with a little lemon juice. When cold spread between thin slices of buttered bread or on lady fingers or sweet wafers. This may be varied by flavoring with orange extract and a little grated orange rind and spreading between slices of angel or sunshine cake.

Cookies.

One cup butter, 2 cups sugar, one-half cup milk, yolks of 4 eggs, 3 teaspoons baking powder, salt and flavoring to suit taste, flour to roll out thin. Dip the cookies in the whites of the eggs and sprinkle with sugar before baking. Instead of using the egg whites, as the rule directs, I often make the silver cake as when cooking for a fair-sized family it seems to be more economical.

Ginger Puffs.

Sift together one-half teaspoon ginger, one-half teaspoon cinnamon, 1 teaspoon soda, 2½ cups sifted flour. Add one-half cup molasses, one-half cup sugar, one-half cup cold water, one-fourth cup melted butter, 1 beaten egg. Drop by teaspoonfuls on buttered pans and while cooking put half an English walnut meat on top of each puff. Cook in quick oven.

Green Pea Soup.

Soak over night one-half pound of dried green peas and put on to boil in three pints of water with one small onion, into which have been pressed three cloves. When the peas are well done put all through a colander. Return to the fire a few minutes before serving, adding one level tablespoon of flour and a teaspoon of butter worked to a cream. Season to taste.

Molasses Cookies.

Two cups of New Orleans molasses, one cup of brown sugar, one cup of shortening, one-half cup of hot water, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, two eggs, three heaping teaspoonfuls of baking soda dissolved in the water one teaspoonful each of cinnamon, ginger, cloves, allspice and salt. Flour to roll soft. Cut into rounds and bake in a rather quick oven.

Cocoanut Peppermint Candy.

Put into a saucepan two cups of sugar and one-half cup of water. When they boil add a pinch of cream of tartar and one-third cup of shredded cocoanut. Boil, stirring for seven minutes; add a teaspoonful of peppermint and stir until the mixture begins to granulate. Drop in small quantities on waxed paper.

Fruit Pudding.

One pound of raisins, stoned; one pound of currants, one-half pound of chopped suet, one-quarter of a pound each of bread crumbs, sliced citron and candied lemon, one-half cup of sugar, one nutmeg grated, ten eggs, yolks and whites beaten separately, one-half cup of blanched almonds. Put in a pudding bag and steam six hours.

Cream of Indian Soup.

Mix together a tablespoonful of flour, a quarter cupful of corn meal and a half teaspoonful of salt. Stir gradually into a quart of boiling water, and after boiling up well put into a double boiler and cook an hour and a half. Add a cupful of rich milk or cream and serve with popcorn or croutons.

Celery Rameikins.

Boil two slices of bread in a little sweet milk; when smooth add four tablespoonfuls of grated celery, and two of butter. When well heated remove from the fire, and add the beaten yolks of two eggs, salt and pepper. Stir in carefully the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs, and bake for fifteen minutes.

Boiled Tripe with Rice.

Put two pounds of fresh tripe to boil in two quarts of water. Add one chopped onion, a bit of garlic, three tomatoes sliced, salt and pepper, and when half the water has boiled away put in a small cupful of rice. Simmer gently and serve when the rice is dry.

Lambs' Kidneys, Saute.

Split three pairs of lambs' kidneys, scald them, throw into cold water, then drain and wipe dry. Fry in butter and when done pour over them a sauce made by adding to the fat in the pan a gill of stock, salt and pepper to taste, and one-half tablespoonful of sherry.

Whole Wheat Muffins.

Separate two eggs, add to the yolks half pint of milk, one and a half cups of whole wheat flour, one tablespoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of baking powder and beat thoroughly. Stir in the well-beaten whites of the eggs and bake in a quick oven for fifteen minutes.

Fried Soup Chicken.

When making chicken broth remove the pieces of chicken after stewing, roll each piece in beaten egg, then in cracker dust, and fry in bacon fat. Be sure to use bacon fat, as this imparts a pleasant flavor. Serve surrounded with bits of bacon fried crisp.

Mutton Broth.

To each pound of mutton meat and bones add one quart of cold water. Cut the meat and crack the bones. After bringing to a boil cook slowly and gently. Add a little barley and when all is tender take out the meat and bones. Season to taste.

Fat on the Floor.

When frying hot fat may be spilled on the floor. In that case at once pour cold water on it. The cold water will cause the fat to harden, when it can be taken up with a knife, instead of being allowed to sink into the wood or stone of the floor.

Her Scalp Itched Intolerably.

"Just about two years ago, some form of humor appeared on my scalp. The beginning was a slight itching but it grew steadily worse until, when I combed my hair, the scalp became raw and the ends of the comb-teeth would be wet with blood. Most of the time there was an intolerable itching, in a painful, burning way, very much as a bad, raw burn, if deep, will itch and smart when first beginning to heal. Combing my hair was positive torture. My hair was long and tangled terribly because of the blood and scabs. This continued growing worse and over half my hair fell out. I was in despair, really afraid of becoming totally bald.

"Sometimes the pain was so great that, when partially awake, I would scratch the worst places so that my finger-tips would be bloody. I could not sleep well and, after being asleep a short time, that awful stinging pain would commence and then I would wake up nearly wild with the torture. A neighbor said it must be salt rheum. Having used Cuticura Soap merely as a toilet soap before, I now decided to order a set of the Cuticura Remedies—Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills. I used them according to directions for perhaps six weeks, then left off, as the disease seemed to be eradicated, but toward spring, eighteen months ago, there was a slight return of the scalp humor. I commenced the Cuticura treatment at once, so had very little trouble. On my scalp I used about one-half a cake of Cuticura Soap and half a box of Cuticura Ointment in all. The first time I took six or seven bottles of Cuticura Pills and the last time three bottles—neither an expensive or tedious treatment. Since then I have had no scalp trouble of any kind. Standing up, with my hair unbound, it comes to my knees and had it not been for Cuticura I should doubtless be wholly bald.

"This is a voluntary, unsolicited testimonial and I take pleasure in writing it, hoping my experience may help someone else. Miss Lillian Brown, R. F. D. 1, Liberty, Me., Oct. 29, 1909."

Battle On.

"What's causing all that racket in there?" asked the business caller, pausing at the door of the office.

"Couple o' agents tryin' to sell the boss two different kinds o' 'cyclopedias," said the office boy.

"Worn to a Frazzle."

When President Roosevelt popularized the word "frazzle" he reminded lots of women of the only expression that tells how they feel after the work of washday or housecleaning with common old yellow laundry soap. Easy Task laundry soap—the hard, white, pure, quick-action soap—cuts the work square in two and keeps women from getting frazzled out.

Not Sisters

Now and again you see two women passing down the street who look like sisters. You are astonished to learn that they are mother and daughter, and you realize that a woman at forty or forty-five ought to be at her finest and fairest. Why isn't it so?

The general health of woman is so intimately associated with the local health of the essentially feminine organs that there can be no red cheeks and round form where there is female weakness.

Women who have suffered from this trouble have found prompt relief and cure in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It gives vigor and vitality to the organs of womanhood. It clears the complexion, brightens the eyes and reddens the cheeks.

No alcohol, or habit-forming drugs is contained in "Favorite Prescription." Any sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. Every letter is held as sacredly confidential, and answered in a plain envelope. Address: World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

REAL LIVE WASHINGTON GOSSIP

(BY TAVENNER)

One hundred and thirty-three millions of dollars:

Try to comprehend the magnitude of this sum if you can; and then pause and reflect over the fact that it is the amount the senate has voted to spend on the navy in a single year, in a time of profound peace. Then consider that only 12 years ago, in 1898, the naval appropriation was out $33,003,234, or one hundred millions less than the amount appropriated for the year ending, June 30, 1911.

A fact in connection with this awful increase which the public seldom hears is that every penny of this $100,000,000 which is to be spent in excess of the amount used in 1898, comes from the people; not from the rich, but largely from working men and women.

It is the ultimate consumer who pays the battleship bills, who maintains an ever increasing army of officeholders in Washington, and who meets the one-hundred-and-one extravagances of the government. He does it by paying excessive prices for the things he buys.

The government raises practically all of its funds through the custom houses and the internal revenue offices, where taxes are levied on things eaten, worn or used by the people. When the consumer purchases a protected article—and practically all of the necessaries of life are protected—he pays the real or natural value of the article and in addition thereto the amount of the tariff tax.

The more battleships constructed, the greater the amount the government must raise through the tax on consumption, and the greater the cost of living.

Thus it is not so strange that under the Taft administration, which is spending more than twice the amount used by Cleveland to run the government, the cost of living is 50 per cent greater than under the Cleveland administration.

Enthusiasm Performs Wonders

WHEN the score is 1 to 1 in the last half of the ninth—your team at the bat—2 men on bases and no one out, there's something doing right away—you are up in arms yelling—rooting—doing all you can to rattle the pitcher—make him blow up—go ballooning—it's enthusiasm and it often turns the tide of battle from defeat to victory.

This same brand of enthusiasm directed towards Men's Clothes Perfection is pretty apt to turn out for YOU—Clothes that are right—that satisfy you as being right—It's the kind of clothes you want—the kind you get if made by

Beside a day in June, my dears, all other days are nothing, for then it is one's eager ears may hear the soft wind soughing by forest ways, and perfect days of brightly flowered meads and joyous song are come along just like a string of beads.

A poet one time asked us what is peradventure like it, and died well knowing we had not the wit required to strike it. He simply tried, before he died, to give us one so hid, we'd work at it till time shall quit, and by the gods he did.

The breath of summertime shall rouse the festive calf to action, and what with unrestrained carouse, he'll do for an attraction. He'll buck and dance around the manse in no great show of grace, and wave his tail with brave assail in Mr. Halley's face.

The heavy-droning bumble bee shall kiss the blushing clover, and skies as blue as any sea shall blend the planet over. The graduate shall right the state from Maine across to Yuma, and the groom in stress shall S. O. S. his dad for more mazuma.

Of June it may be said, indeed,
It is a great invention,
And one we rather badly need
To somewhat ease the tension.
If we're to fish, to loaf and wish,
Or hearken Nature's call,
We'll do it soon or late in June,
Or not do it at all.

The comet, having hung about until we were converted, shall gradually peter out and leave us quite deserted. We must recall we are not all the world it sets aright, and bid it speed where there is need to cause another fright.

It is a sort of cop upon a beat of great dimensions, and must by then be getting on to scatter its attentions. They have John D.'s and Morgan P.'s on many a distant bell, and were it not for Halley hot these few would grab it all.

A Guggenheim would capture Mars, a Rockefeller Venus, and Morgans on the other stars would utterly demean us. We'd even be, unhappily, quite naked where we sit if it were not that Halley got around and saw to it.

It will not all at once appear how far the comet served us, or just to what extent the fear prevailed while it observed us; but safe to say that for a day or thereabouts somewheres the trusts won't find it half so hard to tell our things from theirs.

P. V. HOFFMAN

Non-Partisan Candidate for Judge Defines His Position

I was defeated as nominee of the republican convention for judge by misrepresentation of my position on the local option law, and by certain political tricks, which deprived me of a majority of the delegates of DeKalb county, necessary to secure the nomination. I still believe I was the choice of the great majority of the republicans of the circuit, and that a fair expression of their sentiments would have given me the nomination.

The statute provides that I can be a non-parisan candidate by having twenty-four voters of the circuit file a petition with the clerks of the courts of Steuben and DeKalb counties not more than sixty days or less than fifteen days before the election. The method of nomination by petition in cases of of judges and other non-political candidates, is the only method allowed in Massachusetts, by a recent statute, and is being generally advocated by civic reformers, as the fairest method of getting candidates before the people where the office is non-political. I will therefore, be a candidate to be nominated by petition, which enables every voter of the circuit, who wishes to see the office of circuit judge removed from the manipulations of politicians to cast his vote for me.

To correct the false impressions that have gone out as to my position on the county local option law, I will state that I voted and worked for all the nominees of the republican legislative and county tickets two years ago, out of principle and because I regarded all the nominees as men of high character, and good republicans. This was an endorsement by me of the county local option law, which was declared for in the republican platform two years ago.

That law has been upheld and construed by the Supreme Court as to every phase of the law, and the Circuit judges are bound to enforce it according to its spirit. I have no sympathy with the liquor dealers or their methods, and aside from acting as attorney for a few of them in remonstrance cases have never done anything to assist the cause they espouse. I do not hold that personal liberty is involved in the regulation or the complete suppresion of the liquor traffic in so far as the public good may be subserved. Recent scientific tests have shown that the smallest quantity of alchol impairs the user for as good physical or mental labor, as the party who totally abstains from its use. In view of such evidence every right thinking peron must be opposed to the liquor traffic.

The office of judge is not so important to me as the correction of the false impressions, so widele circulated as to my position on the liquor traffic.

Respectfully submitted,
P. V. HOFFMAN.

The Sunrise of Life

Infants and children are constantly needing a laxative. It is important to know what to give them. Their stomach and bowels are not strong enough for salts, purgative waters or cathartic pills, powders or tablets. Give them a mild, pleasant, gentle laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is the one great remedy for you to have in the house to give children when they need it. It is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed, and if you want to try it before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1.00 a bottle. 22-1m

CLEVER RUSSIAN SWINDLERS.

The Plausible Old Military Man Who Made a St. Petersburg Jeweler Whom He Robbed Act as His Accomplice. The Energetic Police Agents.

Nowhere is a uniform more potent than in Russia, and that fact has more than once been utilized by swindlers in their daring operations.

Some years ago a jeweler on the Nevsky Prospekt of St. Petersburg received a visit one sunny afternoon from an old and decrepit officer in the uniform of a general. The old gentleman was assisted from his carriage to the counter by an attentive footman in livery. The smiling jeweler received him with the deference due to his rank and accommodated him with a chair. The gentleman had come to choose a birthday present for his wife.

The tradesman displayed his most valuable collars and tiaras. The veteran lingered over them lovingly. At last he made choice of a costly suit and intimated that it would meet his purpose.

Tremblingly the old soldier sought in his breast for his pocketbook. He had sallied forth without it. The disappointment of both shopman and customer was acute. The general, however, was not a strategist without resource. With apologies he asked for writing materials and essayed to pen a letter to his home. The excitement acting upon his palsied hands made his writing illegible. The jeweler was in despair. The old man sighed and remarked upon the sad consequences of campaigns. The jeweler was touched. He had an inspiration.

"Will your excellency permit me to write the instruction to your dictation?"

The general was delighted and most gratefully accepted the offer.

On the business paper of his firm the jeweler wrote the stumbling words of the veteran:

Dear Anna—I have need of money. Please take 5,000 rubles from my safe and return by bearer. Lovingly yours,
IVAN.

The general's own footman was dispatched with the note. The old man sat admiring the jewels until in due course the servant returned with the 5,000 rubles. The tiara was bought and paid for. The jeweler escorted his distinguished client to the carriage and stood bowing as he drove away.

That evening when the jeweler returned to his home his wife asked why he had withdrawn so large a sum from the family safe.

"What sum?" asked the shopkeeper in surprise.

"Why, the 5,000 rubles you sent for this afternoon."

"Five thousand rubles! I don't understand."

"Heavens, here's your letter!"

The wife produced the letter in the jeweler's own handwriting upon the jeweler's own business note paper, and he for the first time realized that the common name of Anna and the common name of Ivan were respectively those of himself and his wife as well as of the palsied officer and his visionary spouse.

The jeweler had paid for the officer's tiara.

Of the same genre, though differing in detail, was another swindle perpetrated upon a jeweler in St. Petersburg. The mystery surrounding the composition of the secret service force is the most effective, too, in the hands of the intelligent Russian criminal. On the Grande Morskaia is one of the most magnificent jewelry stores in Europe, the house of Fauberge. To it one day drove up a splendidly appointed equipage, in which were seated two ladies. The ladies descended at Fauberge's and were received as customers of distinction. The older lady introduced herself as the wife of a well known statesman recently returned from abroad. She explained that she had been authorized by her husband to choose a collar of diamonds. The jeweler spread before her the gems of his collection.

After much hesitation the lady picked one of the most expensive, but to her dismay the price exceeded that suggested by her husband. The salesman dreaded to lose so profitable a customer. Could not madam obtain the consent of her excellency's husband to the purchase? The lady meditated and at length begged permission to drive to the office of her husband's ministry—the distance was not great—to show him the collar and gain his permission to buy it. Her companion would remain in the shop during her absence as a hostage. The jeweler was delighted with the suggestion.

The lady departed in her carriage. Time passed—quarter of an hour, half an hour, three-quarters of an hour.

Suddenly there rushed into the shop two police agents, who announced their authority and showed their official badges. They assured the astonished Fauberge that he had been swindled. The jeweler trembled. He produced his hostage. The detectives seized upon her. Protesting, she was hustled into a hack and driven away to the police office.

It was the last the jeweler saw of the woman, the police agents or the diamonds. The detectives were the coachman and the footman of the brilliant equipage, who had changed their clothes and returned to rescue their accomplice.

Profit in Ancient History.

A gentleman who was visiting one of the public schools in a Scotch town asked a bright looking boy:

"What profit is there in the study of ancient history?"

"About 18 pence, I suppose," was the reply.

"What?"

"Well, the teacher makes us buy the books from him, and we have to pay 3 shillings. I think he gets them for 18 pence apiece, so he has a clear profit of 18 pence, according to my calculation."—London Standard.

THE SPEED OF NO RETURN.

Velocity a Body Must Have to Leave Earth and Never Come Back.

There are a great many odd terms in science none of which has a title so weird as the speed of no return. This means the velocity a body must have in leaving the earth in order for it never to come back. It has been accurately worked out and is found to be about seven miles a second. Now, though this speed has never been obtained by artificial means on the earth, still it is interesting to note the theory as regards the further actions of the body. It would continue outward in a curved line until it was controlled by balancing forces, mainly the earth, moon and sun, in such a way as to make it have an orbit of its own. So it would go on revolving forever just as any other planet.

Although this speed has never been obtained by artificial means, it is found in nature on the earth, and its application has a great deal to do with animal life on our planet. As is well known, it is a pet theory of the scientists that the earth is losing its atmosphere, just as the moon has already lost hers, on account of the wonderful vibrational speed of the molecules of a gas. Hydrogen gas is known to have a molecular velocity of over the necessary amount, and it is a startling proof of the theory that no free hydrogen is found in our atmosphere. The theory is that this gas on being set free rises on account of its lightness and when it gets to the outside edge of our ocean of air is left behind on one of its jumps, the earth going forward at a great rate itself, something like eight miles a second.

As the earth gradually lost its atmosphere it would become colder and colder on account of its inability to hold the heat received from the sun, and all animal and vegetable life would cease. This has already happened to the moon, its temperature never rising above zero, though the sun shines on it for two weeks at a time.

It is needless to say that even if this speed could be obtained by a cannon ball or other comparatively small body the friction with the air on its way would immediately burn it up, just as the shooting stars we see are burned up before reaching the earth. So if the visiting of the moon ever takes place it will have to be accomplished in a carriage with very thick sides and made of a material whose melting point is very high.—New York Tribune.

A POLISH WEDDING.

Fun and Profit Strangely Mingled in the Festivities.

A wedding among the Poles may certainly be said to hold its own among the more entertaining of marriage customs. There fun and profit are strangely mingled in the marriage festivities, for the bride depends upon the wedding festival for her dowry and rarely fails to get enough to enable her to begin housekeeping with comfort.

After the wedding feast a dance is in order, and at that dance every man who would distinguish himself must once in the evening at least claim the bride for a partner. The honor of dancing with her, however, is not to be obtained lightly. The aspirant must win the privilege and pay for it.

In one corner of the room the mother of the bride has taken up her position with a plate in her lap. The wise woman has chosen that plate carefully. It is made after the plan of an eating house coffee cup and could not justly be described as frail.

The gallant who wishes to dance with the bride—and, as has been said, all are in honor bound to do so—must pull out a piece of silver and throw it into the plate. Not until he has succeeded in breaking or chipping that almost invincible piece of crockery has he won the honor he seeks. Few succeed in making an impression upon the plate for less than a sum equal to 50 cents of our money.

The money thus accumulated goes to the bride and not unusually amounts to seventy-five or one hundred dollars, even where the crowd is apparently as poor as it can well be. This sum in a rural district of Poland is enough to start the young couple fairly in housekeeping.—Detroit Free Press.

An Unsafe Bird.

"How did the new parrot turn out?"

"Oh, he's a fine talker, but I'm awfully afraid I can't keep him."

"Why not?"

"He used to live in a medical college, and the students taught him a whole lot of professional terms. I was so mortified the other night. That rich Miss Morris was calling on us, and somebody asked her to sing. You know what a voice she has! Well, she sang a long French ballad for us, and the instant she finished the last verse that dreadful bird screeched 'Chloroform her!'"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Lack of Originality.

Says a Philadelphia physician: "The utter lack of originality in the human mind vexes me. Even the insane are not original in their delusions and mania, but they can be divided into classes, and each class has its one little uniform and unvarying set of aberrations. The insane cannot be other than imitative and commonplace."

Diplomacy.

"I can't get along with that cook."

"But have you tried diplomacy, my dear?"

"I have. Today I handed the minx her passports."—Washington Herald.

HAPPY WOMEN

Plenty of Them in Butler and Good Reason For It

Wouldn't any woman be happy,
After years of backache suffering,
Days of misery, nights of unrest,
The distress of urinary troubles,
She finds relief and cure?

No reason why any Butler reader should suffer in the face of evidence like this:

Mrs. George R. Walters, East Main St., Butler, Ind., says: "I suffered greatly from backache and often could hardly straighten after stooping. The kidney secretions caused me much annoyance by their irregularity in passage and when I commenced taking Doan's Kidney Pills procured at Phillips' drug store I was feeling miserable. The contents of the first box helped me so greatly that I continued their use and before long, I was completely cured. I gave a statement for publication in April, 1906, recommending Doan's Kidney Pills and at this time I can add that I have had no return of the complaint. I am always glad to say a word in favor of Doan's Kidney Pills."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Amos Moughler, the well known horse breeder of DeKalb county, has added another Kentucky jack to his list. He is said to be the largest jack ever brought to Indiana. This makes Mr. Moughler tnree head of horses and two jacks all of which are at his barn at the Clifton house for breeders' inspection.

"It cured me," or "It saved the life of my child," are the expressions you hear every day about Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. This is true the world over where this valuable remedy has been introduced. No other medicine in use for diarrhoea or bowel complaints has received such general approval. The secret of the success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is that it cures. Sold by G. W. Geddes. 22-1m

A horse driven by Fred Ginder became unruly while in town Monday, and as a result Mr. Ginder received a pretty severe cut across the upper lip. In passing Dr. Frank Fanning, who was making a call to the west part of the city in his automobile, the animal shied to one side, breaking the harness. He then began kicking and soon succeeded in releasing himself from the buggy which ran onto a sidling and upset, Mr. Ginder being yet in the vehicle. Mr. Fanning stopped his machine and took Mr. Ginder to his office and dressed the wound. Mr. Ginder was not injurned outside of the cut on the lip.

Mrs. Murray, Muncie, Ind.

A good, reliable family remedy—something that every member of the family can use when the occasion requires—is something worth knowing about. Mrs. Murray of Muncie, Ind., has had Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in her house for over five years, and when one bottle is used up she gets another. It is invaluable in constipation, indigestion and other stomach liver and bowel trouble. It is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed, and if you want to try it before before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Surup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggist at 50c and $1 a bottle. 22-1m

After Horse Thief

Mr. Bowser, deputy sheriff of Monroe county, Michigan, and Rev. Hoskins were in Waterloo yesterday looking for a stolen horse and a horse thief. The horse stolen belongs to Rev. Hoskins, a Baptist minister, of Temperance, Monroe county, Michigan. Description—12 years old, tall, slim bay, very small star in forehead, spike tail, shabby harness, open bridle. Buggy—red running gears, no stripes, black top. Harness old. The thief—heavy built, rough whiskers about a week's growth, stubby black mustache, black hat, overalls. Horse was stolen during the session of a Sunday school institute at 1 o'clock Saturday, and the route of the thief has been traced as far as Bryan, and any information should be sent to Edmund Dull, sheriff of Monroe county, who will pay a reward.—Press.

Divorce Cards Latest in Society

A Cincinnati woman has issued divorce cards explaining that she cannot see why it is not as proper to do that as to make formal announcements of engagements or births. The lady probably got her idea from John Astor, who, a few months ago, gave a notable divorce supper.

Divorce cards will, in addition to the information they convey, be useful in showing the sobial standing of the divorced lady or gentlenen. For those who make fine protentions handsomely engraved cards will have to be used, while people in the humbler walks of of life may be expected to get along with printed cards. It might be also suggested that a particularly dainty grass widow might add a pleasing touch by having her divorce cards adorned with baby ribbon and sent out in Sweet-scented envelopes.

The going astray of the astronomers in their calculations concerning the comet's course serves to show, after all the littleness of the greatest wisdom of men. Our sages have probed the mysteries of the firmament, but they have not even reached its fringes The students who have gone farthest have only touched the outer edges. There is beyond the furthermost investigations of the physicists more than an ultima thule; there is something that science cannot reveal te our finite understanding. The universe we know has its lessons, and yet our deepest philosophy cannot fully explain the the realities of the very things that we see. A Massachusetts commission of investigation has found that the cost of living is less in Canada than it is in this country. But of course the batting average of the joy of living in this country is higher.

In a New York court a baby's cry saved its father from going to prison by moving the pity of the judge. If it had been a good baby that never cried, this wouldn't have happened, which makes the moral of the story rather mixed.

Some small boys in Gotham tied up a playmate and set his clothing on fire and only prompt rescue by passersby saved him from serious injury. The little tormentors were dismissed with a reprimand, which shows why some people think Solomon knew what he was talking about.

"Gypsy Smith," the famous evangelist, who conducted a series of successful religious meetings in America last winter, has been leading a ten days' mission in Paris. This is the first time since Moody and Sankey visited the city in 1882 that Protestant revival meetings have been held in the French capital.

The national House of Representatives has passed a bill creating an art commission which shall exercise powers of supervision over the esthetic side of such work of the government as the erection of public buildings, the placing of statues and other monuments, and the laying out of public parks. The lack of such a body is apparent in almost every American city.

A passage in Sir Ernest Shackleton's account of his antarctic journey illustrates the way in which hardship fosters sympathy. During three months of his experience near the south pole he and his men suffered such extremes of hunger that, as they sat nibbling each his single biscuit, a crumb dropped by any one of them "would be followed by six pairs of eyes," and if the owner had not noticed the loss, his attention would be called to it. "We made up our minds," he recently told a London audience, "that never again would we see a hungry person flattening his nose against a cook-shop without giving him something to eat."

A young man to be a success should train himself never to let anything swerve him from his purpose, and when once he undertakes to do a thing he should follow it up to the very end. Because others may predict failure is no reason for a young man to assume that a task cannot be brought to a successful termination. Be honest and above board in all you undertake. This will stand you well in case that your acts require a rigid investigation on the part of your superiors. Be energetic and show the keenest interest in your work and seek all of the knowledge that you can. The time will come in every man's life when he will be called upon to show his real worth. Opportunity in some cases may seek the man, but the man for opportunity generally is the man who has learned his lesson of thrift and energy exceedingly well. Be honest in your dealings both with your employer as well as those you do business with, as a breach of trust is the hardest mistake for a man to live down. Stick to your vocation, study it, try to prove it and declare to yourself that if you win you will not slip a cog, but will make others follow as fast as they made you.

President Emeritus Eliot of Harvard University was recently quoted as favoring a law to authorize physicians to put hopeless patients out of their misery by painless means. He denies the accuracy of the report. He says he does not believe in the right of one person to kill another to end his agony, but he does believe that we should avail ourselves of anodynes, even though their use in a hopeless case may shorten the brief remaining span of life. This amounts to much the same thing as the statement alleged to be erroneous, except that Dr. Eliot seems to hint at suicide rather than professional murder. The patient may take anodynes until his pain is relieved and risk fatal consequences. But it must be remembered that many agonized patients are in a condition which incapacitates them for voluntary action; and most of them could not procure the powerful anodynes required without a doctor's prescription. What shall the doctor do in such a case? Shall he give the medicine with the primary object of relieving the pain and risk the killing? If the patient dies would the present law exonerate the physician? Would the court and jury presume, as in the case of a serious surgical operation, that the intent was merciful and not homicidal? In case of an arraignment and trial the verdict would undoubtedly be influenced by the circumstances. The surgeon who performs what is called a major operation, first notifying the patient and his friends that the effect may be fatal although he hopes for recovery, is never molested if the sufferer dies under the knife. Why may he not take chances with a drug as well as with a saw or cutting instrument? Probably no change in the existing law is needed to cover reasonable cases. Where the parties are all reputable it will usually be presumed that the exigencies of the case required the medicament and that the death was the incidental and not the premeditated outcome.

POPULAR SCIENCE

An electric elevator has been installed in the stairway which leads to the cupola of St. Peter's cathedral in Rome. The elevator has a capacity for carrying ten persons. It bears an appropriate Latin inscription.

Peter the Great, Russia's famous czar, when he was staying in England, had a particular liking for the companionship of Halley, after whom the comet is named. After carousing with him at Deptford one evening Peter wheeled the astronomer in a barrow through a yew hedge and did such damage that he had to pay handsome compensation to John Evelyn, the owner.

Ingenious Germans have experimented successfully with the fiber of the kapok or "silk cotton" tree of tropical Africa and Asia, and believe they have a useful substitute for cotton. If that is the case, they will have furnished additional proof that no substance, however valuable, is absolutely indispensable to man. Cotton long seemed to be almost so, and there are few things without which we should get on so badly, if there were nothing else to which to turn.

It is proposed to establish a wireless telegraph station at the meteorological observatory on Mount Mirador in the Philippines, to give warning of typhoons to vessels in the China sea, and points along the China coast. A similar station will probably be established later at Santo Domingo de Basco on the island of Batan, for communicating information of the presence of typhoons in that vicinity to the headquarters of the Philippine weather bureau at Manila.

Dr. G. F. Becker, discussing the possibility that petroleum may be derived from carbids of iron or other metals, points out that Bauer's map of magnetic declination in the United States "proves that petroleum is intimately associated with magnetic disturbances similar to those arising from the neighborhood of minerals possessing sensible magnetic attraction," and he adds that henceforth no geological theory of petroleum will be acceptable which does not explain this association. A writer in Nature remarks that if these conclusions are confirmed, a new and important sphere of usefulness for magnetic surveys will be opened.

Modern chemistry enables man to make over some of the most useful metals very much at his will, and greatly to his profit. Dr. W. Rosenhain, in England, recently made a report on the properties of new alloys of copper, aluminum and manganese, which show remarkable peculiarities. An alloy of 88 per cent copper, 9.99 per cent aluminum and 2.01 per cent manganese showed enormous tensile strength, a cold-drawn bar having a yield of 40.88 tons per square inch, and an ultimate stress of 52.03 tons per square inch. Another alloy is so hard that it can take a cutting edge sharp enough to sharpen a leadpencil. The British Admiralty is experimenting with these alloys to determine their resistance to corrosion in seawater.

Herbert Spencer and Billiards.

Herbert Spencer was an enthusiastic billiard player. He says that he found it "a very desirable way of passing the time," because it prevented thinking and excluded the temptation to read. "It suffices for me," he frankly adds, "that I like billiards, and the attainment of the pleasure given I regard as a sufficient motive. I have for a long time deliberately set my face against that asceticism which makes it an offense to do a thing for the pleasure of doing it. The opposite view is nothing else than a remote sequence of the old devil worship of the barbarian, who sought to please his god by inflicting pains on himself and believed his god would be angry if he made himself happy."

OPEN THY DOOR.

Open thy doors, O my soul,
To ocean and sky and plain,
To shelving shore, and breakers' roar,
And the mountains that shout again.

Open thy doors, O my soul,
To the scent of the climbing rose,
To the meadow's sweep, and the drowsy sheep,
And the woodland's deep repose.

Wider, wider, my soul,
The wind through the pine tree blow;
'Tis the Word of God that moveth abroad,
And deep to deep will go.

Open thy doors, O my soul,
And the fret and pain of care,
And the futile stress and the pettiness,
Will vanish into air.

A BIG BILL

I was just finishing breakfast when the misunderstanding began.

"The fact is, my dear," I said, "I've a long bill to meet."

"I shall never see another like it," she said mournfully. "It's only two guineas."

I groaned.

"Two guineas! For a hat?"

"Ye-es. It isn't dear, really, Fred; not for what it is."

"I really can't imagine. I don't want to grumble, Kit, but you've had £3 over your dress allowance already."

"You need not throw it in my face, if you have. Uncle John never did."

Uncle John is a crusty old bachelor. He brought Kitty up.

"Uncle John is rich. I am not." She turned her back on me and shrugged her shoulders. When I had finished my boots I took hold of her shoulders and turned her around. "You shouldn't have been so silly as to marry a poor man." She held me by the lapels of my coat and smiled.

"Perhaps I like you as well as hats," she said. "I'm dreadfully extravagant!" She sighed. "It is such a love!"

"Perhaps next month—?" She shook her head.

"It will be gone then."

There are as good hats in the shops as ever came out of them.

"No doubt it is a joke to you. You would not care if I wore a last year's hat to Paddington to meet Bill tomorrow."

Bill was her brother.

"If it weren't for that bill," I said doubtfully. "I don't know that they'd press me. Perhaps I might—"

"No, no! I won't. You'll lose your train, Fred."

"I'd like you to have it, of course," I told her. She looked at me with her head on one side and a finger on her lip.

I could see that she was thinking of fresh arguments. So I kissed her quickly and fled.

When I arrived at the office I found a telegram saying that her brother William's ship had reached Plymouth a day before time, and that he would get to Paddington about 1:50 p. m. Also, I found a request from one of our best customers that I would call on him at 1:45 o'clock. So I sent a wire to Kitty: "Cannot meet Bill. Due today 1:50. Ask Uncle John—Fred."

When I had finished my urgent business I rushed off home. Kitty met me at the door. She was naturally excited.

"Has he come?" I inquired.

"Yes. He's in the drawing room."

I entered hastily, but her brother was not there. Her uncle was. He stood upon the heartrug with his back to the fire and his arms under his coattails.

"Pleased to see you," he remarked, and frowned at me over his spectacles.

"Well," I said, with some annoyance. "I don't quite—er—"

"A pretty mess you've made of things!"

"I don't know what right—" I began; but Kitty pressed my arm suddenly. I noticed that she had been crying.

"However," he continued, "I expected something of the sort sooner or later."

"I'm sure it's not Fred's fault," Kitty protested. I was too bewildered for speech.

"A man," said he, "has no business to marry unless he can keep his wife properly."

"Kitty has told you!"

"What else did you expect?"

I shook my arm free from her and paced the room savagely.

"I never thought you'd round on me, Kit," I remonstrated, a trifle unsteadily.

"Who said she was?" snapped her uncle.

"She had no business to speak to you about it."

"You told me to!" she cried.

I raised my eyebrows.

"Nothing was further from my thoughts."

"But—" she began. Uncle John stopped her with a wave of his hand.

"Anyhow, Kitty has told me. Of course, I cannot let her want. I have written a cheque for the amount, but—"

"She shall not touch it!" I vowed ferociously.

"You are an insolent—idiot!" roared her uncle.

"Idiot or not," I thundered, "I will stand no interference between my wife and me. If Kitty is not satisfied with what I can do for her, she can—" Kitty gave such a violent sob that I had to put my arm around her.

"As for the hat," I told her huskily, "I made up my mind this morning that you should have it."

"Oh!" she wailed. "As if that mattered!"

"If it doesn't matter, why did you speak about it to your uncle?"

She looked up at me with her eyes swimming.

"Of course I didn't!"

I stared at them both.

"Then," I inquired, "whatever are you talking about?"

At that moment there was a bang at the front door, and we heard Brother Bill's big voice.

Then her brother rushed in like a breath of fresh air. He is a huge, good-natured, breezy fellow.

"Hullos, little Kit. Prettier than ever!" He hugged her.

"Why, uncle, you get younger every day!" Uncle John grunted a mollified grunt.

"Fred, you old bounder, why didn't you meet me? I suppose you got my wire saying I was due at 1:50 o'clock?"

"IT ISN'T DEAR, REALLY."

"Yes, old man. I couldn't get off, so I wired Kit. I thought she'd get her uncle to bring her; but—" I looked at her. She looked at Uncle John. Uncle John looked at me. Brother Bill looked at all of us in wonder.

After we had stared at one another for a few minutes Uncle John burst into an extraordinary roar of laughter. I had never heard him laugh before. Kitty always said he did so biennially.

She began laughing and crying together, till Bill and I shook her to stave off hysterics.

"I think," I confided to him, "they've both taken leave of their senses this afternoon."

Uncle John gave another yell. Then he picked up a telegram from the octagonal table.

"Read this, William," he commanded. This was my telegram, as delivered.

"Cannot meet bill due to-day one hundred and fifty. Ask Uncle John—Fred."

"What!" I cried. "You thought I wanted to borrow the money!"

Uncle John took a pinch of snuff very deliberately.

"It seems," he confessed, "that I misjudged you."

"I misjudged you, too, sir," I said slowly. "Only I think you might have asked particulars before—"

"Before he wrote us a check," suggested Kitty, pulling it out of her pocket and squeezing my arm appealingly.

"It was very good of you, sir," I confessed gratefully. He blew his nose furiously. Then he held out his hand and I shook it.

"We shall understand one another better in future, my boy."

Kitty laughed in her quick way, and patted her brother's arm.

"Thanks—to our big Bill."—Cassell's Saturday Journal.

LEPERS OF THE HAWAIIS.

Conditions on the Island of Molokai Have Been Misunderstood.

No greater misconception of any public institution prevails to-day than the general idea of the leper settlement on the island of Molokai, R. B. Kidd says in Harper's Weekly. Instead of the entire island being used for such purpose, the settlement comprises only eight square miles of a total area of 261 square miles. It occupies a tongue of land on the northern side of Molokai. The north, east and west shores of this tiny spot are washed by the Pacific, while on the south side rise precipitous cliffs of from 1,800 to 4,000 feet, which make the isolation seem even more hopeless than the beautiful deep-blue waters of the sea ever could. The most difficult and dangerous trail, constantly manned by government guards, foils escape, if it were ever contemplated by the land side.

Naturally the fear of being isolated at the settlement caused the natives to thwart segregation. Generally it was done by secreting their afflicted, yet there are instances of lepers using violence to resist arrest. The necessity of severing ties of the strongest affection involved grief of the deepest description, and many are the cases of abnegation where the clean have accompanied the afflicted to the settlement to die there with them. Then, too, by degrees there grew up the belief among the natives that terrible mistakes of diagnosis by the physicians were consigning innocent and helpless people to the living sepulcher. And as each year failed to eradicate the disease as had been represented, but still claimed its toll, the belief became almost universal that a larger proportion of those committed were sacrifices to the despotism and ignorance of the white man's medical science that boasted but could not cure.

By degrees, as the government realized the inability of the afflicted to care for themselves, conditions were improved, until finally the authorities took entire charge of the lepers, and to-day the appropriations for the maintenance and care of these wards are most generous and exceed $125,000 annually.

MERE MAN OUTBID BY WOMAN.

Los Angeles Widow Wins Farm from Wyoming Man at Auction.

Outbid by a woman. This was the experience of Edward B. Milner from the plains of Wyoming, in the contest for Yuma farm unit G 33, which was auctioned at the United States land office, says the Los Angeles Express.

Mrs. Mary E. Delo, widow, residing in this city, was the woman who refused to be outdone by a mere man.

The price paid was $201.

The land for which Mrs. Delo and Mr. Milner were bidding was a farm unit which went by default, the successful applicant in the drawing having failed to make the first payment within the ten-day period.

When Receiver Robinson offered this strip of land at auction a contest for the farm was begun.

It did not require the perception of a sage to see that the land was wanted by both Mr. Milner and Mrs. Delo.

As quickly as one bid, the price was raised by the other contestant for the farm. Rapidly the price was bid up to $100, and then increased steadily until it had soared to $200. At this figure, a friend of Milner persuaded him to withdraw from the bidding, and no person seemed willing to raise the price of $201 bid by Mrs. Delo.

Receiver Robinson declared that Mrs. Delo had purchased the first right to file an entry on farm unit G 33 of the Yuma land project for $201. In addition to this amount, it will be necessary for Mrs. Delo to pay the regular government price of $65 an acre.

Defeated in this quarter, but determined to have a Yuma farm, Mr. Milner studied the blue print showing the location of the various units, and selected a section which had been allowed to go by default by the original applicant, and filed an entry on it without paying any money except the regulation price of $65 an acre.

It was farm unit C 33, and Mrs. Delo and Mr. Milner will be near neighbors.

PRECIOUS GROUND.

Farm at $300,000 an Acre Maintained on Manhattan Island.

It is no uncommon thing to hear of farm land worth $100 an acre, but for a land owner to be offered $300,000 an acre, and besieged by bidders, is decidedly out of the ordinary. Mary G. Pinkey can dispose of her five-acre New York farm any day at that figure, but so far she has turned a deaf ear to all eager to acquire the property.

"Watt's farm," as it is known in New York, is in the heart of the city's uptown residential district, and apart from being one of the great city's curiosities—a real farm in a bustling metropolis—it stands alone in the matter of million-dollar farms. Comprising about five acres, it lies between Lenox and Seventh avenues, being bounded north and south by 139th and 140th streets.

On this piece of ground are an old colonial mansion, an acre of native oaks, several barns and more than an acre of cultivated soil. This miniature farm, owned, and until a year ago tenanted, by Miss Mary G. Pinkey, is the last of the celebrated and extensive Watt estate, and one of the surviving relics of old New York.

Daily an old man, who has been employed on the farm for more than half a century, may be seen hoeing potatoes, or adjusting bean poles, while on all sides of him, separated by an elaborate fence, the modern city is indicated by six-story apartment houses, honking motorcars and clattering elevated trains.

On the cultivated area corn, potatoes, cabbage, beans, peas and radishes are raised. A rooster and a dozen Leghorns still keep possession of the barnyard, and one cow supplies the milk and butter wants.—Kansas City Star.

MODERN NECESSITIES.

One of the reasons why it is expensive to live to-day is that people buy wholly unnecessary things. The fact is illustrated by a conversation which, as reported by Le Figaro, took place in a "novelty shop." A reporter went in to look round. A shiny object having attracted his attention, he inquired its use.

"Those are gilded pincers," said the clerk. "They are used to pick up letters you have put on the letter-scales."

"And that ivory stick, carved and forked at the end?"

"People use it to fish out things they have dropped into carafes."

"That square of morocco, about the size of a nut; what is that for?"

"It's a tampon, used to press down stamps after sticking them on envelopes."

"That shell roller?"

"To flatten out the corners of photographs."

"That ornamental box with a whole battery of tiny brushes?"

"They are used to clean other brushes; brushes to clean hairbrushes, brushes to clean toothbrushes, and brushes to clean nailbrushes, and so on."

"I see. And those Russian leather tubes?"

"Eye-protectors, to look at colored photograph projections in rooms adjoining lighted rooms."

"That little doll's funnel?"

"Oh, that is indispensable to pour perfumes into the vials in traveling-cases."

"And that jigamaree of complicated little silver sieves?"

"A novelty; it's a cleaner to take off spots of ink on lead pellets."

"Lead pellets?"

"Certainly; the shot you put into those little cups to stick pens in after using them."

"Are there many who use them?"

"No, but they are easy to sell."

Two Tactful Men.

Lincoln's ability to put men at ease is shown by Charles Carleton Coffin's contribution to the volume entitled "Reminiscences of Abraham Lincoln by Distinguished Men of His Time," wherein is narrated the story of the committee which notified him of his first nomination to the presidency.

Mr. Lincoln was almost unknown to the committee, and there was much embarrassment at the meeting.

The notification speech was brief. Mr. Lincoln's reply was equally brief; but with the utterance of the last syllable his manner changed. A smile, like the sun shining through the rift of a passing cloud sweeping over the landscape, illumined his face, lighting up every homely feature as he grasped the hand of Judge Kelley of Pennsylvania.

"You are a tall man, judge. What is your height?"

"Six feet three."

"I beat you. I am six feet four without my high-heeled boots."

"Pennsylvania bows to Illinois. I am glad that we have found a candidate for the presidency whom we can look up to, for we have been informed that there were only 'little giants' in Illinois."

Lincoln's remark and Judge Kelley's graceful reply, with its reference to Lincoln's rival, Stephen A. Douglas, put every one in good humor, and all embarrassment was gone.

Unspellable.

The seal folk of Newfoundland, for some reason not given by the St. John's correspondent of the New York Sun, describe their greasy spoil as "swolls," and they say they "spell" an object when they mean to carry it.

One can imagine the amazement of the young cleric who on one occasion asked a burly hunter how he spelled "swolls."

"We don't spell 'em, we haul 'em," was the bewildering reply.

Profaning the Grammar.

Katie, a 5-year-old resident of Boston, according to To-day's Magazine, ran to her father one morning, exclaiming, "Father, brother Harold swore!"

"Swore, did he?" inquired the parent, grimly, reaching for his slipper. "What did he say?"

"He said 'ain't,'" responded Katie, solemnly.

It can safely be said that one almanac is as poor as another.

The Defeat of Aldridge.

All analyses of conditions in the Thirty-second New York Congressional district, and the New York City newspapers have printed many in the last few days, have agreed in declaring the tariff the chief issue on which a verdict would be rendered in yesterday's special election.

Local influences have had their subordinate part in shaping the result, just as they would have had in any district in which an election might be held during these current weeks. The late graft exposures at Albany have not been without their effect on the prestige of the party to which George W. Aldridge belongs, exposures in which, it happened, Mr. Aldridge's own past acts were called in question, and a weighing of the records of the two candidates was alone enough to decide the course of more than a few of the voters at the polls. The great influence, however, that stood in the relation of cause and effect to the verdict was one that will be present in every Congressional district in the country when the ballots are marked in next November's election.

It is for this reason that the victory of James S. Havens over Mr. Aldridge is peculiarly gratifying and, taken in connection with the special elections in the Sixth Missouri and the Fourteenth Massachusetts district, highly significant.

Fortuitous dispositions could hardly provide a battle more typical of the battles that will take place later in the year in 391 Congressional districts. Mr. Aldridge was the embodiment of everything that standpatism represents. Mr. Havens was the embodiment of all that opposition to standpatism represents.

With the issue thus squarely made and the campaign directed with a view of making it essentially a campaign of education on the issue, the district which gave the late James B. Perkins nearly 10,000 majority a year ago last fall records its emphatic disapproval of what has been going on at Washington since it last had an opportunity to express its judgment.

In advance of an expression from the whole country, could anything be more eloquent of political sentiment as a whole in the United States just at present than the three amazing special elections that have taken place since the first of the year?

The extinction of Cannonism and standpatism cannot be far distant.—St. Louis Republic.

It's Too Late.

Frantic appeals are made to the Republican Congressional committee to emphasize in the coming campaign other Taft administration policies, and subordinate the tariff issue. The standpat leaders have heard a rumbling sound from Massachusetts and New York. If thunderbolts like the election of Foss and Havens develop in heavily Republican districts what mean the gathering clouds throughout the middle West? Republican standpatters know, and seek to shove the tariff issue to the rear. Republican orators will hammer on the railroad rate issue, on anti-trust prosecutions, on the commerce court, on conservation policies, on postal savings banks.

It is too late to dodge the supreme issue. The American people have made up their minds that there is just one overshadowing issue in this campaign. They cannot be diverted from it. No one of the other pet policies of the Taft administration strikes home with immediate effect, in comparison with the tariff issue. The cost of living is a personal matter to the American voters. It affects the pocketbook of every toiler with brain or hands. The battle for subsistance has enough odds against it without the additional handicap of the Aldrich-Taft tariff! The Republican party is convicted, in the people's minds, of deliberately violating its pledge to make the cost of living lower by tariff reductions. It is too late to shift the issue.—Chicago Journal.

The People's Verdict.

Lincoln, we are told, once said that the Lord loved the common people—else he would not have made so many of them. The usual complement to this aphorism is the obvious truth that the common people, when deeply roused in a great national crisis, are always right in their collective judgment. Another trust is no less obvious—that political leaders can not sway the collective judgment of the plain people into a false position.

The American people have decided that the Aldrich-Taft tariff is another trust-made instrument of oppression and extortion, and no political orator, from President Taft downward, can influence them to a contrary view. The republican party organization, through its spellbinders, calls the Aldrich-Taft tariff law a good measure. The people call it a bad one—and the conflict is on. There is no power of oratory, of juggled statistics, of special pleading, that can convince the American people that the Aldrich-Taft law was framed to protect the consumers of life's necessities. Thus the tariff issue shapes itself into an impending people's verdict, regardless of party ties, against further slavery to robber-trusts.

Too Busy.

Mrs. Neighbor—Did you ever notice that Mrs. Chatterton never tells you a thing about herself?

Mrs. Homer—Yes. It keeps her so busy telling things about the other people that she has no time to talk about herself.—Chicago News.

"What a regal carriage he has! There is surely royal blood in his veins. Do you know him?" whispered the enthusiastic woman.

"Yes," replied the man; "he comes of a long line of janitors."—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

A Fatal Temptation

THIS is a most charming little story of modern life, strongly drawn and clear and progressive from the start. The central figure is a bright, ambitious young doctor, who has a secret which becomes known to a siren-like creature named Marion Leigh. She wins the gratitude and confidence of young Laurence Blantire and upon this basis a powerful plot is brought into play.

Through perfectly reasonable circumstances the young doctor becomes the possessor of great wealth. He finds his life ideal in beautiful, trustful Magdalen D'Este. It is then that the willful Marion Leigh exercises her baleful power and blights two lives through her cruel tyranny.

The lovers are parted, but fate weaves out the reward of loyalty and duty and the siren falls a victim to her own devices.

CHAPTER I.

The two doctors, although nearly of the same age, and living in the same place, had always more or less disliked each other. But when the shadow of death hung over the younger and less prosperous one, the elder man relented and became his friend. For many years Stephen Leigh had been the only doctor in Seafield. He had saved money enough to purchase Seafield House, a carriage, and a fine pair of horses. Just as he was thinking of advertising for a partner to undertake the more laborious work, a new doctor, to his great annoyance, came to the town. Dr. John Blantire, as he called himself, took a house just outside Seafield, named The Laurels; he had no carriage, nor did he seem to have much money; but he was clever. No one ever heard him laugh; he seemed to have but one pleasure in life, that was his love for his fair-haired little son, a boy of seven when John Blantire first came to Seafield.

For seven years Dr. Blantire fought his way; then all at once he seemed to grow tired of the struggle, and became seriously ill. During this time there had been a sharp contest between the two medical men. Stephen Leigh, so long established, so well known, seemed always to have the best of it; but of late some of the leading families in Seafield had sent for John Blantire, whose manner had a charm of its own. Then Stephen Leigh, spoke bitterly of his rival, and John Blantire, hearing of it, spoke more bitterly still. Matters went from bad to worse until John Blantire fell ill and sent for his rival to attend him. He was beyond all earthly help, as Dr. Leigh saw at once.

There was no rivalry then; all ill-feeling disappeared in the presence of death. Stephen Leigh, bending over him, told him that he would not live beyond sunset; but the look that came over the dying man's face was not of sorrow or regret.

"You will see to my boy," he said, feebly. "We have not been good friends, you and I. I have been in your way; but instinct tells me you are a just and honorable man; you have no son of your own, you will befriend mine."

Stephen Leigh promised that he would do so; he had always liked the boy—he had always longed for a son of his own, and in some measure this little lad would fill the blank.

When the promise was given, John Blantire raised his eyes to the doctor's face, and, for the first time, mentioned his wife.

"I am glad to die," he said. "I have not cared to live since I lost my wife. I loved her with all my heart. She was a gentlewoman, highly connected. She—she—was my patient, when quite a young girl. She—ah, poor child!—she loved me so—and I ran away with her! She died when Laurence was born. She had just one year of perfect happiness. I have been tired of life ever since; but, for the boy's sake, I have struggled on. Now I am worn out. You will take care of my son?"

"I will," answered Stephen Leigh; and, cold, practical, devoid of romance or sentiment, as he believed himself to be, he was greatly touched when father and son bid each other farewell.

Dr. Leigh carried out the dead man's instructions; the small sum of money which he had left was judiciously invested, and served to defray the expenses of the boy's education.

Stephen Leigh had always been one of the leading members of the pretty little sea-side town. He was a widower, with one daughter, a tall, handsome girl, the belle of the neighborhood, who vain as she was handsome, and who, young as she was, possessed no small opinion of her own merits.

To Seafield House, when he had finished his education, Laurence Carr Blantire came home. Dr. Leigh was not a generous man. His heart had been touched when his rival died; but he had not felt at all inclined to be lavish to his rival's son. He had set aside a small sum, barely sufficient for the purpose, to find Laurence in clothes and pocket-money; and it was arranged between them that Laurence should live with him, give him all the assistance in his power; while the latter should teach him all that he should take him out to visit patients, qualify him for his profession, and the prospect of taking him into partnership.

The poor people of Seafield knew no more pleasant or cheery sight than the young doctor's handsome face; he was welcomed everywhere. More than once, people who dared take the liberty had suggested jestingly to Dr. Leigh that it was not improbable a marriage might take place between his ward and his daughter. But the old man knew better. He understood Marion's character, and had no fear whatever that she would bestow her affections on so insignificant a person as an obscure country practitioner. These two—one a handsome young man, high-spirited, genial, and clever, the other a witty, accomplished, and beautiful girl—had lived together for two years without the smallest attempt at flirtation. The young doctor had never raised admiring eyes to Marion, and she had never deigned to think of him in the light of a possible suitor.

There was to be no nonsense, she had decreed to herself, when he came to live at Seafield House, and there had been no nonsense. Nor was the young student inclined to any. The calm, dark eyes that looked down on him from such a height were powerless to move him. The exquisite coloring of the handsome face, the grace of the tall figure, were alike unheeded by him. They never disagreed; they seldom ever spoke to each other. Marion prided herself on keeping the young man at a distance, and Laurence respected her evident wish that there should be as little as possible in common between them.

CHAPTER II.

Seafield House was beautifully situated. It stood on the summit of a hill that overlooked the sea. Along the front of the house ran a long, wide, old-fashioned veranda, with pillars of twisted iron. There, one morning, stood Laurence Blantire. He was looking over the sea with that longing and passion for change and travel that spring in the heart of youth at the sight of the broad expanse of ocean. And there Dr. Leigh found him, and took his seat in the veranda beside him.

"Laurence," said the doctor, slowly, "we have nothing very important in hand just now—no cases that require particular care and attention?"

"No," replied the young student; "there appears to be very little illness about."

"If there is nothing to prevent my doing so, I thought of going to London for three days," the doctor continued. "I should like to attend a meeting that takes place to-morrow. Do you think you could manage in my absence?"

"I think so, sir," replied Laurence.

"Then I shall go by the next train," Dr. Leigh said; "so that I have not many minutes to spare. By the way, Laurence, I do not interfere much with your pursuits and companions; but I was sorry to see you with Captain Walsh the other day."

"What is wrong with Captain Walsh, sir? He seems to me a good sort of fellow."

"Notwithstanding, if you will take my advice, you will have nothing to do with either Walsh or Squire Redfern; they are not fit associates for you. And I was sorry to hear that you had been seen with both of them."

"It is quite true, sir," returned Laurence, with an uneasy laugh. "I was with them three or four times last week; we played billiards. It is dull at times, and I am glad of a change. Captain Walsh is a droll fellow, and I must say that I enjoy his society."

The doctor looked with something like compassion at the young man beside him.

"Take care what you are doing, Laurence," he said. "Remember, I have warned you."

"I will remember, sir," he answered, his face flushing as he spoke. "They cannot do me any harm."

"I shall be late," the doctor remarked, hurriedly, taking out his watch and looking at it. "I meant to have called at the bank; but I shall not have time. Will you go for me, Laurence?"

"With pleasure, sir," the young man replied; and again the dark-blue eyes wandered to the sunlit sea; perhaps he, too, longed to be going away. The doctor took out a pocket-book.

"I want you to pay this $250 on account," he said. "You need not go to-day, if you are busy or pressed for time; but do not be later than Thursday with it. You will be careful, Laurence?"

"Yes, sir," said Laurence; and then the doctor rose, shook hands with him, and went his way, leaving the young man still standing and looking out over the sunlit waters, his mind filled with a hundred vain longings. By and by, with a sigh, he withdrew his gaze and turned into the house, making his way to the surgery.

Every detail of that day, from the time he spent in the veranda to the hour in which he returned to Seafield House, plunged into the very depths of despair, was vividly impressed upon Laurence Blantire's mind. As he quitted Seafield House, Miss Thornton, a poor relation of the doctor, who lived with him, and was supposed to help in the housekeeping, passed him with a smile.

"A beautiful morning, Mr. Blantire," she said. She had a profound admiration for the handsome young student.

He passed proud Marion Leigh, who stood in the entrance hall with a basket of flowers in her hand. He just glanced at the picture—the exquisite coloring of the handsome face, the morning-dress of primrose blue, the scarlet blooms that filled the pretty basket.

"Good-morning, Mr. Blantire," she said, haughtily. Her father's assistant was less to her than the dust beneath her feet; and she considered the time spent in speaking to him wasted. She hardly allowed her eyes to linger on him.

While he was on his way to St. Margaret's Bay, where one of the fishermen lay ill, he came to a turning where he saw a little pony-carriage, with a fair of cream-colored ponies, whose silver harness glittered in the sun. The carriage was empty, and a groom stood at the heads of the ponies.

Carelessly enough, Laurence wondered whose carriage it was—wondered why it was empty; and then, looking down the green lane, he saw a young girl, a girl slender and dainty, with a face of marvelous beauty and fairness, with hair that seemed to have caught the sunbeams captive, and large, dark, violet eyes. She did not look more than sixteen; and she had left the little pony-carriage for the purpose of gathering some woodbine, the perfume of which filled the air. She wore a dainty, green-and-white dress, and soft white plumes shaded her beautiful face.

She was intent upon gathering the woodbine, she neither saw nor heard him—and he stood still to gaze at her. He had seen nothing like her—and he had not dreamed that there was anything so fair in the world. The next minute she was seated in the little carriage, and had driven out of his sight.

The roll of the carriage wheels had died away, and still Laurence stood there, as if rooted to the spot. The summer morning had brought a new element into his life, his heart was beating as it had never done before. He had, for the first time, an idea of what the words "youth," "beauty" and "love" meant.

He had many patients still to see, and it was six o'clock before he reached Seafield House, tired and worn with a hard day's work. He dined alone; Miss Leigh had gone out. When dinner was over, he felt refreshed; but the house was lonely.

He was restless still; vague, beautiful dreams and possibilities were opening out to him; he wanted some one to whom he could speak; he could not bear solitude. Why should he, when the summer wind and the summer sea seemed to woo him? He put aside his book and went out; and, as he strolled along the beach, he met suddenly, walking arm in arm together, Squire Redfern and Captain Walsh.

"We are just going to the Pemberton Arms for a game at billiards," said Squire Redfern. "Come with us, Laurence;" and, while he was thinking what excuse he could make to evade them, Captain Walsh laughed, and the sneer in his laugh annoyed the young fellow.

Captain Walsh did not like the young fellow; he hated him for his high principle and honor, his integrity and good temper; any one of these qualities seemed like a reproach to him, who had none of them. Squire Redfern, on the contrary, appreciated his honest simplicity of character, and always enjoyed an hour or two with him.

"We must not play for high stakes," said the captain, with another sneer, as they gathered round the billiard-table at the Pemberton Arms.

"I will teach him that I am no lad," thought the young student. "I will play, and I will beat him." Then he turned to the squire. "The doctor is from home," he said. "It is dull at Seafield House, being alone, and I shall be very pleased to spend a few hours with you."

The good spirits who watch over the souls of the tempted might have wept over him as he walked away between his two false friends.

(To be continued.)

SUN DIAL MOTTOES.

Many Famous Examples in England, Ranging from Grave to Gay.

Very curious inscriptions appear on many sun dials, such as the one on Paper buildings, in the Temple, says the Gentlewoman, which bids one abruptly "Begone about your business," and again in Pump court we are told that "shadows we are, and like shadows depart."

Others on various sun dials are: "The day will come," "Everywhere the same," "Behold we fly," "I show by the kindness and splendor of the sun," "This is the day," "Learn to value time," "I fly while you behold me," "Enjoy the present hour," "The shadow moves though I am at rest," "I set to rise," "Days make years," "I stay for no man," "The day flies," "Such is life," "Man is but a shadow," "Redeem the time," "Lying does not belong to me," "The brightest day has its shades," "You pursue a shadow," "You may waste but cannot stop me," "Life is fleeting as the shadow," "Let not the sun go down on thy wrath."

Vertical sun dials could be placed on a south wall with but little trouble and less material, for it only required a dial to cast a shadow and radiating incised lines marked on the wall. These often appeared on churches, and were generally near the southwestern angle.

Sometimes sun dials even appeared in stained glass windows. These are still to be seen in Lambeth palace, and at one time there was another in the Church of All Hallows Staining, Mark lane.

Another kind of dial was of a portable description known as the "ring" type, to be worn on the finger, the light finding its way through a tiny hole. Of these the rarest sort known was furnished with a combination of projections for throwing the shadow of the sun. Cardinal Wolsey had one made in brass gilt on which were engraved his arms. Other portable ones were a sort of combination of dial and compass folded up.

Then there was the pillar sun dial, with which we are familiar. Of this kind the baluster-shaped pillar is most frequently seen, though, of course, there are many variations, some taking the form of columns more or less carved and decorated.

In most recent years sun dials of growing shrubs have been made as ornaments to lawns, such as the one at Broughton Castle, near Banbury. The hours are made of growing box or yew embedded in minute fragments of smashed marble; the upright dial, also growing, is of yew, and is cut and trimmed into shape. Around the whole is written in letters of yew, "Memory lives, but the hour flies."

A vertical sun dial on the wall of Sandringham House, King Edward's country place, says, "Let others tell of storms and showers, I only count the sunny hours."

Every Little Helps.

The lecturer raised his voice with emphatic confidence. "I venture to assert," he said, "that there isn't a man in this audience who has ever done anything to prevent the destruction of our forests."

A modest looking man in the back of the hall stood up.

"I—er—I've shot woodpeckers!" he said.—Tit-Bits.

THINGS OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

Weather Terms Illustrated.

Maiden with a powder puff
Dabbing here and there—
This reported weather-wise
Means, "Continued fair."

Hubby coming home at one,
Zigzag course a-wending—
Weather signal in this case
Would be, "Storm impending."

Baby climbing on a chair,
If she slips and falls,
It is not unlikely that
There'll be "Sudden squalls."

Girl and lover have a spat,
She flings down his flowers;
Lover, angry, grabs his hat
And rushes off—that's "Showers."

Feminine Misers.

"Miser" has always been recognized as referring to men only. The grim picture of the miser has shown a keen-faced, thin-chested man, bending over his hoard. But recently several women have died in great apparent poverty, and their death has revealed considerable sums of money hidden among their poor belongings. In one case the amount was amazingly large, twenty thousand dollars being found in actual money in various hiding places in one room.

The vice of miserliness is really mysterious to the normal woman, whose heart naturally beats in sympathy with the needs of her neighbors. A thousand women are improvident by virtue of their instinctive generosity, to one who is stingy, because she loves the feeling that she has money.

Never was there a more wastefully misdirected force than in the career of the miserly woman. Think of her self-denials, her cold-heartedness, assumed for her own end, her endurance of hardness and her long years of silence and abstinence! That her suffering is worse than useless does not detract from the courage and persistence it involves. To eat and drink of the coarsest and scantiest fare, to shiver in cold and stifle in heat, to go ragged and dirty, and to know oneself hateful to one's little world—this way of life, if chosen for a good and generous end, would be sufficient to enthrone a plain woman as a saint.

The miser lives in a world where all the moral values are upside down. By just so much as the miserly woman practices the austere virtues does she become the slave of her own greed. Instead of losing her life that she may save it, she loses it that she may lose life, joy, soul itself, a thousandfold more hopelessly. She plunges into the dark gulf of a misery masquerading as pleasure. The mask drops and the horrible truth is revealed only when the last words of the tragedy are spoken: "We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out!"—Youth's Companion.

Health and Beauty Hints.

Add a few drops of carbolic acid to an ounce of rosewater and glycerin and use it for removing fruit or vegetable stains from the hands.

For the baggy appearance under the eyes rub gently with the tips of the fingers dipped in alcohol. Afterward massage in the same way with cold cream.

Baking soda gives instant relief to a burn or scald. Applied, either wet or dry, to the burned part immediately the sense of relief is magical. It seems to draw out the heat and with it the pain.

For hard-working persons, especially brain workers, an excellent health preserver is the habit of passing a half-hour lying prone in the middle of the day; best if combined with recreation and fresh air.

Don't consider it an economy to put children's feet into last summer's outgrown stockings. Short feet in stockings may even do the foot an injury that will require years of expensive shoes to counteract.

A dry shampoo is made by scenting a pound of a finely ground corn meal with an ounce of powdered orris root. The mixture is scattered through the hair and thoroughly brushed out, bringing the oil and dust with it.

Where one has a bad throat a soothing drink can be made by bringing a pint of barley water to a boil, then add one ounce of the best gum arabic and stir until dissolved. Strain and sweeten or not as desired. Take but a little at a time. It will stop a rasping cough.

Soutache-Embroidered Suit.

The walking skirt of this pale blue linen suit is laid in wide side plaits, stitched down flatly almost to the knees and finished around the bottom with a broad, tailor-stitched hem. The belted, Russian coat is of knee-length, has seamless shoulders, cut-in-one bell sleeves extending to the elbow, and a front fastening beginning at the left shoulder and running diagonally to the hem of the garment. The soutache braiding of self color is applied in military manner and outlines the low-cut neck, the front edge of the coat and trims the belt. The pale blue coarse straw hat has a brim banded with black velvet, a blue tussah band about the crown and a blue "Chanticleer" aigrette.

EVENING COIFFURES OF 1910.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

Woolen materials are of the coarsest weaves.

Figured silks are vying with two-toned effects for street and house dresses.

Collarettes are of lace tulle, hand-embroidered linen or figured net. Some have touches of black velvet in the form of tiny bows on the front.

Cloth of gold and silver tissue comes again to a supple and glistening rescue when the dull rose and mahogany shades cry for a contrasting touch.

Heavy lace incrusted with gems shows that the styles so popular in the winter have been recognized as worthy of repetition for spring evening gowns.

Baby curls and ringlets have returned to fashion's favor this season for wear with the sugar-loaf hat. These curls come over the ears and peep out prettily from under the quaint but becoming little hat without a brim.

Morning blouses are particularly attractive if made of striped or dotted linen. The almost inevitable frills on these models are of plain-colored linen, and this addition brings the shirtwaist or blouse into a closer harmony with the colored skirt. It is almost trite to add that these models are collarless.

Large flat hats have appeared with flowers in wreaths encircling the low crowns. This style is becoming to nine out of ten women, for it is undeniable that the long, sweeping lines of hats will add to the charm of the face beneath and they are rarely trying to the wearer on account of stiff or straight effects.

The jumper waist of marquisette or voile is the "handiest thing ever" for the woman who has a good skirt of fine material and no waist to match. Make a jumper of the same shade. It is made with a round neck, half or long sleeves, and is worn over a white net waist. It does not have the appearance of a makeshift, and therein lies one of its chief attractions.

Waist Fastening.

Try this quick way of putting hooks and eyes on a waist: Sew the eyes on the left front the desired distance apart, with the loops out far enough to make hooking easy, then baste the right front carefully over the left, lapping as much as may be desired; turn the waist just as it is, wrong side out, put a hook in every eye and sew them in position.

An economical woman bought two sets of nice buttons that do for all her shirtwaists. They have shanks and are put into the button side of fresh waists by means of rings. Instead of buying cheap buttons for six waists she has these two very nice sets, which, she thought before she got this idea, were far beyond her means.

Turkish Wives.

Ever since last year, when some Turkish ladies of high standing boldly discarded the veil on a few occasions, women of the Turkish aristocracy have been permitted at court functions. Turkish ladies keep their own names when they marry and also hold their own fortunes, managing their money affairs as they please. They have all legal rights that the men enjoy, and the husband's sanction, signature or approval is not needed. For 12 centuries Turkish women have been able to get divorce whenever serious trouble with lord and master arose.—London Mail.

Another Slur on Women.

The Northwestern University professor who told a woman's club that women did not earn their living, and were unproductive and expensive to society, received a just rebuke from a member of the sex upon whom he cast his silly slur. The tenuous theories of some college professors are so far from fact as to cast doubt upon their fitness to teach young men and women the first principles of civilization, let alone inspire in them the rudiments of sound citizenship.

The woman who does not earn her way is the rare exception. The millions of devoted mothers who train up boys and girls into good Americans are the foundation of the nation. They earn their way in this world, and, God bless them, in the world to come. There are far more useless, unproductive men than women. Hundreds of thousands of men fill our prisons and asylums. Other hundreds of thousands of men are engaged in enterprises injurious to their fellowmen and degrading to themselves. To class all women as burdens to man is not only silly; the author of such a proposition stamps himself as crassly ignorant and illogical, little student and less thinker.—Chicago Journal.

Would You Be Thin?

Oranges lend pleasant aid to those who wish to grow thinner. The juice of at least two should be taken at every meal, and these must not be sweet ones. Oil with salad should be given up and lemon juice substituted for vinegar. Cream or sugar in coffee, and the coffee itself save at breakfast, must give place to sugarless and milkless weak tea.

Grapes, peaches, melons, prunes and bananas are tabooed, as they are flesh-producers. No cereals, no hot bread save dry toast, no pork in any form, no veal and no water with meals.

Some physicians advocate copious draughts of skim milk for the safe reduction of flesh. They say that if it be taken scientifically at and between meals it will possibly cause a patient to lose. Baths must be taken in cold water and a hard flesh brush must be plied vigorously.

New Departure in Tunics.

There is no end to the making of tunics, and a considerable amount of ingenuity is being expended upon the invention of new ways to arrange these graceful overdresses. Scarfs that are wide and long, made from mousseline or other soft materials, are treated as shown in our illustration, and are, indeed, beautiful. They are almost bordered with satin bands and edged with silk fringe. The above model is ideal for a dinner gown.

Houseboys.

The increasing employment of men and boys for domestic work is pointed to by some people as a significant sign of the times. In London, the papers of that town state, lads are being trained with conspicuous success to do daily work in houses, and both as cooks and "house-maids" they leave the weaker sex far behind. Such, at least, is the testimony of the grateful housekeepers who employ them.

Greasy Sink.

When the sink becomes greasy put a little paraffin oil on a piece of flannel and rub the sink with it. It will easily remove all the grease. The smell of paraffin can be removed by washing with hot water and soap and then flushing with cold water. At the same time this will also clean the pipes.

In Ironing Lace.

To obviate the unpleasant glaze that comes on black lace when it is ironed a paper should be spread between it and the iron.

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Continued.)

But she was too late, for before she could escape from the room, Dr. Etwald—as smiling and composed as ever—entered the door. He placed himself quietly before the enraged Mrs. Dallas.

"Do not go, madam," said he, quietly. "I have something to show you."

"What is it?" asked Mrs. Dallas, her curiosity—like that of the Major—getting the better of her rage.

"You will see in a few minutes, Miss Dallas, you pale. I hope soon to bring back the roses to your cheeks. Major—"

"Don't speak to me, you scoundrel, until you tell me what you have done with the body of my boy."

"You shall know in a few minutes, Major. Indeed, I think it is about time that this comedy should end!"

"Comedy!" echoed Mrs. Dallas, in scorn. "You mean tragedy!"

"I mean no such thing," retorted Etwald, opening the door. "All true comedies end in the meeting of lovers. There is my explanation."

The three people gave a simultaneous cry of amazement and delight, for there, on the threshold of the room, alive and well, stood—Maurice Aylmer.

CHAPTER XXIV.

"My Dear Major Jen—In the joy with which you and Miss Dallas hailed the appearance of the man whom you thought dead, I was—for the time being—quite forgotten; and very naturally, too. Profiting by the occasion, I left the room and went to the bedroom where Mr. Sarby lay in a trance, similar to that into which Mr. Aylmer had fallen, both trances being caused by the poison of the devil-stick. As you have learned from his own lips, I revived him, as I revived his friend; so now, my good Jen, you have your two boys with you again, alive and well. The comedy is finished; and was I not right in denying to these past events the misleading name of tragedy?

"Naturally, you will wish to know how the dead came to be alive, and for what reason I behaved as I did. Well, here you shall find the whole explanation so fully given that there will be no necessity for you to seek me. Indeed, if you do so, you will not find me, as by the time you receive this letter I shall be well on my way to New York. Thence it is my intention to go abroad, and—as I told you at our last meeting—you will never see me again. When you finish this letter, you will, no doubt, be glad of this, and it is just as well that I should remain beyond your reach.

"I am—as you know—a physician, but I am also what you may not know—a man of genius. I have brains, but no money; and for experiments in chemistry, money, I regret to say, is extremely necessary. This being the case, I have needed money, and that in large quantities, all my life. As I could not make it for myself—not having the mercantile instinct—I resolved to gain it by making a rich marriage. For many years I have traveled the world. Like Ulysses, I have known men and cities, and some years ago, Chance—a deity at whose shrine I always pay my devotions—led me to Barbadoes. While there I was attracted, as I always am by the weird and mysterious, by the superstitions of the African race. I studied the cult of Obi, the belief of the Voodoo Stone, and by a strange chain of circumstances, which I need not relate, I gained possession of that powerful talisman which is known to all negroid America. With this stone in my possession I was king—so to speak—of all the black race. This power I determined to use to my own advantage, and through it to make a rich marriage.

"I discovered that Mrs. Dallas was the richest women in the West Indies, that she had one fair and marriageable daughter, and that mother and daughter were under the influence of a negress called Dido, who was a profound believer in the cult of Obi. I determined, therefore, to bend the negress to my will by means of the Voodoo Stone, and to marry the daughter. Unfortunately, Mrs. Dallas and her child were in America. So thither I went in order to prosecute my suit, and obtain a rich wife in the person of Miss Isabella Dallas. From information obtained in Barbadoes I found where they were living, so to their town I repaired, and established myself as a physician. I made the acquaintance of yourself, of Mr. Aylmer, and Mr. Sarby, and also of Mrs. Dallas and her daughter, the young and charming girl whom I intended to make my wife.

"But here, as you may guess, I found an unexpected obstacle. The young lady was in love with Mr. Aylmer, and would have nothing to do with an elderly bachelor like myself. I determined to remove that obstacle; not by death, but by gentler means which would do away with all risk, and place Miss Dallas in my power. Need I say that I allude to the devil-stick?

"I knew that you possessed it, my dear Major, as I had been informed of its existence and of its owner by Dido. Over this negress, by means of the Voodoo Stone, I possessed complete power. She was ready to do whatever I wanted, and I employed her in forwarding my schemes. Her grandmother had come from Ashantee, the native country of the wand of sleep, and knew all about it; also she knew how to prepare the poison. These secrets she transmitted to Dido, and I resolved to obtain the devil-stick, to make Dido prepare fresh poison, and to use the stick against my rival, Mr. Aylmer.

"And now a word about his poison. It does not kill, but merely places its victim in a trance state, which so closely resembles death that not even the most expert doctor can tell the difference. If the trance continues the victim dies—but there is an antidote—which, by the way, I obtained from Dido—and this antidote, if used in time, can restore the victim from a state of catalepsy to his pristine vigor. I had made up my mind to use the stick, and so, as I was anxious to give Mr. Aylmer a chance of escape, I prophesied to him a state of life in death. This phrase describes exactly the trance state of those wounded by the devil-stick—impregnated with its poison.

"However, Mr. Aylmer did not take my warning and leave off courting Miss Dallas. On the contrary, he announced his engagement, and carried off the young lady in triumph. As you may guess from what I have said before, I doomed him from that hour. I made Dido hypnotize Mrs. Dallas in order to have the devil-stick stolen. If you remember, Major, I offered to buy it, but as you refused, I had to have it stolen. In order to compromise the mother, I arranged that she should steal it. She did, and without having the slightest notion that she was committing the crime. When Dido obtained the devil-stick she filled it with the poison. Then she—by my directions—hypnotized Miss Dallas, put the devil-stick into her hand, and sent her forth to kill Mr. Aylmer. But I should not say kill—as you know the devil-stick cannot kill—let us say to cast Mr. Aylmer into a trance. By this ingenious plot—you must admit, Major, that it is ingenious—I got rid of the lover, and obtained a hold over mother and daughter.

"But to make a long story short, I had the body of Mr. Aylmer stolen, with the aid of Dido, in order to revive my rival. I did not wish him to die, so I took away his body, and kept him in the trance for some weeks, feeding him in the meantime so as to preserve life. While I was in prison, Dido attended to him by my orders. Mr. Aylmer was not concealed in my house; so that is why the police had a useless search for the body. Where was he concealed? Ah, that is my secret.

"After the trial, seeing that Mr. Sarby had behaved so foolishly, I decided to abandon the game. Evidently there was no chance of my winning the hand of Miss Dallas; and also I did not wish Sarby to die. But if I revived him I would have to revive Maurice also, the more so as I did not want to stand my trial for stealing his body. The rest of my story you know. I revived Maurice and brought him to you; so I suppose he will now marry Miss Dallas. I also revived David to have the satisfaction of seeing the women he loved in the arms of another. In both cases the antidote was efficacious. So now, my dear Major, as I said before, you have your two dear boys once more in the flesh, and I hope you are satisfied. Did I not tell you that the devil is not so black as he is painted?

"Well, my plot has failed, and now I am departing to look anew for a rich wife. Also to find Dodo, and get back the Voodoo Stone, of which she robbed me. You will never meet me again, and I dare say you won't be sorry to see the back of me. And now, my dear Major, I fancy I have told you all, and you know the meaning of the many mysteries which have puzzled you for so long. There remains only to say adieu, and remain your evil genius,

"Max Etwald."

"Barbadoes.

"My Dear Major Jen—It is over a year since I wrote you my explanatory letter from Deanminster, and I little thought that it would be necessary for me to write you again, least of all from this place. But here I came in search of Dido; and here I found Mrs. Dallas, and to my profound astonishment, her daughter—still Miss Dallas. I sought an explanation. They would not give me one. In despair—having received the most uncivil reception—I left them. Then, to my surprise, I ran across Mr. David Sarby.

"He was glad to see me, and thanked me for bringing him back from the grave. I, on my side, complimented him for saying my neck from the hangman's noose. The first greetings thus being over, he told me the news which concerned those who were implicated in our little comedy. I confess that the news surprised me; and I write you for an explanation.

"In the first place, I learned from Mr. Sarby that Isabella Dallas refused to marry Mr. Aylmer, and that, far from being offended, he appeared to be be glad of the release from his engagement. I also learned that he had since married Meg Brance, who has always been so deeply in love with him. Will you be so kind, my dear Major, as to explain this sudden misplacing of Mr. Aylmer's affections?

"I learn also from Mr. Sarby that he has prevailed upon Miss Dallas, the deserted Ariadne of Mr. Aylmer, to reward his long devotion by giving him her hand. I heard that they are to be married within the month, and that the match is one which meets with the full approbation of Mrs. Dallas. Under these circumstances, I am afraid that there is no chance of my marrying Miss Dallas; so I must content myself with searching for another wife.

"I found in my brief interview with Miss Dallas that she had learned how she had tried to kill Mr. Aylmer while under the hypnotic influence of Dido. Perhaps this knowledge broke off the match, and the young couple took a dislike to one another from the peculiar circumstances of that night. Certainly—hypnotism or not—one would not care to marry a woman who had attempted one's life; so that, I conjecture, is the reason for Mr. Aylmer's withdrawal. Also, Miss Dallas must have had a horror of seeing constantly before her the man whom—innocently enough—she tried to kill. Hence her refusal to marry your dear Maurice. Am I wrong in these ideas? I think not. Still, I should like an explanation from you. As I shall be here for some months—searching for the Voodoo Stone and Dido—please send your letter to Barbadoes, directed to your anxious inquirer

Max Etwald."

* * * * *

"Barbadoes.

"My Dear Major Jen—It is now some months since I wrote you, making certain inquiries, but you have not been courteous enough to gratify my curiosity. That is cruel of you; Miss Dallas is now Mrs. Sarby, the other lady is now Meg Aylmer; yet you will not tell me how this strange transfer of wives came about. Never mind, I am sure the explanation I fancied in my last letter is the correct one. But you are a rude correspondent.

"I shall return good for evil, and tell you that I have regained possession of the Voodoo Stone. Dido is dead; killed by her own excitement at an Obi orgie. I am now the King of the Black Race throughout the world, by possession of the Stone, and to you I shall remain, for the last time, my dear Major,

Max Etwald."

No Royalties Called "Baby."

One noteworthy feature about royalties is that none has been called "baby." From their earliest years the royal children are always called by their names or possibly by some pet name, but an English prince or princess is never called "baby" either by relatives or by his or her nurses. From the age of five a prince is styled "sir" by his attendants and a princess "madam."—London M. A. P.

China's National Tree.

The tung or wood oil tree is worthily named the national tree of China. It is stately in appearance, with smooth green bark and widespreading branches, affording a fine shade. It bears a fruit resembling a shellbark hickory nut, but as large as a small orange. Each nut contains three triangular seeds similar to small Brazil nuts. The oil is pressed from these seeds, and the refuse is used as a fertilizer. The oil is used principally for polishing woodwork and dressing leather. Considerable quantities are exported. The wood of the tung tree is used for making musical instruments, fine boxes and the framework of small houses. It is free from ravages of insects.—New York Tribune.

lieved that they would not be permited to extend human slavery, beyond the territory already.

In fact the south has never been willing to abide by the laws of the land, She is in rebellice against law in her clans and has her night riders. Not much law is executed in the south, and when a man from the north was chosen as president they were unwilling to submit to this rule as you may notice.

Hence on April 15, 1861 Lincoln called for 75,000 volenteers, but the magnitudo of the rebellion was underestimated, and on May 3, 1861 for 500,006 more volenteers. Yet the rebellion was not yet crushed, but was only in its infancy. July 2, 1862, 309,000 more men were called for and soon filed. August 4, 1862, 300,000; Oct. 17, 1863, for 500,000; March 14, 1864, 200,000; July 18, 1864 100,000; Decembea 19, 1864, 300,000. Making a total 2,859,132.

What meaneth these stones?

What meaneth this Memorial Day?

No other nation has had such reasons for a Memorial Day as we have.

The value of a thing depends largely on what it coet.

From 20,000,000 population, 2,000,000 fighting men went forth, one man fos every 10 of its population, or one from every 5 of its male population. This 5 included the young boys and the aged and the infirm.

In 4 years and 45 days these 2,000,000 of men fought 5,574 battles and sieges. No other country's army have ever did so much fighting in the same length of time, nor displayed such heroism.

Before the end of these 1,505 days half a million men were dead on the field of battle, of wounds, of diseases, in prison pens, dying everywhere, at home of wounds and diseases, having been sent home on a furlough, as there was a time that there was a great morning in Egypt, on account of the death of her first born.

So it was all over our fair land, add to the dying soldier ahd sickness of the citizen, their suffering and their death rate was great. For there was destitution in many homes, the bread winner in the army or already dead.

And to this half a million that died during hostility, add the many thousands that have died each year. During this present year from May to May 48,312 have crost the silent river to join the great army that have gone before them to their God. Truly, the dead is more than the living of this once great army.

Memorial Day is more than a national day. It is national Sabbath for humanity, a day of remembrance of our gallant dead, who perished that a nation might live, a sacrifice for the sins of men were they offered and made the offering willingly and freely to the extent that the end was reached.

But it has been said that God's time had come to liberate the millions of the colored race that had been held as chattles sold as the horse, ox or mule is sold. They had been oppressed, reared to develop the physical, the strong and muscular, the intellectual being ignored, the intellectual dwarfed, the animal developed. This was their condition, and yet prevails largely and will work the ages.

But the end is not yet. Their is a muttering in the south land, and an alarm on the part of the white man, as he notices that it will only be a question of time and not so long, that the Negro will outnumber the white race of the south. The birth rate of the Negro is much larger than the birth rate of the white race. An uprising is feared by some and this may occur, for the Negro is not permitted to cast his ballot in many places. The old story of the south not obedient to law. American soldiers the best in the world. Her armies always victorious. With in the war of 1812, in the Revolutionary war, Fifth Mexico, in the Great Rebellion with Spain. True some nations say it is not so. We have been whipped in the past, but we have the fruits of our claims. The victory which is the evidence of our utterances as God's soldiers in the army of our Lord Jesus Christ are volunteers, so the American soldier is a volunteer. Willingly he goes forth and to conquer or die.

But when the war of the Rebellion ended their was great concern on the part of some. It was said a lot of worthless boys and men turned loose, who have known war so long, that their refined nature all gone, hardness of heart, respect for morals gone, lazy and shiftless, not willing to work, and all this and more was in the minds of some. But they returned to their homes and to test their good citizenship, in the banking house, the store, the shops, the school, to educate and to be educated. And no nation has turned loose an army of soldiers that has ranked so high as the American soldier. They have filled the highest stations in life and with honor, Grant, from the volunteer army to the head of government, Hayes, Garfield, McKinley, Logan and many others.

In all stations of life they have proven themselves not only soldiers that neadeth not be asqamed of their cause nor the work that they accomplish. The soldier is proud of his record and is striving to prove his qualities as a man and citizen.

The nation is proud of its soldiers, their deeds of valor, the work that they accomplish the freedom that their lives made possible; always will she remember her dead and living heroes. And that the present generation of splendid young men and young ladies with their children yet to be born will ever rise up to defend the liberty that her soldiers of the past contested for and won this great liberty and keeps us free people through obedience to our God law and order.

These days of the past that we today remember with sorrow when we think of the price of our liberty, its grones, its broken hearts, its tears, its blood of the millions.

Still Cheaper.

"Isn't it cheaper to move than to pay rent?" I inquired of the young married man.

"I suppose it is," he replied, with a settled air, "but my plan is cheaper than either. I live with my father-in-law."—Chicago News.

Just the Man.

First Artist—Well, old chap, how is business? Second Artist—Oh, splendid! Got a commission this morning from a millionaire. Wants his wife and children painted very badly. First Artist—Well, you're the very man to do that.—Exchange.

Flexible.

In the lobby of the British house of commons a certain political figure was being discussed. "Ah," said a member, "he's got no backbone."

"Yes, he has," answered John Burns, the labor member of the cabinet, "but it's made of tripe."

A PURE MIND.

It is an argument of a candid, ingenuous mind to delight in the good name and commendations of others, to pass by their defects and take notice of their virtues and to speak or hear willingly of the latter, for in this, indeed, you may be little less guilty than the evil speaker in taking pleasure in evil, though you speak it not.—Leighton.

Muscle and Music.

A story used to be told of Paderewski that he could crack a pone of French plate glass half an inch thick merely by placing one hand upon it as if upon a piano keyboard and striking it sharply with his middle finger. Chopin's last study in C minor has a passage which takes two minutes and five seconds to play. The total pressure brought to bear on this, it is estimated, is equal to three full tons. The average "tonnage" of an hour's piano playing of Chopin's music varies from twelve to eighty-four tons.

Verdi and His Admirer.

Verdi was once traveling in the same railway carriage with General Tournon. They got into conversation, which soon turned on the subject of music, and the general, who did not know his companion, expressed enthusiastic preference for that of Italy. "I can hardly go so far with you," replied the other. "For me, art has no frontiers, and I give German music the preference over Italian."

"Indeed, sir," said the general testily. "For my part, I would give all the German operas in the world for one act of 'Rigoletto.'"

"You really must excuse me from following you any further on this ground," replied the composer, blushing a little. "I am Verdi."

A Question of Hearing.

The burly farmer strode anxiously into the postoffice.

"Have you got any letter for Mike Howe?" he asked.

The new postmaster looked him up and down.

"For who?" he snapped.

"Mike Howe!" repeated the farmer.

The postmaster turned aside.

"I don't understand," he returned stiffly.

"Don't understand!" roared the applicant. "Can't you understand plain English? I asked if you've got any letter for Mike Howe."

"Well, I haven't!" snorted the postmaster. "Neither have I a letter for anybody else's cow. Get out!"—London Scraps.

Early History of Rubber.

Rubber is first known to history as a plaything. It was during Columbus' second voyage that Herrera observed that the inhabitants of Haiti played a game with balls "made of the gum of a tree." Even as early as the beginning of the seventeenth century, however, the Spaniards used rubber to waterproof their cloaks, but the fact attracted no attention in the old world, and it was not until the eighteenth century that the rubber industry began. Early writers mention an oil extracted from rubber which was taken medicinally with cocoa.—Chicago News.

Cranberries.

Cranberries were formerly known under the name of marsh or fen whorts, fenberries, marshberries, mossberries. In "New England Rarities" (1672) Josselyn described the cranberry as the bearberry. The word so inseparably associated in the New England mind with turkey is not in Johnson's or Bailey's dictionary. Perhaps the colonists adapted it from the German kranichbeere or kranbeere, the berry now known preferably by German lexicographers as affenbeere. Wherever the name came from, it appeared in English literature in 1672, as noted above, and from a writer of 1694 we know that cranberry tarts were then relished, as they were later by Queen Victoria in the highlands.—Fur News.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

I am informed that certain persons in the city of Butler have made statements that on or about the 6th day of May, 1910, I made certain statements charging or accusing Mrs. Jay Pessell of undue relations or indecency with my husband and to correct such statements and such false report, I wish to say that I never at any time have by word, act or deed made such a statement or accusation and never intended to make the same and whom so ever says that I did make such statements are deliberately falsifying; that to my best knowledge and belief, Mrs. Pessell is a woman of virtue and chastity and I am pained to know that a story circulated about her character should be attributed to me or my acts. I make this statement voluntarily and freely in justice to myself as well as others.

Kilsoquae Will Celebrate

"When big comet come before Indian braves climb up on top of high hills and shoot at him every night; medicine men make big noises and Indians think end of world are come; little one run—oh, so quick—and hide by side of old squaws."

In these word, Kil-so-quah, the granddaughter of Chief Little Turite of the Miamis, and perhaps the only living Indian princess of Indian royal blood in the state, told of the appearance of the heavenly wonder on its visit seventy-five years ago. The old Indian woman's birthday comes "sometime in this the strawberry moon," and she is now at the century mark, hale in health and clear of memory, especially regarding the events of the former day when Indians and French traders were the only inhabitants of the southern part of the state. With her son, Anthony Revarre, or Little White Loon, as he was known among the Indians, she lives in a small cottage at the crown of a hill overlooking the town of Roanoke, a place of considerable importance in the old canal days.

A mass meeting of the citizens of Roanoke was held last night and plans were make for an elaborate celebration of Kil-so-quah's hundredth birthday. The event will be postponed till in June, owing to Governor Marshall's promise to attend the celebration and speak if it were placed a few weeks later than the actual event.

Bay View Graduation

The ladies of the Bay View Circle held their Guest Night on June first, entertaining their families and a few guests very informally, at the pleasant home of Mrs. Oviatt Campbell. The year's work being along the line of of Spain, Norway, Sweden and Holland. Book reviews were given from each interspersed with music, Miss Helen Kester presiding at the piano. The house was decorated in Holland style, Dutch boys and girls, miniature windmills and the Dutchman's favorite flower, the tulip were greatly in evidence After a contest of a trip around the world in which Mrs. Chas. Phillips drew a prize of Old Dutch Cleanser. A three course supper was served by three charming Dutchmaidens, clad in the white cap (from which escaped the the long Gretchen hair braids) and also small white aprons. The table favors were the gift of Mesdames A. S. Powers and J. D. Craun in the way of small class cards tied with lavender class ribbon these ladies having closed the four years course and now entitled to the diploma, which is usually received in August at Bay View Assembly, which is held one mile from Petosky. The program for the evening was tastily arranged with a water colored frontis piece representing the Dutch maiden and the national windmill.

Unidentified Body

At the town of Corunna, DeKalb county, Indiana, at or about the hour of 9:20 p. m. of the 3rd day of June, 1910, an unidentified colored man was found dead between the main tracks of the L. S. & M. S. He was a man weighing about 150 pounds, age about 25, height about 5 feet 8 inches, dressed in a dark blue suit and wore a cap. There was nothing found upon the body that would lead to his identity. The only valuables found was six cents in currency which was turned over to the trustee of Fairfield township.

W., while ours is costing 5½c, meaning a saving that would pay for a new plant in a few years.

Council adjourned to meet Monday evening, June 13.

Wednesday evening, June 1, eleven members of class No. 7, of the U. B. Sunday school with Mrs. Eva Young teacher, enjoyed the pleasure of attending the reguler monthly class meeting held at the pleasant country home of the president, Miss Mable Mutzfeld. At this meeting the class decided upon a contest to last two months, the object of which is to enlarge the class by getting new members and by arousing old members, who had become neligent to new interests in the class. At the close of this contest the winning side will be rewarded in some way and we all sincerely hope that our plan will have the desired effect. After the business meeting we were lead to the table, at each place of which was found a yellow rose and on a card at its side, on which was placed our class colors, a beautiful little verse was written, reminding us as the fragrance of roses were wafted to us that June, the month of roses had bestowed upon us a loving pleasure as we partook of the light refreshments brought before us. We wish that more would take advantage of these meetings where we are brought together not only to enjoy a good social time but also to view the more serious side.

BUTLER CHURCHES ENTERTAIN DELEGATES

Profitable Meeting of DeKalb County Sunday School Workers

The forty-fifth annual convention of the DeKalb County Sunday School Association met at the M. E. church, June 7 and 8, 1910.

TUESDAY FORENOON

9:30—Song service, conducted by Prof. J. E. Sturgis.

9:45—Devotional exercises, led by Rev. Herendeen.

10:00—Welcome address, Rev. E. F. Albertson.

10:10—Response by Rev. F. P. Asermyer, of Waterloo.

Bro. Willis, of Waterloo, spoke of the personal experience and call to the work of the Sunday school teacher.

The evidence of his fitness; how made apparent to others, by M. F. Bishop, of St. Joe.

Mrs. M. A. Ehlers, of Auburn, said if a teacher was a failure the only way to dispose of them was to make a success out of him.

Committees were appointed, other business transacted and adjourned to meet in the afternoon.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON

1:30—Song service, led by Prof. J. E. Sturgis.

1:45—Devotional exercises, led by Mrs. C. B. Jones, of Garrett. Mrs. Jones gave some very interesting thoughts for the Sunday school teachers, namely, that there is not a Christian man or woman who cannot teach God's word, for if we are true Christians and are filled with the spirit of His love we cannot help but teach the word of God.

After a song we then had a paper read by Bro. Higley on "Several Kinds of Sunday School Teachers." Bro. Higley divided the female sex of Sunday school teachers in two classes, ladies and women. He said women are better fitted by nature to be a teacher of God's word than man is The first class of Sunday school teachers are ladies who are very beautiful and who comb their hair the latest, in fact one who cares more for the worldly things of life than they do to teach His word. We do not want teachers in our Sunday schools who have not the love of God in their hearts. Bro. Higley then said the right kind of people in the church should start from the pulpit, that a large per cent of the ministers get members instead of seeking salvation.

This remark enthused Rev. Williams, and to defend himself ask if it was not the layman of the church who makes the preachers, and if it is the preachers who cause so much dictation in the churches? Bro. Williams closed by saying, "Be careful that there is not some laymen behind the throne."

Sister Ehlers then gave some good thoughts. Be careful how we criticise our church and our minister, let outsiders do the talking and let us love one another.

Bro. Williams then gave a short but very interesting talk in regard to the Sunday school superintendent and what is he? A superintendent must superintend, not only to fill the office, but he must be active, mind on his work and must have a real purpose to train the Sunday school in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Very good thoughts and suggestions were given by different ones, and if we carry out these suggestions which have been given we will be nearer to Christ and the church and will work more in harmony with each other.

Closing remarks by Bro. Willis, of Waterloo, and Sister Ehlers, of Auburn.

Adjourned.

The evening was taken up largely by music and drills.

WEDNESDAY MORNING

9:00—Song service, Prof. J. E Sturgis.

9:15—Devotional exercises, led by Mrs. Chas. Knisely, of Waterloo.

9:30—"Enthusiasm in the Sunday School" by Rev. Elliot, of Auburn, followed by a general discussion. Bro. Elliot said that what we need most in our Sunday schools is enthusiasm, and in order to be enthusiastic we must attract. One must have the spirit of God within himself, not only to bring the scholars to Sunday school, but to bring them to Christ.

Mrs. M. J. Baldwin gave an interesting talk on, "Our Standard." Our standard or ideal must be set up by the Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. Konkle then gave a talk on "Temperance Outlook," followed by several interesting talks regarding the temperance question.

Adjourned to meet in the afternoon.

PICKUPS FROM NEARBY CITIES

George Gallagher Lost Life in Wreck on Monon

ANGOLA, Ind., June 4.—Owing to illness of the distinguished speaker at Chicago, the lecture announced by the Masonic fraternity to be given Wednesday evening by Capt. Samuel Alberti has been indefinitely postponed.

GARRETT, Ind., June 6.—The body of Jud Loveland was brought to this city last evening from a hospital in South Chicago, where the death occurred. Owing to the distance relatives will have to come to attend the funeral the services will not be held until Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock The grieved parents are aided in their sorrow and many beautiful flowers already cover the casket of the accident victim, as he was one of the most popular young men of this city. Mr. Loveland was a member of the Fort Wayne lodge of Elks and also of the Fort Wayne Mystic Shriners, degrees in the latter order having been conferred at the last initiatory meeting here.

AUBURN, Ind., June 6.—Mrs. Beulah Casebeer was granted a divorce decree by Judge Bratton from J. H. Casebeer, the real estate man, after having filed a rather sensational petition. The defendant did not contest the suit. The decree was a plain one with all proper relief. No alimony was asked for.

LAGRANGE, Ind., June 6.—The board of education, consisting of H. C. Elsner, J. L. Norris and George C. Morgan, has selected the following teachers for the LaGrange schools for the year beginning next September:

John M. Gieser, superintendent; H. H. Wikel, principal; Lucile Didlake, English; Ardelia Street, Latin; Ort L. Walter, science and mathematics; Ray D. Helper, eighth grade; Clara Schermerhorn, seventh grade; Alice Scott, sixth grade; Mary Case, fifth grade; Birdena Appleman, fourth grade; Jessie McClaskey, third grade; Murial Wigton, second grade; Mabel Rowe, first grade. An instructor in music and drawing has not yet been selected.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., June 5.—(Special)—The Chicago fast mail train on the Monon which left here at 3:50 o'clock this morning, collided with fast freight train No. 72 at Dewitt, a milk station two miles south of Lowell. George Gallagher, brakeman on the freight train, who was in the caboose, was instantly killed. Several of the passengers on the mail train were badly shaken up but none seriously injured. The passenger train was running at a speed of fifty-five miles an hour when the big engine crashed through the caboose, and four cars loaded with stone and brick. It was foggy at the time of the collision and the engineer did not see the rear lights of the caboose until nearly on it.

After the collision Engineer Cliff Somerville and Fireman Joe Conn found themselves standing under the boiler of the engine. Engineer Somerville was slightly injured, but the fireman was not hurt. The engine drawing the freight train had stalled on a hill and the train was being doubled over the grade.

The accident is attributed to Brakeman Gallagher not being out to flag the passenger train, which was running a few minutes late. Some of the trainmen say that Gallagher was sleeping in the caboose when the accident occurred. The big locomotive pulling the passenger train turned over on its side. The baggage, express, mail and day coaches also turned partly over. The five sleepers remained on the rails. Brakeman Gallagher's home was in Logansport. He had been in the employ of the Monon six months.

Mr. Gallagher is well known in this city, having been married to a Butler young lady.

SPENCERVILLE, Ind., June 8.—The new sawmill of W. Steward, located in the west part of town, burned here late to-night and is a total loss. The origin of the fire is unknown, while Mr. Steward stands to lose $10,000, with no insurance. The mill was practically new and in good condition. It is doubtful if it will be rebuilt. Neighboring lumber and buildings were in danger but were saved.

GARRETT, Ind., June 7.—In all probability Capt. I. L. Dennison of this city will be the republican candidate for representative to oppose E. M. McKennan, who has been nominated by the democrats. At least much pressure is being brought to bear upon Capt. Dennison by many interested in the republican party and he has been visited by the party leaders in a body and individually for the past week. As yet the captain has neither accepted or declined but the call is so urgent that he will doubtless accept.

AUBURN, Ind., June 4.—While plowing a lot near David Carruth's today, Jacob Gaul was the victim of an accident which nearly proved fatal. The man was at work plowing when the point of the plow came in contact with a post and the body of the unfortunate was thrown over the implement. A deep gash was inflicted on his forehead. He will recover.

CHURUBUSCO, Ind., June 7.—Committees were named at the meeting of the Commercial club last night to prepare for the big Fourth of July celebration to be held here. O. H. Downey is chairman of the committee and Lou Kocher secretary.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., June 7.—Unable to swallow food or water because of a piece of steak that had lodged at the base of the esophagus Sunday evening, George Charleswood, a farmer and dairyman, living south of Garrett, came to this city yesterday afternoon for relief which he gained by natural means just as he was about to be placed on an operating table at St. Joseph's hospital.

LOST—Sow and seven shoats, shoats weighing about 45 pounds. Phone any information to Geo. Hull. 23 1

The HERALD scribe has been invited to participate in the Gunsenhouser family reunion to be held at the home of P. D. Ginder Saturday, June 11th.

When the editorial scribe of the Fort Wayne News runs out of dope he falls back onto Kern and the brewers. Now that the Fourth is near at hand, he might get off a stale joke at the expense of the young American, and 'twould be such a welcome change for the public.

Ten men are employed at the new tile and brick factory putting things in shape, and by July first, barring accidents, the plant will be in operation. The men at the helm of the new industry have been keeping very quiet, but going rapidly along. The HERALD hopes and expects to see them succeed.

Mrs. J. M. Linkenfelter, of Tiffin, Ohio, was the guest of friends here the latter part of the week.

Dr. Wisman, of Bryan, spent Tuesday with Dr. O. W. Hiner and family.

Misses Sophia Blum and Nellie Bunge, of Moores, were the guests of Miss Flossie Freeburn Tuesday.

Miss Ethel Worthington, of near Zion, spent Tuesday and Wednesday with Mrs. N. E. Worthington and family.

C. B. Oberlin, wife and daughter, Mildred, are spending a few days at Cold Springs.

Mr. Zerkle, of Waterloo, was in the city Tuesday.

Miss Zella Huntington, of Franklin township, attended the Sunday school convention at this place Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mrs. Clark Snyder, whose husband was killed in the Bryan Show Case Works on last December, came to a settlement with the company on Wednesday of this week, being assisted by Attorney C. J. Coats of this place. John R. Weber, owner of the show case factory, did not care to contest any reasonable demand and outside of court an agreement of $1,500 was reached Wednesday. Mr. Weber was represented in court by Attorney Hornbeck, of Toledo, and Mrs. Snyder by Attorney Coats, of Butler, and Judge Rose, of Fort Wayne. A petition was filed in the court asking that the administratrix be permitted to adjust the matter outside of court and release Mr. Weber from any further liability which was granted.

No Stated Hours.

The city boarder looked with superfluous pity at the son of the proprietress of Maple Hill Farm. "You poor boy," she said, coming upon him, hoe in hand, on his way down the hot road, "do you mean to say you have to hoe potatoes in this heat? How long will you have to work?"

"Well, I can't exactly tell how many hours, ma'am," said the boy, "but 'twill be just an afternoon's work."

"Then you must know how long that is!" said the lady, who was a person given to suspecting others of evading the truth.

"No, ma'am, I don't," asserted the boy, as he moved away. "She said to me, 'Bert, when you've got the potatoes all hoed you'll have done your afternoon's work.' That's all she said, and it's all I know, ma'am."

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

FOOD IN THE TROPICS COSTS 5 CENTS A DAY

Americans Could Live on That Sum if They Could Stand the Meals Served.

PLANTS WILL GROW IN THE U. S.

Ton and a Half of "Aroids" Was Harvested Last Year in South Carolina.

When Americans learn to eat the food of the tropics they may live on 5 cents a day, says a writer in the Los Angeles Times. That men may live at this cost and maintain health and vigor is proven by the fact that millions are doing it to-day. That one of the cheap foods upon which they thrive may be grown throughout the southern half of the United States is among the new revelations of the Department of Agriculture. That it will stand shipment to the balance of the country is also shown.

A ton and a half of this food was last year harvested from a sixth of an acre in South Carolina. It will this year be widely propagated and next year there will be plants for distribution to a wide circle of experimenters.

The plants that make this cheap living possible in the tropic are the aroids, one representative of which is the "elephant's ear," with which Americans are familiar as an ornamental plant. It is one of these aroids which yields the poi of the Hawaiians, the malanga of the Cubans and the otto of the Panamans. Yautias, dasheens and various other plants somewhat widely known belong to the same family, which is called by a hundred different names in various parts of the world.

Roughly they are all aroids. They grow in abundance in Central America, South America, the West Indies, equatorial Africa, Malaysia, the Hawaiian Islands, Japan and China. In all these countries the natives plant them crudely in damp places and reap abundant harvests. They prepare them for eating in a hundred ways. They are toothsome, nourishing, economical. They far surpass many of the expensive foods of this country and have much that recommends them to the entire world.

The aroids are root crops. They are more nearly comparable with potatoes than with anything else we know. The tubers grow in clusters on the roots of the plant. They are often larger than one's fist and are covered with a somewhat rough skin. This may, however, easily be removed, or it may be left on until after cooking. The tubers may be baked, boiled or fried. Baking is probably the best method of cooking them. They may be mashed and prepared with butter or milk or eggs.

There are great numbers wherever the elephant's ear flourishes, but too far north will not come to maturity. There are many varieties and some of these flourish much farther north than others.

The aroids are wet land plants. They thrive on lowlands that are much flooded, provided the water does not stagnate on them. Their favorite conditions are those under which potatoes would not thrive. Some varieties grow well under conditions suitable for rice.

There are in the south millions of acres that are lying idle because they are too wet, and some of these great areas would be ideal lands upon which to grow the aroids. They require little cultivation as compared with other crops. It is because of this small labor demand that the crop has always been so popular in the tropic, where men are not given to overexertion.

HORSE PLUNGES INTO A CINCINNATI STREET CAR.

One of the most remarkable accidents on record occurred in Cincinnati when a runaway horse jumped through the rear entrance of a street car at Fourth and Main streets, injuring half a dozen panic-stricken passengers. The platform of the car was wrecked, the doorway was splintered and broken, glass was sent flying through the car. When police arrived they found the horse so tightly wedged into the car that the wreckage had to be cut away with axes before he could be pulled out. The horse was so badly injured he had to be shot.

LITTLE THINGS WORTH KNOWING

In New York proposed extensions of the subway are contemplated which represent an expenditure of $100,000,000.

The hardest wood in the world is not ebony, but cocus, which is much used for making flutes and similar musical instruments.

The sea kale used as food in China comes largely from the coast of Saghlien, where the leaves average one foot in width and forty-five in length.

BUSINESS-TRAINED GIRLS SAID TO MAKE GOOD WIVES

GIRLS who have been trained in business life are favored as possible wives by bachelors in all parts of the United States, according to the opinions that have been expressed by 500 of them. Some of the most striking things the bachelors say are given in Good Housekeeping Magazine.

A Massachusetts man says that "as a rule the girls who are in business know the value of money and expect less than the daughters of the rich." "The majority of the business girls I know live at home and pay a very small board bill, leaving a comfortable balance for clothes and little luxuries which would have to be materially reduced if they were to marry me," is the frank declaration of a Springfield (Mass.) man. "Every husband," says a bachelor, "has a natural pride in being able to provide better for his wife than she could for herself. Any other feeling on the part of the wife lessens her respect." "I am positive they are better companions for men than girls who do not know the real value of a dollar." So speaks a champion of the business girl from Washington, D. C.

The 500 bachelors were asked to express their minds in regard to the right income to marry on. Their ideas range from $500 to $15,000 a year. The average is $2,439.40. They all agree that club life "isn't in it" with having a home of one's own, and they believe that the girls who want their husbands to provide the luxuries of parental homes aren't worth marrying.

"The young husband, unless he starts with some parental cash stowed away, cannot hope to furnish the luxuries the girl has been accustomed to for some time after his marriage," says another Springfield (Mass.) man. "His stinted resources must be taken as a matter of course. The girl undoubtedly has had the benefit of years of industry on the part of her parents, while her new-found better half is just beginning to get some for himself and others. Present salaries do not average as well on the whole for the young man as the income of the parents. The uselessness of competition is obvious."

"All depends upon the parties involved," is the sage pronouncement of one respondent to the inquiry. "However, I do think a good percentage of the girls to-day expect all the comforts and 99½ per cent of the luxuries. The whole tendency of the day seems for the young men and women to begin life where their parents leave off. They want to set up housekeeping with silver and solid mahogany, when, perhaps, the parents purchased theirs only ten years back."

WHY SOME BLOWS ARE DANGEROUS.

Diagram showing side view of the heart, lungs, stomach, liver and kidneys. Also the position of the nerve centers (plexuses) affected by dangerous blows in boxing. Sketched by Dr. W. R. C. Latson.

Scientific fistic combat began with the cestus of the Greek athletes. The cestus was a sort of boot, made of leather, fitted to the forearm and heavily weighted. The science of the cestus was simple. The boxer merely lunged out at an exposed point of his opponent's anatomy, trusting to the rapidity of the blow and the weight of the cestus to break down the defense and land his punch. The cestus, as might be imagined, inflicted frightful injuries, and often caused death by a single blow.

Until thirty or so years ago boxers fought much like the old Greeks, simply trying to hit any exposed place, and keeping up this random pounding until one or the other, from pain, exhaustion or loss of blood, was forced to stop. Gradually, however, it came to be known that a sharp, rapid, not necessarily powerful blow, landed exactly on certain points, would cause temporary paralysis of both mind and muscles. Thus came the "knock-out" blows.

The nervous mechanism which regulates the action of the bodily organs, heart, lungs, stomach, liver, and so on, is composed of millions of fibers or threads. These fibers are at certain points gathered into knots, or, as they are called, plexuses; and a shock or blow at one of these points will produce temporary paralysis of evgry function—that is, a "knock-out." The principal nerve knots (or plexuses) connected with boxing are shown in the diagram. A blow to the chin, under the ear, over the heart, or just under the breast bone, is likely to reach one of these points. These are the dangerous blows of boxing.—W. R. C. Latson, B. S., M. D.

Johnny's Watch.

John's aunt gave him a bright and shiny dollar watch for his birthday, and the boy's satisfaction was unbounded. A couple of weeks later he remarked very dolefully that the watch wasn't keeping good time.

"It must be wound very carefully every night before you go to bed," his aunt told him.

"Oh, I never knew that," said the boy. "Now I s'pose I've just gone and ruined it?"

"Why, when have you been winding it?"

"The first thing every morning," answered the boy sorrowfully.—Lippincott's.

Saving His Life.

A story is told of an Englishman who had occasion for a doctor while staying in Peking.

"Sing Loo, the gleatest doctor," said his servant; "he savee my life once."

"Really?" queried the Englishman.

"Yes; me tellible awful," was the reply; "me callee in another doctor. He givee me medicine; me velly, velly bad. Me callee in another doctor. He come and give me more medicine, make me velly, velly badder. Me called in Sing Loo. He no come. He savee my life."—Birmingham (England) Post.

BULLDOG ATE THE CENSUS.

At Washington, D. C., a whole day's work of one of the bright census enumerators went for the evening meal of a hungry bulldog. All day the industrious enumerator worked, filling his book with the names of prominent citizens at 2½ cents per name. Toward night he reached the gate of a house and met an unusually big bulldog. The enumerator spoke nothing but kindly words, but the dog paid no attenton. Then the census man waved his enumeration book at the animal. That was the clarion call with the dog. It leaped, landing with jaws firmly locked in the enumeration book. The animal wrenched it from the startled and frightened enumerator's hands and proceeded to quietly, but unmercifully, tear it to pieces. Every name that met this fate meant 2½ cents to the enumerator, but his skin meant more, so he perched on a gate until the dog's master appeared. He had to do the work all over again.

ENGLAND'S NEW KING AND QUEEN AND DOWAGER QUEEN.

Queen Alexandra

The new Queen is Victoria. At St. James' place, on the 6th of July, 1893, Prince George, Duke of York, married his second cousin (once removed), Princess Victoria Mary of Teck, but known familiarly in court circles as "Princess May." She was then entitled to the honorable distinction "Her Serene Highness," and her full name is Victoria Mary Augusta Louise Olga Pauline Claudine Agnes. Her mother was Princess Mary Adelaide, daughter of the Duke of Cambridge, youngest son of George III., and her father was the Duke of Teck, ruler of a medieval duchy now belonging to Wurttemberg. The new queen was born at Kensington palace May 26, 1867, and spent her babyhood and childhood at White Lodge, Richmond, and was carefully trained and educated. She speaks several languages and is proficient in music, being the possessor of a beautiful soprano voice. She was betrothed to the Duke of Clarence at the time of his death, and less than two years later became the affianced of his brother, her present consort. She is the mother of five sons and one daughter. Her eldest son, Albert Edward, now heir apparent to the throne, is a manly lad who will be 16 years old the coming June. At present he is serving as a naval cadet. Prince Albert Frederick, the second son, and heir presumtive, also is a naval cadet.

With the accession to the British throne of the Prince and Princess of Wales, Queen Alexandria becomes the dowager queen, the first the empire has had since the death in 1837 of William IV., who was survived by Queen Adelaide, a princess of Saxe-Coburg-Meiningen. As dowager queen she will receive an annuity of $350,000 for her maintenance.

George Frederick Ernest Albert, Prince of Wales, who has become King, is the second son of King Edward and Queen Alexandra, and was born at Marlborough House on June 3, 1865, seventeen months after the birth of his elder brother, the late Duke of Clarence. He and his brother entered the navy together as cadets, and he spent two years on the Britannia. Then he started on a three-year-voyage around the world. In 1892, when his brother died, he became heir apparent, and took his seat in the House of Lords as Duke of York. In May, 1893, his engagement was announced to Princess Victoria May of Teck, and they were married on July 6, 1893. Six children were born to them: Edward Albert, Albert Frederick, Victoria Alexandra, Henry William, George Edward and John Charles. The Prince became Duke of Cornwall when his father took the throne, and soon thereafter started on a tour of the colonies. He opened the first Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia. In celebration of his safe return from the tour he was entertained by the London corporation at Guild Hall on Dec. 5, 1901, on which occasion he delivered his well-known advice to England to "wake up." In the fall of 1905 he went to India, and when he returned there was another celebration. On this occasion he said that "the task of governing India will be made easier if we on our part infuse into it a wider element of sympathy." His Indian trip was regarded as not a success from a political viewpoint. In 1908 he visited Canada to attend the celebration at Quebec, and on that occasion met Vice President Fairbanks. The Prince is less democratic than was his father and does not have such an ardent love for sports. It has been predicted, therefore, that the court gayety, which was always a feature during Edward's reign, will be less marked.

NEW KING'S NEAR RELATIVES.

King George V. has three sisters. They are:

Princess Louise, who, during the life of the late king, was the princess royal of England. She was born February 20, 1867; was married January 27, 1889, to the Duke of Fife, and has two children—Alexandra Victoria, born May 17, 1891, and Maud Alexandra, born April 3, 1893.

Princess Victoria Alexandra, born July 6, 1868.

Princess Maud Charlotte, born November 26, 1869; married July 22, 1896, to Prince Karl of Denmark, who is now King Haakon VI of Norway.

The uncles and aunts of the new king, are:

Princess Helena, born May 25, 1846; married July 5, 1866, to Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein. She has three children.

Princess Louise, born March 18, 1848; married March 21, 1871, to the Marquis of Lorne, who became Duke of Argyll on April 24, 1900.

Prince Arthur, Duke of Connaught, born May 1, 1850; married March 13, 1879, to Princess Louise of Prussia. He has three children, the oldest of whom, Princess Margaret Victoria, born January 15, 1882, was married on June 15, 1905, to Prince Gustaf Adolf, Crown Prince of Sweden.

Princess Beatrice, born April 14, 1857; married July 23, 1885, to Prince Henry of Hesse. She has four children, the second of whom, Princess Victoria Eugenie, was married on May 31, 1906, to Alfonso XIII., King of Spain.

CHILDREN OF ENGLAND'S NEW KING AND QUEEN.

These are the children of King George V. and Queen Mary, including Prince Edward, who is the heir to the throne of England in direct line through his father. Prince Edward is in uniform and sits with a protecting arm around one of his brothers. The members of the group in order of their age are: Prince Edward Albert (15), Prince Albert Frederick (13), Princess Victoria Alexandra (12), Prince Henry William (9), Prince George Edward (6) and Prince John Charles (4).

ANOTHER WOMAN CURED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Black Duck, Minn.—"About a year ago I wrote you that I was sick and could not do any of my housework. My sickness was called Retroflexion. When I would sit down I felt as if I could not get up. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and did just as you told me and now I am perfectly cured, and have a big baby boy."—MRS. ANNA ANDERSON, Box 19, Black Duck, Minn.

Consider This Advice.

No woman should submit to a surgical operation, which may mean death, until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made exclusively from roots and herbs, a fair trial.

This famous medicine for women has for thirty years proved to be the most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women residing in almost every city and town in the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It cures female ills, and creates radiant, buoyant female health. If you are ill, for your own sake as well as those you love, give it a trial.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

The Pianoforte.

Thump! Rattle! Bang, bang! Rattle! Thump!

"Great Heavens!" cried the neighbor, starting up. "What on earth is your daughter trying to play now?"

"It's an exercise," said little Elsie's mother, beaming with maternal pride, "from 'First Steps in Music.'"

"'First Steps in Music'?" repeated the harassed neighbor. "Well, dear, is there nothing she can play with her hands?"—Answers.

Woman Who Packs Trunks.

The shop window demonstrator that draws the largest audience at this time of the year is the professional trunk packer, the New York Sun says. The trunk is a huge affair. It is or exhibition in the window of a trunk store. The same confusion that prevails in your own home when you are getting ready to go to some place prevails there. Chairs, tables and floor are littered with all kinds of clothing. True to life, the packer glares impotently for a minute at the hopeless array, then with a sudden spurt of energy she pounces on those clothes. And how she does make them fly! With a deftness that no ordinary human being can ever hope to emulate she stuffs sleeves with tissue paper, fits shoes on their trees, folds skirts, fastens things into place with wide tape, and the first thing you know those mounds of clothes have disappeared and have been packed neatly into the trunk. It seems a shame to root them out again, while the next audience is crowding up to the window the things are scattered about ready for another demonstration in packing.

Echoes of the Past.

Mark Antony had asked his countrymen to lend him their ears.

"I want them for a loan exposition," he explained. "I have already a splendid collection of Roman noses."

Having gained their attention by this little flight of fancy, he proceeded to fling a few choice bouquets at the late J. Caesar.

Baby Wasted to a Skeleton.

"My little son, when about a year and a half old, began to have sores come out on his face. I had a physician treat him, but the sores grew worse. Then they began to come out on his arms, then on other parts of his body, and then one came on his chest, worse than the others. Then I called another physician. Still he grew worse. At the end of about a year and a half of suffering he grew so bad that I had to tie his hands in cloths at night to keep him from scratching the sores and tearing the flesh. He got to be a mere skeleton, and was hardly able to walk.

"My aunt advised me to try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I sent to a drug store and got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of the Ointment and followed directions. At the end of two months the sores were all well. He has never had any sores of any kind since. I can sincerely say that only for Cuticura my child would have died. I used only one cake of Cuticura Soap and about three boxes of Ointment.

"I am a nurse and my profession brings me into many different families and it is always a pleasure for me to tell my story and recommend Cuticura Remedies. Mrs. Egbert Sheldon, R. F. D. 1, Litchfield, Conn., Oct. 23, 1909."

Couldn't Fool Mrs. G.

They were looking at a famous collection of paintings, and had stopped in front of a "Portrait of a Lady."

"Why, that's a Rembrandt!" delightedly exclaimed Mrs. Upsome.

"I'm not so sure about that," said Mrs. Gaswell, bringing her lorgnette to bear upon it. "It looks to me more like a Merry Widow."

Hermann The Great.

Hermann the Great, the famous magician, could take a rabbit out of a silk hat and a bunch of roses out of an empty paper cone. Easy Task laundry soap takes the dirt out of clothes like magic. You don't have to boil the clothes; Easy Task gets after the dirt and sends it flying while the clothes soak. Our best housewives say it is the finest soap sold in Fort Wayne.

To Fit the Crime.

"I ain't no saint, boss," said the hobo. "I wunst voted a couple o' hundred repeaters in my precinct, an' they sent me to the penitenchry for it."

"Great Caesar!" exclaimed the man who had just befriended him. "I did the same thing once, and they sent me to Congress for it!"—Chicago Tribune.

Subtle Flattery.

Waiters Nos. 1 and 2 peeped out at the baldheaded man, then ducked behind the screen.

"None of him for me," said Waiter No. 1. "He doesn't tip.'

"Same here," said Waiter No. 2.

"I'll fix him," said Waiter No. 3.

He took an order for soup. Before serving it he showed the two mutineers a hair floating on the surface of the soup. They marveled then, and they marveled still more when at the end of the baldheaded man's dinner the waiter returned wtih a dollar bill.

"Ninety-nine baldheaded men in a hundred can be worked that way," he said. "If the customer doesn't see the hair himself I call his attention to it and make him think it fell out of his own head. The fact that he had a hair to lose so appeals to his vanity that he loves me for finding it and gives me a tip big enough to cover the cost of a dozen plates of soup."—Chicago Tribune.

Expert Opinion.

What is the use of a child's going to school to learn mere grammar? Such evidently is the opinion of the mother of a girl whose teacher instructed her to purchase a book on that subject. According to a writer in the Burr Oak Herald, Lulu came back the next day with this explanatory letter:

I do not desire for Lulu shall ingage in grammar, as I prefer her ingage in yuseful studies, and can learn her how to spoke and write properly myself. I have went through two grammars, and I can't say as they did me any good, I prefer her ingage in german and drawing and vocal music on the piano.

Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

A General Purpose Poultry House.

This building is 14 feet wide, and can be as long as desired, adding another set or sets of rooms and sheds at one or both ends. The construction is simple, but durable. Outside walls are covered on outside and inside with light weight prepared roofing, placed on cheap lumber. Plaster board may be substituted for the inside. Studs are 2x2, and there are two sets; waterproof paper being placed between them. Thus a double air space is secured. Rafters are of 2x4, and may be stripped beneath and practically the same construction used as for the sides; using thicker roofing. So constructed, the building will be very warm.

Foundation is of stone, brick or grout. Floors are of cement, covered with dry sand. Broken stone, well tamped as for macadam road is cheaper than cement, and makes a fair substitute. The ventilators, being placed in the warmest parts of rooms will draw. Windows have sash with some glass, but mostly filled with heavy muslin. This lets in a fair amount of light, and air enough to prevent dampness. By using two courses of cloth it will be fully as warm as one of glass, and insure a dry building.

One room has a double row of nests, with wire partition above. When a hen wants to set, her nest is pushed through into small room, and replaced by the one opposite; the door being closed. A small door leads to an exercise yard. Partition door is open, except when raising chickens. Scratching sheds have earth floors, and are enclosed by wire fencing, with doors. In winter muslin can be added, making the sheds warm, and not excluding the sun.

The brooder room has a wood floor. Beneath is a basement for incubator. By a stove in room above and the double flue chimney both can be kept at any desired temperature, and the air pure. A trap door covers stairway. Basement has windows on both sides. Entrance is from north, while south side is taken up by yards.—Farm, Stock and Home.

Felling Trees by Electricity.

According to a statement issued by the Siemens-Schuckert Company of Berlin, the felling of trees by means of wires heated by electric currents, which has been described in various newspapers, cannot be accomplished in a practical and economical manner, for the following reasons: The wire, to cut effectively, must be very tightly stretched and it is therefore very liable to rupture, in consequence of its high temperature. The redhot wire carbonizes the wood, and the charcoal, if allowed to accumulate, protects the interior parts from the heat of the wire. In order to remove the charcoal, the wire must be roughened and moved to and fro lengthwise, so that the operation is still a sort of sawing, and the motion and roughening increase the liability to rupture.

Trapnests and Dry Feed.

Prof. Chambers, referred to in our last issue, ascribes his success to intelligent feeding, good care and trapnesting. His hens receive dry feed entirely. He gives a light feed of whole wheat and corn three times a day, scattering the grain in the litter. He keeps before his hens all the time in self-feeding hoppers, a dry mash made of the following mixture:

	Pounds.
Bran	200
Alfalfa meal	200
Corn meal	100
Shorts	100
Linseed meal	100
Meat, bone and blood	100

All these are mixed with a little salt and cayenne pepper.

Weight of Feeds by Quarts.

Dairymen especially will be interested in knowing the weight of the several feeds by quarts, inasmuch as in compounding dairy rations, the terms are expressed in pounds: Cotton-seed oil, 1.5 pounds; linseed meal, old process, 1.1 pounds; gluten meal, 1.7 pounds; gluten feed, 1.2 pounds; wheat bran, coarse, 5-10ths pound; wheat middlings, coarse, 8-10ths pound; wheat middlings, fine, 1.1 pounds; mixed wheat feed, 6-10ths pound; corn meal, 1.5 pounds; oats, 1.2 pounds; rye bran, 8-10ths pound.

Limiting the Flock.

Where the farmer himself works with poultry as he does with hogs or cattle, 200 hens should be the minimum limit of the flock, and more than this number can be handled with profit if the farmer understands the business and has some hired help. Both eggs and market poultry are very high and any farmer can make as much or more from poultry as he can with any other farm animals, if he puts thought and work into the business.

Boon to Horses.

If horses had means of expressing their thanks they would probably unite and send a resolution of gratitude to the Pennsylvania man who invented the horseshoe shown in the sketch. The horseshoe has a series of parallel ridges on its heel and toe portions. The ridges on the toe portion run parallel to the longitudinal axis of the shoe and those on the heel portion run transversely. These ridges form a series of recesses adapted to receive and retain snow or dirt; thus forming a bearing surface for the shoe and making the horse surer of his footing. Running in opposite directions as they do the corrugations act as a sort of brake in whichever way the animal's feet may happen to slip and the whole effect is to prevent snow or dirt "caking" on the flat of the shoe.

Nitrate of Soda.

Nitrate of soda, being a combination of nitric acid and soda, not only acts chemically on the soil, but the nitrogen therein contained enters directly into the composition of the plant, while the soda is also appropriated by the plant to a limited extent. Nitrate of soda contains about 17 per cent of ammonia. In buying this article the farmer gets a proportion of soda, a fertilizer of itself on some crops. It comes from Chili, and is known as Chili saltpeter. There is another saltpeter, much higher in price, known as nitrate of potash.

The Joe Strawberry.

The Joe strawberry has had quite extensive trail and everywhere made a good record. It is a mid-season to late berry, and under favorable conditions grows to the largest size. One berry is recorded as weighing more than two ounces. The plant is large and very vigorous and healthy in growth. The berry is regular in shape and among the most beautiful in general appearance. It is also of high flavor. If you have a heavy, rich soil and will mulch the plants well, you can raise some prize-winning berries from the Joe.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Average Yield of Oats.

According to the Crop Reporter, issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, the average oat yields per acre for ten years were as follows: Russia, 19.4 bushels; France, 28.1; Austria, 28.6; United States, 29.8; United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, 44.7; and Germany, 47.3. The three great crops of wheat last year were: United States, 807,156,000 bushels; Germany, 530,131,000 bushels; and Russia, 834,502 bushels. The world's crop was 3,560,524,000 bushels, and in excess of either corn or wheat.

Sowing Cowpeas.

The cow pea is sometimes sown in combination with other crops, such as corn, Kaffir corn and sorghum, for hay. When planted in these combinations there is danger of the cowpeas becoming stunted in growth if the crop with which it is combined is planted too thick. Sown broadcast, cowpeas often make little growth with these crops, but when planted in rows with corn and cultivated the growth is quite satisfactory.

Dairying.

Dairying in Holland is the principal occupation. The land is worth from $500 to $1,000 an acre, yet the people pay their rents or interest on the investment by producing butter and cheese, which they place on the European market in successful competition with that produced in America on land of less than one-fifth value. The secret is—efficient cows, excellent care, co-operation and superiority of butter and cheese.

SECURING PROPER GRADE.

To obtain an even grade in trenches where tiles are to be laid, stretch lines across the ditch five feet above the bed. The lines are tied securely to stakes on either side of the ditch. White cotton rope one-fourth inch in diameter is the best kind to make easy sighting. The proper hitch on the stakes is shown in the lower illustrations. In practice a mark can be made on the long handle of the shovel five feet from the point and the sighting done without delay as the work goes on.

Huxley Knew It.

Huxley, the brilliant English scientist and man of letters, was unusually quick and subtle at repartee. Once while dining with Herbert Spencer and another friend at the Athenaeum, the conversation flagging, Spencer remarked:

"You would little think it, but I once wrote a tragedy."

Huxley answered promptly, "I know the catastrophe."

Spencer declared it was impossible, for he had never spoken about it before then. Huxley insisted, and Spencer asked what it was. Huxley replied:

"A beautiful theory, killed by a nasty, ugly little fact!"

SCREAMED WITH PAIN.

A Terrible Tale of Kidney Suffering.

Charles Easter, East Locust St., Watseka, Ill., says: "I suffered such severe pain in my back that I actually screamed and for six months was unable to sit in a chair. I lost 40 pounds and was so lame I could not wash my face. The kidney secretions were of a whitish color and often suppressed. After doctoring and using different remedies, I began with Doan's Kidney Pills. I gained gradually and was soon cured. The cure is permanent."

Did He Tip the Waiter?

Waiters do not like the man who tears a bill in halves and gives half of it to the man who serves him, with the promise that he shall have the other half if he gives satisfaction. A veteran waiter describes to a writer in the New York Sun an experience with a man who resorted to this device.

"I took pains to serve him poorly, to show him that I did not care for his money," said the waiter. "I was so careless that when he was leaving he refused me the other half. I was sure he was a miser, anyhow.

"I pointed out to him that the piece he had was no good to him as it was, and offered to buy it from him for two dollars.

"He thought deeply a minute and declined.

"Then I offered to sell him my half for three dollars. Somehow or other this appealed to him, and he bought it and seemed happy.

"I'll bet he hasn't stopped figuring out yet, whether he won or lost. One thing he's sure of, he didn't tip the waiter.

Precept and Example.

"Colonel, that was an admirable speech you made at the club the other evening on the obligations of citizenship. I've been intending to tell you so ever since I heard it. We need more of that kind of talk nowadays. But what are you looking so gloomy about this morning, colonel? No bad news, I hope."

"Dash it all, yes! I've been drawn on a jury!"—Chicago Tribune.

A clear brain and Steady, dependable nerves Can win wealth and fame For their owner.

Clear-headedness and a Strong, healthy body Depend largely on the Right elements in Regular food and drink.

Coffee contains caffeine—A poisonous drug.

Postum is rich in the Gluten and phosphates that Furnish the vital energy That puts "ginger" and "hustle" Into body and brain.

"There's a Reason"

For Good Gingerbread.

For an "eggless" gingerbread, mix in a large bowl one cupful of molasses, half a cupful of sour milk or cream, one teaspoonful of salt. Dissolve one teaspoonful of soda in a teaspoonful of cold water, add this and two tablespoonfuls of melted butter to the mixture. Now stir in two cupfuls of sifted flour. Pour the mixture into a well buttered deep tin and bake in a moderately hot oven for about twenty minutes.

Vanilla Custard.

Boil one pint of cream with four ounces of sugar for a quarter of an hour and strain through muslin. Beat well the yolks of six eggs and pour milk over them, placing the bowl over a pan of boiling water. Stir rapidly till it thickens. Let it cool gradually, then add one teaspoonful of vanilla and stir continually. When cold serve in a dish covered with whipped white of eggs sifted over with sugar.

Waffles Raised with Yeast.

Mix a half cupful of butter with one quart of flour. Add slowly a quart of hot milk, and when cooled to lukewarm a half yeast cake, softened in a quarter of a cupful of lukewarm water. Beat well, then add two eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately, but vigorously. Let this batter rise over night. In the morning beat well again, let rise an hour longer, then bake.

Milk Pie.

One pint milk, scalded; three eggs, two tablespoonfuls flour wet with a little cold milk (like starch). Stir this into the scalded milk, add the beaten eggs after it comes from the fire, then sweeten to the taste and add a little salt and flavor. Bake in deep plates like a custard, with bottom crust. This is excellent.

Jersey Rice Pudding.

One quart cold milk, one-half cup rice, scant measure, little salt, one-half cup sugar, butter size of an egg. Put in a nappy and bake slowly two and one-half hours, stirring frequently until the last hour. When done it should be like thick cream and slip in the dish as you tip it. This pudding must be carefully baked; it must not be hurried.

Peas, Parisian Style.

Put a can of peas in a saucepan with a sprig of parsley, an onion sliced and a few leaves of lettuce. Toss them over occasionally, and when cooked add a tablespoon of butter blended with a tablespoon of flour. If too thick add water or milk and cook for fifteen minutes.

Lenox Salad.

Remove the skins and seeds from white grapes. And an equal quantity of English walnuts broken in pieces. Marinate with French dressing and arrange on lettuce leaves. Substitute white cherries for grapes if preferred.

Hints About the House.

Green vegetables are best cooked in open vessels to save the color.

To give a richer flavor to the roast, baste it with drippings instead of water.

A piece of ham bone added to vegetable or soup stock will improve the flavor.

Candles will last much longer if they are kept on ice twenty-four hours before using.

When soaking mackerel or other salt fish see that the skin side is placed uppermost.

Turn the wooden chopping bowl upside down when not in use and it will never split.

To cure the sting of a wasp or bee, mix common earth with water and apply at once.

To let vines climb up on wooden walls will seriously damage them, as it promotes decay.

When making sweet croquettes add a little sugar to the crumbs in which the croquettes are to be rolled.

Stains may be removed from tinware by scouring with common soda, then washing thoroughly and drying.

Lemons hardened from long standing may be made usable by covering a few moments with boiling water.

Pans greased with butter will make the bottom crust of pies soft and flaky and prevent them from being soggy.

Celery can be much improved by soaking it for an hour in ice-cold water in which a lemon has been squeezed.

To clean a copper kettle, rub it with powdered bath brick and paraffin and polish with dry brick dust or whiting.

To remove paint from linens rub with turpentine, then clean with French chalk dampened with alcohol.

Mend broken china with plaster of paris mixed with the white of egg and it will stand washing. This method is suitable for articles of everyday use, not for valuable old china.

Cream to be whipped must be one day old. No sugar should be added either before or after it is beaten. The sweetening should be in the pudding or cake with which it is served.

All cups and jugs should occasionally be scrubbed round the handles with a well-soaped brush. If this is not done they are apt to get a grimy appearance that is anything but appetizing.

To clean and tighten cane chair seats turn the chair upside down, and with hot water sponge the cane work till it is thoroughly soaked. If the cane be dirty use a little soap. Let dry in the air or before a fire, and if the cane be merely stretched—not worn—it will then be as good as new.

White lead makes a capital cement for broken crockery. Paint it along the broken edges, then press the pieces together and tie them in place. Leave the mended article to dry for two or three days, and when thoroughly dry it will be as strong as ever, though perhaps not so ornamental.

Remedies are Needed

Were we perfect, which we are not, medicines would not often be needed. But since our systems have become weakened, impaired and broken down through indiscretions which have gone on from the early ages, through countless generations, remedies are needed to aid Nature in correcting our inherited and otherwise acquired weaknesses. To reach the seat of stomach weakness and consequent digestive troubles, there is nothing so good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a glycetic compound, extracted from native medicinal roots—sold for over forty years with great satisfaction to all users. For Weak Stomach, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Pain in the Stomach after eating, Heartburn, Bad Breath, Belching of food, Chronic Diarrhœa and other Intestinal Derangements, the "Discovery" is a time-proven and most efficient remedy.

The genuine has on its outside wrapper the Signature R. V. Pierce M.D.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic, medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION, not even though the urgent dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take as candy.

The Overland Now the Leading Car

Overland sales now run $200,000 per day. There has never been a record approaching that in the history of automobiles.

When a man sees an Overland, all the lesser cars lose their attractions. For no other car gives so much for the money. And none is so simple, so easy to care for, so proof against troubles.

The Simplicity

The Overlands operate by pedal control, so the hands have nothing to do but steer. One goes forward or backward, fast or slow, simply by pushing pedals. A child can master the car in ten minutes.

The Overlands are free from complexities. A novice can run them and care for them. One of these cars has run 7,000 miles without stopping the engine.

In the Government Postal Service Overlands have run 75 miles a day for a year and a half without missing a trip.

They are as faithful as watches. A man who knows nothing about machinery can run an Overland a thousand miles and back.

25 h. p. for $1,000

Overlands are made by modern automatic machinery. And they are made in such numbers that the cost is brought down to the minimum.

A 25-horsepower Overland roadster sells for $1,000. It has a 102-inch wheel base, and a possible speed of 50 miles an hour. The same car with top touring costs $1,100.

A 40-horsepower Overland, with a 112-inch wheel base, sells for $1,250 to $1,400, according to style of body. All of these prices include gas lamps and magneto.

Never before were such large and powerful cars sold at such prices as these.

Compare the Cars

You should find out, for your own sake, why Overlands so outsell other cars. You should see how simple they are, how trouble-proof.

There are Overland dealers everywhere—500 of them now. If you will send us this coupon for our new catalog we will tell you the nearest one. Please cut out the coupon now.

A Storekeeper Says:

"A lady came into my store lately and said:

"'I have been using a New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove all winter in my apartment. I want one now for my summer home. I think these oil stoves are wonderful. If only women knew what a comfort they are, they would all have one. I spoke about my stove to a lot of my friends, and they were astonished. They thought that there was smell and smoke from an oil stove, and that it heated a room just like any other stove. I told them of my experience, and one after another they got one, and now, not one of them would give hers up for five times its cost.'"

The lady who said this had thought an oil stove was all right for quickly heating milk for a baby, or boiling a kettle of water, or to make coffee quickly in the morning, but she never dreamed of using it for difficult or heavy cooking. Now—she knows.

Do you really appreciate what a New Perfection Oil Cook-Stove means to you? No more coal to carry, no more coming to the dinner table so tired out that you can't eat. Just light a Perfection Stove and immediately the heat from an intense blue flame shoots up to the bottom of pot, kettle or oven. But the room isn't heated. There is no smoke, no smell, no outside heat, no drudgery in the kitchen where one of these stoves is used.

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

New Perfection WICK BLUE FLAME Oil Cook-stove

It has a Cabinet Top with a shelf for keeping plates and food hot. The nickel finish, with the bright blue of the chimneys, makes the stove ornamental and attractive. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

WESTERN CANADA

Senator Deliver, of Iowa, says:

"The stream of emigrants from the United States to Canada will continue." Senator Deliver recently paid a visit to Western Canada, and says: "There is a land hunger in the hearts of English speaking people; this will account for the removal of so many Iowa farmers to Canada. Our people are pleased with the Government and the excellent administration of law, and they are coming to you in tens of thousands, and they are still coming."

Iowa contributed largely to the 70,000 American farmers who made Canada their home during 1909. Field crop returns alone during year added to the wealth of the country upwards of $170,000,000.00

Grain growing, mixed farming, cattle raising and dairying are all profitable. Free Homesteads of 160 acres are to be had in the very best districts. 160 acre pre-emptions at $3.00 per acre within certain areas. Schools and churches in every settlement, climate unexcelled, soil the richest, wood, water and building material plentiful.

For Coughs—Take This

Do you know a remedy for coughs and colds nearly seventy years old? There is one—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Once in the family, it stays. It is not a doctor, does not take the place of a doctor. It is a doctor's aid. Made for the treatment of all throat and lung troubles. Ask your own doctor his opinion of it. Follow his advice. No alcohol in this cough medicine. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

You cannot recover promptly if your bowels are constipated. Ayer's Pills are gently laxative; act directly on the liver. Sold for nearly sixty years. Ask your doctor all about them.

"It cured me," or "It saved the life of my child," are the expressions you hear every day about Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. This is true the world over where this valuable remedy has been introduced. No other medicine in use for diarrhoea or bowel complaints has received such general approval. REAL LIVE WASHINGTON GOSSIP

(BY TAVERNER)

Government by stealth, is a fitting expression to describe the gag-rule methods inaugurate under Mr. Taft.

Not merely the average employee of the government, but the highest officials, are afraid to give newspaper men information as to what is going on. Employees are being made to feel that they owe no fidelity to the public, but that they are mere personal servants of the coterie of men now in charge of the government.

As a result of the discharge of Pinchot, Glavis, Kerby and other interior department employees, the average government worker today feels that it is worth his position to discuss even matters of public record with a newspaper man.

The following official order signed by George Otis Smith, director of the United States Geological survey, gives an idea of the Russian-like censorship that has been established over government information.

"Rule 2. That no interview shall be granted without securing from the person soliciting the same a promise that he will, before submitting the material to his publication office, present a copy of his manuscript to the director (George Otis Smith) for approval."

So far as is known among newspaper men in Washington, nothing so drastic as this in the way of press censorship has ever been attempted before in America.

In 1890, under Cleveland, the total annual appropriation for the expenses of the national government was $340,000,000 or $6 for every man, woman and child. In 1900 our expenses had increased to $600,000,000 or $8 for every man, woman and child. The last Congress appropriated the colossal sum of $1,044,401,857 or nearly $12 for every man, woman and child. This Congress threatens to spend $17,000,000 in excess of last year's appropriation.

Republicans appear reluctant to concern themselves much about government expenditures in relation to the cost of living. But one thing is certain. Government does not pick up these hundreds of millions of dollars in the street. This money comes out of somebody's pocket. Unlike city and state governments, the national government has but one way of raising revenue to meet expenses and that is by taxing things eaten, worn or used by the people. Hence it is that increased cost of living is marching hand-in-hand with increased republican extravagance.

Lame shoulder is almost invariably caused by rheumatism of the muscles and yields quickly to the free application of Chamberlain's Liniment. This liniment is not only prompt and effectual, but in no way disagreeable to use. Sold by G. W. Geddes. 22-1m

Summer Care of Orcdards

The fruit crop in many localities in central and northern Indiana, has been severely damaged by the recent succession of heavy frosts. The crop in most sections of southern Indiana, also has been made lighter than was promised early in the season, although some favored localities apparently escaped any injury.

Many owners of orchards have attempted this spring for the first time, to give their trees intelligent care in the way of pruning and spraying. It is always a temptation for those farmers who are growing fruit as a sideline, to neglect caring for their trees in off years or when only a light crop is produced. This policy is a great mistake, and accounts in no small degree for the fact that the orchard of the commercial grower usually bears much more regularly and abundantly than the other orchards sn the same neighborhood. The commercial orchard is cared for every year. The ordinary home orchard is sprayed, pruned and cultivated irregularly and spasmodically and is likely to bear crops in the same way.

It pays to care for well located orchards in off years when the crop is a total or partial failure. The care the trees receive this summer will help to determine the number and vitality of the fruit buds which will be formed this season for next year's crop. Watch the trees carefully during the summer. The scab fungus and some other diseases which ordinarily do so much damage to the fruit, work also on the leaves. Spraying with Bordeaux mixture is very helpful in keeping these diseases in check, thus protecting the foliage and providing favorable conditions for a good crop next year, even though this year's crop may be light. Watch for leaf eating insects also, and if any are present, add two pounds of arsenate of lead or six ounces of Paris green to every 50 gallons of Bordeaux and spray thoroughly.

In certain sections of the state the crop has been but very little injured. It goes without saying that careful vigilance should be exercised to bring this crop to harvest with as little loss as possible. It is now past the time for the first codling moth spraying, but the fruit should be watched for the appearance of the later broods and sprayed accordingly.

The Department of Horticulture of the Experiment Station is always glad to receive specimens and answer inquires relating to orchard problems.

The Sunrise of Life

Infants and children are constantly needing a laxative. It is important to know what to give them. Their stomach and bowels are not strong enough for salts, purgative waters or cathartic pills, powders or tablets. Give them a mild, pleasant, gentle laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is the one great remedy for you to have in the house to give children when they need it. It is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed, and if you want to try it before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1.00 a bottle. 22-1m

The "Yaller" Dog

Here's to the dog, the poor "yaller" dog,
The best friend of man if you please—
Who takes this world as it's coming to him,
And carries no burdens but fleas.
His breeding's not much, and his value is less
He don't even know any tricks,
Just trotting around with his hair full of burs
Receiver of nothing but kicks.

The best friend of man I repeat it again,
He'll stick to your side till the last,
If you've any doubts all the proof that you need
Is to whistle when he's going past.
He'll come running up to you, licking his chops
And close at your heels he will stay,
He'll follow you home and he'll linger around
And you can't even dog him away.

He's your dog at last whether wanted or not,
No more o'er the wide world he'll rove,
And you'll find him lying from morning till night
Contentedly under the stove.
He's just got ambition enough to crawl out
And stretch himself good when he feels—
The rattling of frying-pans, knives and plates
Is a pretty good sign of his meals.

But if an impulse of adventure should prompt
Him to stray upon most any trail,
He's sure to come back at a two minute clip
With a tin can tied onto his tail.
Emitting a series of woe-be-gone yowls,
(You cannot but pity his plight,)
But yet to a man with red blood in his veins
It's a source of unfathomed delight.

But when you are tired of the ways of the world
And are coming back early or late,
That dog is the first one to welcome you home,
A waggin' his tail by the gate.
So here's to the dog, the poor "yaller" dog,
The best friend of man if you please—
Who takes this world as it's coming to him,
And carries no burdens but fleas.

—John William Barber.

Forecast for June

The present Congress will conclude
Where freedom's latest squawk was,
And turn to have its work reviewed
By all the big chautauquas.
The President will pitch his tent
At Beverly again,
And the news anon will dwell upon
The likelihood of rain.

Upon the 21st the sun will reach the line of Cancer, and summer not too underdone will haply be the answer. This is, they say, the longest day, however you may search, but you will hardly notice it unless you are at church.

At any rate, the swimming-hole will get a little warmer, and harvest time will vex the soul and slumber of the farmer. He'll pray for hands to tend his lands, spread food and tie the dog; and the wary tramp will make his camp inside a hollow log.

The rich will hie away to spend the summer by the water—to live until the season's end the glad life of an otter. The poor, meanwhile, will sweetly smile, however fortune goes, and splash and rub inside the tub alternate with the clothes.

The singing stars will reindulge their old familiar riddle, and milk and buttermilk will bulge the boarder round the middle. The heart for June will hum a tune, or plenty or a crust, and the whippoorwill when night is still will whistle like to bust.

And then July will come around
In terrible ascendance,
And we will shoot each other up
Observing independence.

FIERCE ESKIMO DOGS.

They Retain Their Wild Nature Despite Long Training.

AS SAVAGE AS THE WOLVES.

And Like Their Ferocious Congeners They Always Hunt In Packs—Instances In Labrador Where They Have Devoured Human Beings.

There undoubtedly is an affinity between the wolf and the Eskimo dog. For generations the dog has been trained by the Eskimos, chiefly by the women, and taught to haul a sledge in winter. The Hudson Bay company's agents and the settlers on the coast of Labrador vie with each other in getting together splendid teams. One would naturally suppose that dogs of this kind, so long trained and associated with men, would become more or less domesticated and lose their original savage character. It is, however, quite otherwise.

The Eskimo dog of today is still a pure, unmitigated savage. Like his congener, the wolf, he always hunts in packs. Quite recently an Eskimo, with his wife and child, was making a journey with his team to a nearby settlement. On his way the driver became ill and weak and quite unable to control his team. The dogs turned on them and devoured the whole family.

An old resident at Labrador told me that one winter's evening he was sitting reading when he heard a furious barking among his dogs outside. Fighting among the pack was so common that he took no notice of the disturbance. Next morning the cause of the row was discovered. A poor Eskimo woman was coming to the house for medicine for her sick child. She stumbled over the heap of snow near the door. The pack sprang on her, and some rags and bones discovered next morning told the tale of her tragic fate.

The Newfoundland fishermen often bring home these Eskimo dogs from Labrador. They invariably turn out sheep killers, and the crossbred ones have all the same savage instinct. They have been known to kill a score or more sheep in one night, all being found with their throats torn, but not one eaten. It is simply the savage lust for blood. The early settlers in Newfoundland found the great timber wolves a terrible pest. They killed their sheep and cattle and sometimes attacked women and children. They were continually chased and killed, but still they increased. A handsome bounty on wolfskins, however, eventually brought about their extirpation.

Animals that hunt or move together in packs always retain this characteristic. The reindeer in Lapland have been trained and domesticated by man for countless generations, but they still retain this instinct of the pack. As soon as the team moves all the reindeer start off; nothing can stop them. While the savage pack hunting character of the Eskimo dog remains so long unchanged, we have, on the other hand, in setter and retriever dogs a very striking illustration of how an artificial character can be given to the dog and a special characteristic firmly implanted in a breed and retained for centuries. It is, however, purely artificial and is easily lost. For instance, setters and pointers kept by ladies as pets and not trained lose the instinct to point. The untrained breed within a generation lose it altogether. Every sportsman knows that the young ones are very easily trained and point naturally. I have seen setter pups only six weeks old setting at flies.

The instinct for retrieving is perpetuated in no breed so strongly as the real Newfoundland dog, the fisherman's friend and constant companion and the most splendid of all retrievers. A remarkable instance of his gifts and courage is the story of a Newfoundland settler, George Harvey, how with the aid of his dog and two children he saved 163 lives in 1832. In the autumn of that year the brig Dispatch, on her way to Quebec with emigrants, in a tremendous gale of wind struck a rock about three miles from Harvey's residence at Isle aux Morts. Harvey heard the signals of distress and immediately launched his boat. His only help was a boy of twelve, his girl, sixteen years old, and his dog. To get close to the doomed ship in such a sea was to court destruction. Harvey's dog understood what was required of him. He swam toward the ship. The seas overwhelmed him and drove him back, but finally he came near enough. The sailors threw him a rope, which he caught with his teeth. At last he got back to Harvey's boat almost dead from exhaustion, but with the rope's end firmly clinched in his teeth. Communication between the boat and the ship was then established, and with care and the most laborious efforts every soul was saved.—Judge Prowse in London Standard.

The "Gold Snake."

A Mexican superstition, very common among miners in that country, relates to the "gold snake." This species of serpent is perfectly harmless and very handsome, being green in color and with a golden iridescence in its scales. Faith is entertained that wherever a gold snake makes its nest there is a ledge containing the precious metal, and there are many miners who will locate a claim at once if they find a gold snake.

The power of applying attention to a single subject is the sure mark of a superior genius.—Chesterfield.

HAPPY WOMEN

Plenty of Them in Butler and Good Reason For It

Wouldn't any woman be happy,
After years of backache suffering,
Days of misery, nights of unrest,
The distress of urinary troubles,
She finds relief and cure?

No reason why any Butler reader should suffer in the face of evidence like this:

Mrs. George R. Walters, East Main St., Butler, Ind., says: "I suffered greatly from backache and often could hardly straighten after stooping. The kidney secretions caused me much annoyance by their irregularity in passage and when I commenced taking Doan's Kidney Pills procured at Phillips' drug store I was feeling miserable. The contents of the first box helped me so greatly that I continued their use and before long, I was completely cured. I gave a statement for publication in April, 1906, recommending Doan's Kidney Pills and at this time I can add that I have had no return of the complaint. I am always glad to say a word in favor of Doan's Kidney Pills."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

WIDLAR'S BLACK CROSS COFFEE

Coffee

Nothing But Coffee.

We Want You to Know

Black Cross Coffee

is the most perfectly blended coffee on the market today.

This coffee comes from the different parts of the world; countries known to produce the best and finest flavors; packed in large ware houses in Cleveland, a years supply in advance. This gives to you a uniform quality. Expert blenders are employed that the fine flavor, known to this line, may always be the same.

At Our Own Expense

We Have This Coffee

STEEL CUT

Every particle being the same size, gives up a delightful cup without boiling, which always kills the flavor. In making coffee with the STEEL CUT your grounds all settle to the bottom, the liquid comes clear and free from coffee to the cup.

It seems that the state board of education has a few dollars of surplus funds and so a change is to be made in school books unless the advice of Gov. Marshall is heeded. The school book problem is not a new one; it has been cussed and discussed for a long time, and still it is not settled; nor will it be settled so long as the book publishers can work the state board of education, and the fond parents will continue to go down into their jeans and dig up.

Some of the older citizens recall that thirty-five years ago we had in this country a similar spring to the one just past. It remained cold and wet all summer, but crops were not altogether a failure. The fruit has been considerably damaged by the frosts and the prospects are that there will be only about half a crop. Cut worms are working on the corn, and unless we get more favorable weather soon other crops will suffer. Devoe's weather chart says that June is to be hot and that crops will make a rapid progress. Let's hope.

Life

Man comes into the world without his consent and leaves it against his will. During his stay on earth his time is spent in one continuous round of contraries and misunderstandings. In his infancy he is an angel, in his boyhood he is a devil, in his manhood he is everything from a lizard up; in his duties he is a d—— fool; if he raises a family he is a chump; if he raises a check he is a thief, and then the law raises hell with him; if he is a poor man he is a poor manager, and has no sense; if he is rich he is dishonest, but considered smart; if he is in politics he is a grafter and a crook; if he is out of politics you can't place him as he is "an undesireble citizen;" if he goes to church he is a hypocrite; if he stays away from church he is a sinner; if he donates to foreign missions he does for show; if he doesn't he is stingy and a "tight wad." When he first comes into the world everybody wants to kiss him; before he goes out they all want to kick him. If he dies young there was a great future before him; if he lives to a ripe old age he is in the way, only living to save funeral expenses.

Graft is a nonpartisan game.

Train robbers are never lucky in the long run and the short run is not worth while.

A Los Angeles man claims to have two spare ribs. Mighty handy while pork is so high.

An old Civil War veteran of Waterbury, Conn., claims to have a pain in his wooden leg. No wonder he's kicking.

A disease of the appendix has been discovered. This ought to reconcile those who have already sacrificed theirs on the altar of surgery.

Philadelphia scientists say that the missing link has been discovered in the cultured chimpanzee. As an alternative we suggest the giver of monkey dinners.

"In Cromwell's time," says Dr. Mills, "everybody was drunk once a week." Everybody isn't now, but there are still a few people who beat the old average.

The best preparation for a woman who contemplates marrying a man to reform him is to take in washing for a year. If she likes that sort of thing she can then set the day.

Andrew Carnegie confesses that he has made forty-two men millionaires. The forty-two millionaires are probably convinced that they succeeded not because of Andrew but in spite of him.

Dr. Cook keeps right on not saying a word in his own defense. Perhaps he has adopted Alfred Austin's method of positively refusing to read or listen to a word that his critics have to say about him.

Just as people were learning to live on fruit and vegetables along came the frost, killing the fruit and destroying the vegetables. There's no hope for the consumer. He is sure to get caught either coming or going.

A punishment to fit the crime was that inflicted on a grocer in a Pennsylvania town who was compelled to eat eggs alleged by a customer to be bad. It is safe to say that in future eggs in that town will be sold only in a state of pristine and unimpeachable purity.

Secretary Ballinger has withdrawn from entry 13,500,000 acres of coal lands in Montana, pending an examination as to their value. This will be much more satisfactory to the public than an investigation after the lands had been given away would have been.

Any land is the land of opportunity for the boy who has the real stuff in him. In the new Parliament elected by conservative Great Britain there are more than forty members who had their start in humble homes where the question of daily bread was an ever-present problem.

A Baltimore man wants a divorce because his wife loves him so much that her caresses and words of endearment bore him. It is hoped that women will not generally regard this as a solemn warning. Our opinion of the man is that he doesn't bulk very large as a lord of creation.

Not only improper picture cards, but also those which are simply silly, or which may be offensive to any person or race, are extremely unlikely to reach their destination when sent through the mail. The postal authorities are justified in seizing them. It is announced that hundreds of thousands were destroyed by postmasters last year.

Hazing at West Point dies slowly. The Secretary of War has lately issued some new regulations for the punishment of offenders. Under the old rules the hazers had to be dismissed. Under the new rules a lighter form of punishment is provided for the mild forms of hazing in which there is no intention to injure or to humiliate the cadet. A wholesome provision in the new regulations is that the cadet officers who neglect to report hazing incidents shall be punished as if they were the principals.

Humanitarianism has discovered a new field for its activities, and a society is likely to be formed for the prevention of cruelty to sponges. Most men who know the sponge only as an unsightly mass of damp substance which abounds in barber shops are unaware that the sponge is, or was, an animal that once disported itself in the slimy ooze of the sea bottom. The word "disport" must be used in a restricted sense, for the sponge is rooted like a plant and has no record as a base runner. That is where the cruelty comes in. Horrified observers assure us that the sponge gatherers literally tear up the sponges by the roots and leave them in the sun to die. Untold agonies, they declare, are suffered by the poor sponges as they lie under the torrid sun before they are mercifully released by death and give up the ghost—assuming that a sponge has a ghost to give up. Now it is proposed to step in and stop this barbarous practice. Just what measures are to be taken has not been revealed, but very likely it is intended to chloroform the sponges before tearing them up by the roots. Some may go even further and demand that the suffering sponges be not squeezed too hard at any later period of their existence, nor plunged into water that is likely to scald them or to freeze their toes. Be sure of it, there will be no letting up in the agitation until man's inhumanity to sponges has been completely curbed.

Mark Twain found the light sweet and he was a bearer of light to others. He brought a gospel of sunshine to the world, a message of good cheer, but it would be a grave error to assume that he was merely the careless jester, says the Chicago Record-Herald. Though he lived many years and rejoiced in them all, he had his full share of the days of darkness, and his autobiography shows how deeply he felt them. It gives us glimpses of his heart and soul, of the strength of his affections. The world tried him as it tries others, and yet to the world he always turned a radiant face while he kept his hours of deep dejection to himself, away from even his most intimate friends. So it was that he became the personal friend and helper of millions who responded to him in his own spirit and welcomed him with joy and laughter. While he was thus performing his mission as a writer through the long term of half a century there were books of woe in plenty, books to intensify sorrow and discontent and sickness of heart, outpourings of feebleness and pessimism. The literature of joy and hope was opposed by the literature of despondency. But though this literature of darkness is sometimes supposed to be much more profound than it is, the healing and strengthening work of Mark Twain had not only a quicker reception but a more enduring influence with readers of all classes. Turning from the thought of books to the thought of personal intercourse, this man who gave so freely of his sunshine teaches us a most useful and inspiring lesson, a lesson that may be brought home to the humblest of human beings. The luxury of woe is the costliest of all luxuries, and one who is continually prating of his troubles and pouring forth his sour opinions of the world simply does all that is in him to make the burdens of others harder to bear. But the giver of sunshine bestows blessings wherever he goes. He is always the welcome guest, and we feel the stronger, the braver, the more hopeful for his coming. He may be poor in purse, in position, in fame and still a true benefactor.

MORE TROUBLE AHEAD.

Advent of the Balalaika in England a Menace to Our Peace.

The balalaika impends, a new and most unpleasant rival to the mandolin, the concertina and the banjo. It comes from Russia and it has already taken London by storm. Before long, unless Congress comes quickly to the rescue with drastic legislation, the Baltimore Sun asserts, it will invade our fair republic, filling the air of freedom with its discords and driving all honest music lovers to alcohol and anæsthetics.

The balalaika, it should be explained, is a sort of triangular guitar with three strings. One of those strings is tuned to the A of the treble staff, while both of the others are tuned to E. The thing is operated by plucking the strings with the right hand, the notes being produced by sliding the thumb of the left hand up and down the two E strings. The A string is seldom touched by the left hand. Its deep note drones along through thick and thin with brutal and maddening persistency. It is said to be particularly effective when the melody that is being torn out of the E strings is in the key of A flat.

Fashionable London has taken the balalaika to its heart. Clubs devoted to its study have been formed in Mayfair; Prince Tchagadaeff of St. Petersburg has come over to explain its mysteries; there are even balalaika orchestras, with prima, secunda, alt, bass and contrabass balalaikas. Prof. Clifford Essex, for many years the Græco-Roman and catch-as-catch-can banjo champion of England, has abandoned the banjo and now devotes his talents to the newcomer.

Life, indeed, grows more terrible every day. The balalaika, there is good reason to believe, will arrive in our midst simultaneously with the tail of Halley's comet. Let us prepare to face that double assault with the fortitude of martyrs.

A STORY OF BLUCHER.

The Old General Gave His Son a Lesson in Gaming.

Speaking of military men who were gamblers, Ralph Nevill in "Light Come, Light Go," after noting that Napoleon only played in an amateur way and never seriously and that the Duke of Wellington, while a member of Crockford's famous gambling club, was not particularly fond of play, goes on to relate the following about Blucher:

Another great soldier, on the other hand, repeatedly lost large sums at play. This was Blucher, who was inordinately fond of gambling. Much to his disgust, this passion was inherited by his son, who had often to be rebuked by his father for his visits to the gaming table and was given many a wholesome lecture upon his youth and inexperience and the consequent certainty of loss by coming in contact with older and more practiced gamblers.

One morning, however, young Blucher presented himself before his father and exclaimed, with an air of joy, "Sir, you said I knew nothing of play, but here is proof that you have undervalued my talents," pulling out at the same time a bag of rubles which he had won the preceding night.

"And I said the truth," was the reply. "Sit down here and I'll convince you."

The dice were called for, and in a few minutes old Blucher won all his son's money, whereupon, after pocketing the cash, he rose from the table, observing, "Now you see that I was right when I told you that you would never win."

Too Lavish.

Mrs. Dobbs was trying to find out the likes and dislikes of her new boarder, and all she learned increased her satisfaction.

"Do you want pie for breakfast?" she asked.

"No, thank you," said the new boarder, with a smile. "Pie for breakfast seems a little too much."

"That's just the way I look at it," said Mrs. Dobbs, heartily. "I say pie for dinner is a necessity, and pie for supper gives a kind o' finishing touch to the day; but pie for breakfast is what I call putting on airs."

The Best of It.

AN EVENING PRAYER.

To-night I lay the burden by,
As one who rests beside the road,
And from his weary back unbinds
The whelming load.

I kneel by hidden pools of prayer—
Still waters fraught with healing power;
In God's green pastures I abide
This longed-for hour.

I know that day must bid me face
Courageously my task again,
Serving with steady hand and heart,
My fellow men.

To hold my sorrow in the dark,
To fight my fear, to hide my pain,
And never for one hour to dream
The toil is vain—

This be to-morrow; now, to-night,
Great, pitying Father, I would be Forgiven, uplifted, loved, renewed,
Alone with thee.

Under Difficulties

Haskins never did care for Selmore anyway. At first he had disliked the fellow mildly on general principles, but later he hated Selmore cordially, for a specific reason. Alice Clark was the reason.

When Selmore first saw Alice Clark and fell a victim, Alice was in Haskin's car. Though he did not realize it, Haskins had grown to consider her as belonging to his car quite as much as he did himself. He had glowed with a little proprietary pride when he detected the gleam of interest and admiration in Selmore's eyes, but he was not prepared for what followed.

Selmore had stopped by the car and after being introduced, had cheerfully asked for a lift to his destination and got it, occupying the entire time of transit in conversing with Alice quite as though Haskins were a hired chauffeur.

"THANK THE FATES."

A week later, when Haskins called on Alice and found Selmore there, he learned through the conversation that Selmore had accidentally met her in a candy shop and had promptly asked to call. And he kept on calling.

Haskins tried to convince himself that had it been any one else on earth than Selmore he should not have cared. It was simply, he told himself, because he disliked Selmore so. Alice certainly had a right to have as many callers as she chose, inasmuch as she was not engaged to himself. It was the first time the idea of being engaged to Alice had presented itself to him, and he thought about it a great deal after that, mainly because Selmore persisted in interfering so with his established routine.

He was especially upset one evening when, having made an engagement over the telephone to take Alice automobiling, he called only to find that Selmore had just arrived.

Out of politeness he asked Selmore to come along and to his rage Selmore brazenly accepted. Haskins had quite counted on that ride as a pleasant one, for it was a springlike evening. There was to have been a spin over the boulevards, supper at some quiet place and then home in the moonlight—and who could tell what might happen? Now, here was Selmore, fastened on him for the whole evening.

He tried to make himself believe that Alice had looked a trifle disappointed when Selmore acceped, yet he bitterly felt it could not be so, for Selmore was looking especially handsome in his new spring suit.

The ride progressed in an electric silence on Haskins' part and with fluent conversation on Selmore's. They had the spin and the supper, which was as ashes in Haskins' mouth. Then they started home. On a downtown street corner the machine wheezed and stopped. Haskins took malicious delight in making Selmore descend and help him back it off the car tracks. Then he investigated irritably, for accidents were alien to his car.

As he delved amid the machinery Selmore sat aloft amiably talking to Alice. When at last Haskins had to crawl under the machine and lie flat on his back while he pounded the mechanism he knew how anarchists feel.

"Here, Haskins," Selmore called down finally, "can't you fix it? I should think you'd know your own car better."

"It's getting terribly late," said Alice.

As Haskins plodded away to a telephone he seethed with hatred of Selmore. After wrestling with the phone and finding he could get no help Haskins phoned his home garage and then went back to the two in the car.

"They're are sending a tow after me," he said. "You two can just catch the last suburban train if you hurry. It will relieve my mind if you'll take it, so that I'll know Miss Clark will get safely home."

"Splendid idea!" agreed Selmore, and leaped out. He reached up a helping hand to the girl in the back seat.

Maybe she had had too much of Selmore, maybe she felt sorry for Haskins; maybe——

At any rate she never moved. She regarded Selmore coolly.

"I am not going to desert the car and let Mr. Haskins wait here all alone till goodness knows when!" she said distinctly. "You hurry along and catch the train, Mr. Selmore! I shall wait and be towed in with Mr. Haskins"

So Selmore had to go. As Haskins watched him vanish around the corner he was conscious that a great joy percolated throughout his system. He climbed out of the driver's seat and in beside Alice.

"Thank the fates!" he breathed. "Now maybe while we're waiting I can have a chance to say a few things to you that I've been wanting to say!" Chicago News.

PLANS SCHOOLS FOR SOUTH.

Priest Pledges Himself to Raise $100,000 Yearly to Help Negroes.

A movement has been started by the Catholic church in the United States for the wholesale conversion of negroes and the Rev. John E. Burke, pastor of the only Roman Catholic church for negroes in the city—the Church of St. Benedict the Moor, in West 53d street— is in charge of the work, the New York Evening Telegram says.

It is the plan of Father Burke, who has the active support of all the prelates in the country, to raise $100,000 every year in order to establish new schools, mission chapels, substantial churches and a seminary.

At present there are only four negro priests in missionary work among their own people and their field is confined to the southern states. The intention of the church authorities is to increase this number to hundreds.

Cardinal Gibbons has taken an active interest in the extraordinary campaign and recently he sent a circular letter to the clergy and laity of the country calling attention to the needs of the negro mission movement and urging all to make a special effort to help it along.

Father Burke, in speaking of the needs of the Catholic negro of the country, said:

"We want to tear down the old mission chapels of the south which are dilapidated and build new ones. We want to build substantial churches where they are needed and establish parochial schools for the education of the young. The colored people themselves have not the means to do these things.

"We also want to get more young men of the race to study for the priesthood and seminaries will be necessary. Our idea is to make this not only a campaign of religion, but one of education as well, for we realize that both go hand in hand, and to make colored people of the south good Catholics we will have to educate them."

Most of the funds to be raised by Father Burke will be used for missionary work in the southern states.

It's human nature to believe all the good we hear of ourselves.

Stomach and Nerves.

There is no one living who has not been compelled with more or less frequency to learn by actual experience what is meant by indigestion, the lessons varying from the occasional acute attack, traceable to some unmistakable indiscretion, to the condition of semi-invalidism in which many persons languish, solely by reason of the uncertain action of the digestive processes.

In most cases of indigestion, or dyspepsia, the stomach or the intestines are at fault; but this is by no means always so, and great injustice is done by a failure to recognize that the stomach is not the real culprit, but is only put forward by the rest of the system, as it were, as a spokesman. It faithfully performs its office of lodging a complaint for the general economy, and it is then immediately dosed and redosed, with disappointing results, because the real trouble has not been recognized or attacked.

Everyone has heard that it is best not to eat when extremely fatigued, but this is not because the stomach itself is tired, but because the entire system is temporarily too enfeebled to send out sufficient blood supply to cope with the increased work that digestion entails. The stomach, in order to do its work properly, must be fed with the nervous force that comes from good circulation, and this is impossible if the brain is calling for more than its share. This, again, is the reason why brain workers should not go straight from their work to a heavy meal, but should take a walk or some simple gymnastic exercises first, in order to draw the blood from the over-supplied brain down to the stomach, the turn of which to work has come.

The same reason should forbid immediate hard work of any kind after a meal. Let the stomach have its fair turn.

Much indigestion may be classed as purely nervous in its origin. If the whole nervous system is out of order and on strike, it would be strange if the nerves of the stomach should escape the general calamity. In this type, constant doses of medicine for "stomach trouble" will do little good, but judicious rest and general toning up of the whole nervous system may work a miracle.

That most wretched of all the briefer illnesses known as a "sick headache," in which, as the name implies, the stomach is a co-sufferer with the head, is much more apt to be caused by irritated brain centers than by abuse of the digestive organs, as is proved by the frequency with which an attack is brought on by overuse of the eyes, or any continued strain or excitement.—Youth's Companion.

Vanity Tricked.

During the early excesses of the French revolution a rabble of men and women were rioting in the streets of Paris. Lafayette appeared and ordered a young artillery officer to open fire upon them with two cannon. The officer begged the general to let him try first to persuade them to withdraw.

"It is useless to appeal to their reason," said the general.

"Certainly," answered the officer, "and it is not to their reason, but to their vanity I would appeal."

The officer rode up to the front of the mob, doffed his cocked hat, pointed to the guns and said:

"Gentlemen will have the kindness to retire, for I am ordered to shoot down the rabble."

The street was cleared at once, for none could brook the idea of being classed with the scum of the city.

The Supe.

Two speeches only had the supe—
"Now, caitiff, yield!" the first;
"For Rome and Gracchus!" followed this,
And in these he was rehearsed.

The opening evening came and he Rushed on with the attackers;
"Now, Katie Field!" to his foe he said,
Then yelled: "For Rum and Crackers!"

TARIFF NEVER SLEEPS

We Pay Tribute to It When We Eat, Drink and Dress, and Even When We Shave.

WHAT IT COSTS TO LIVE.

Experience of Payne's Tariff-Erected Temple Shows It Needs Another Investigation.

The man-who-wants-to-know-what-the-tariff-costs him - every - day-of-his-life has a chance to do some more figuring, now that the Payne law is in full swing and the congressional elections are coming on. The tariff works while a man sleeps, but perhaps it is enough to see what it does to him during his waking hours, from the time he gets out of bed in the morning until he strikes the couch again at night—and even these calculations fail to take in the bed.

Arising and donning an imported bath robe which pays a duty of 44 cents a pound and 60 per cent ad valorem, our friend cleans his teeth with a 40 per cent toothbrush, using tooth powder, paste or soap taxed at 60 cents a pound, with 50 per cent ad valorem thrown in for good measure, a correspondent of the Boston Transcript says. He must smooth his hair anyway, even if it takes a 40 per cent hairbrush to do it, and if he shaves, with his 40 per cent shaving brush, he may soothe the irritated skin with bay rum if some one has paid $1.75 a gallon at the custom house to get it into the country. If he is exquisite enough to use a cosmetic, he will find this luxury protected at the same rate as the tooth paste, while the towels on which he dries his hands may have brought the government a revenue of 1¾ cents a square yard plus 30 per cent of the value.

If our hero dresses like other men, he will first proceed to array himself in his humble underwear—$2.25 per dozen and 35 per cent if cotton and 44 cents a pound and 60 per cent if woolen. His stockings may come in at $2 a dozen pairs and 15 per cent, his linen shirt at 60 per cent, his collar at 40 cents a dozen and 20 per cent and his cuffs at the same paternal rates. A pair of 50 per cent cuff buttons, a 60 per cent silk necktie and a suit of woolen clothes, with 60 to 90 per cent of tariff burden will equip him for the street, with the exception of a 15 per cent pair of shoes and a 50 per cent linen handkerchief. If he brushes his clothes thus early with an imported article, he must pay the government 40 per cent of its cost for the privilege.

Tariff on the Breakfast.

The breakfast table now looks inviting, though perhaps it would not if he stopped to figure just what it would cost to equip it under the Payne law. He could not dodge the 1¾ cents a yard and 30 per cent additional on his linen tablecloth or his napkins, for those articles are little if at all made in the United States. He might save 60 per cent by using American chinaware and glassware or 45 per cent if he would buy his silverware in this country, but his pepper must cost him 3 cents a pound more than it is worth to provide revenue, and his sugar pays a duty of nearly 2 cents a pound. With the vinegar in its shining little jar at 7½ cents a gallon, surrounding 40 per cent pickles, a little 6 cent butter on his plate, or a pitcher of 4 cent maple sirup in place of it, our hero may put in his coffee cream taxed 5 cents a gallon, or may drink instead cocoa or chocolate which has paid 50 per cent duty. The government protects the cornmeal of which his bread is made at 40 cents a hundred pounds, although the United States raises more corn than most of the rest of the world and exports it everywhere; and if our hero prefers wheat bread he may know that it could not be made from the superior hard wheat of Canada without paying 25 cents a bushel on the wheat, or 25 per cent on the flour. If the hungry statistician preferred imported biscuits he would hand the government 20 per cent of their value before eating them. If he would have Canadian instead of Aroostook potatoes—and Maine potatoes are the best in the world and protect themselves against foreign potatoes duty paid—he would be soothed with the knowledge that an all-wise government was pocketing 25 cents on every bushel he consumes. In fact, our hero would learn by this time that the only free articles he had encountered thus far were tea and coffee, and Mr. Payne wanted very much to tax coffee, while some of the Senators would have taxed tea 10 cents a pound had they not feared a popular uprising.

The foregoing would make a rather limited breakfast, but it is possible to lay out a tariff bill of fare for breakfast—or luncheon, if you choose to call it that—which has its interesting features, without beginning to exhaust the list of dutiable foodstuffs to be found on the table of the most humble American. Here is a list of five courses, with their tariff equivalents, which may be something of an eye-opener to men and women who think, rightly or wrongly, that the protective tariff has materially increased the cost of living:

FISH.
Halibut, fresh (per lb.)	1c
Halibut, salted, pickled or smoked (per lb.)	¾c
Halibut, canned (ad valorem)	30%
HAM AND EGGS.
Ham (per lb.)	4c
Eggs (per dozen)	5c
Lard (per lb.)	1½c
MEAT.
Beef, fresh (per lb.)	1½c
Beef, prepared or preserved (ad valorem)	25%
BAKED BEANS.
Beans (per bu.)	45c
Pork, salted or fresh (ad valorem)	25%
Molasses (per gallon)	3c
CHICKEN.
Chicken (per lb.)	5c
FRUIT.
Apples (per bu.)	25c
Apples, canned (per lb.)	2c
Peaches (per bu.)	25c
Pears (per bu.)	25c
Plums (per bu.)	25c
Grapes (per cubic foot)	25c

It is not to be inferred from the foregoing list of articles and prices that the cost of all is raised by the tariff or that the duty invariably would be added to the American market price if the articles were imported. As a matter of fact, the tariff does not operate at all on many of these articles, the prices of which are fixed by other influences. But the principle of tariff taxation applies to every article on the list and the duties are as heavy and the purpose of levying them as protective as if the United States were a new country and had reason to fear competition in every one.

Taft as Mr. Fearing.

What's the matter with Taft? This is, after all, the question of immediate interest in national politics. The autumnal elections are six months away—a whole half year. Not only is Congress in session, but legislation unconnected with the issues between the parties and of great importance to the country appears hopelessly becalmed. The Ship of State hangs in stays, and the skipper doesn't know exactly what to do.

Theodore Roosevelt's government was largely personal. He antagonized the old organized leadership of Senate and House; he shook its power, but organized nothing to take its place. The Congressional situation is chaotic in consequence. It is such an hour as naturally causes the country to turn to the Executive—not for a draft of laws which Congress should pass, but for fearless comment upon the relation between political ways and means and national ends, for such emphasis upon a few salient points as shall give a public opinion now confused and bewildered definite set and direction.

The people of the United States believe in President Taft's sincerity and honesty. They would rally to his support if he would make an appeal which impressed them as simple and clean cut. Why doesn't he do it? Why does he allow the ship to pound upon the shoal without a word to the crew?

In Bunyan's immortal allegory there is a man named Mr. Fearing. He is a man of pure heart and clear mind; his intentions are the best. But he keeps to the bear; he has in him nothing of the stuff of leadership; he reaches the Celestial City simply because the body of pilgrims carries him along; he follows because Mr. Greatheart leads the way.

President Taft is Mr. Fearing. He is a man of clear mind and pure thought; his destination is right; he is patriotic. But in a national crisis he lacks both vision and courage.

We believe that he lacks vision because he lacks courage. If he dared more he would understand more. Savonarola used to say that "a man knows as much as he does." The work of the world is done on partial knowledge by men who dare the consequences of their own ignorance.

Anything would be better for the country than the course Mr. Taft is pursuing. The conflict between the insurgents and the standpat forces is irrepressible, and must be fought to an outcome, but the nearest approach Mr. Taft made to expression was in the possible innuendo conveyed when he referred to "Democrats and Republicans—Republicans and Insurgents."

The man in the street wants to know where to count the President. The railroad bill is being torn to pieces by Congress. Wednesday's audiences would have liked to know how its inspirer felt about it. Silence is not only neutral; it is positively harmful. A tremendous potential force for the direction of public opinion was in those crowds; why did not the President try to wield and direct it? Is he ashamed of his cause? Has he lost confidence in his power to persuade? Has he ceased to believe that the people are worth reasoning with?

Sometimes we have suspected that Mr. Taft might be another General Thomas, who never fought greatly until pressed to the last extremity. If this be true, the supreme effort is due now.—St. Louis Republic.

Tariff and Cost of Living.

It is comparatively easy to gather from the statistics the added cost of foreign goods from tariff taxation that goes as revenue into the federal treasury. This money is used to defray the cost of government. It is indirectly collected from the ultimate consumer.

But there is no means of getting at the actual sum of money paid by consumers for goods on which the tariff levies prohibitory duties. On such goods the protected monopolies and combination levy taxes, every dollar of which goes into their own pockets. Their own greed is their only limit. Some slight measure of the extent of the tax may be gathered from the knowledge of the excessive profits and the vast wealth accumulated by favored interests. Nothing enters so heavily into the cost of living as this merciless drain on the pockets of the mass. But no government inquiry will draw forth the facts or set forth the remedy. What the government gets is duly accounted for. What the people pay to their legitimate plunderers is a matter of guess.—Philadelphia Record.

Trusts as Economists.

Defenders of trusts are fond of prating about the marvelous economics effected by great organizations that control so many lines of trade. There is some truth in their statements, but much that has no foundation.

In every commercial organization there is a point beyond which additional capital can not be employed with profit. Is it reasonable to believe that more than $50,000,000 is ever invested in any single industrial concern for the purpose of economical production? Or is it not rather ground for suspicion that the added capital is to be devoted to suppressing competition instead of to perfecting processes or reducing operating costs?

There may be a few exceptions to this rule, but they are few, indeed. There seems to be no other way of approximating the point at which accumulation of property becomes dangerous to the community, and improper, a limit which must be definitely fixed if a legal maximum is ever established.

A Fatal Temptation

CHAPTER III.

Five hours later Laurence was standing under the light of the stars, like one bewildered. Until that moment he had not realized what he had done. He had spent the doctor's money, and had no possible means of replacing it—the bare fact in all its horror was before him now. He who had never in his whole life wronged any one, who had never touched one penny piece that was not his own, had stolen $250! He had been so excited, so carried away, so desperate, so reckless, that he had forgotten everything; and now he stood there under the light of the stars, branded "thief."

He never knew how he reached home; he remembered that, as he went up the broad staircase, he met Miss Thornton, who looked up in wonder at his wild, white face.

"You are ill, Mr. Blantire!" she said.

"No," he replied, "I am only tired;" but the voice that spoke was not like his own, it sounded like nothing human; and he passed on to the terrible solitude of his own room.

No sleep came that night to the weary eyes of Laurence Blantire. Now that the mad excitement was ended, and the ugly, horrible truth lay before him, he was at a loss how to proceed. If, when the doctor had placed that $250 in his hands, any one had even hinted that he could misapply or use for his own purpose one penny of it, he would have been most indignant; he could with difficulty realize even now how it happened that he had yielded so suddenly to this most terrible temptation. It seemed to him like some fearful dream.

"Mr. Blantire is ill, I am sure, Miss Thornton observed, the next morning, to Marion, with some anxiety. "His face looks quite haggard."

"Being a doctor," Miss Leigh replied, coolly, "he must know quite well what to prescribe for himself." What mattered the health or the look of her father's assistant to her?

As the hours of the long, terrible day wore on, wild thoughts came to Laurence Blantire. Death in any shape would be easier than to face disgrace and ruin.

He was crossing the road that led to the beach when he heard the clock strike four; the sound of each stroke falls upon his heart like a death-knell. The bank closed at four, and tomorrow Dr. Leigh would be home again.

"Marion," said Miss Thornton, the same evening, "have you noticed anything strange in Mr. Blantire?"

"I am not in the habit of taking any interest in my father's assistant," was the haughty reply.

"I feel quite concerned about him," continued Miss Thornton, meditatively. "He has the appearance of one who is suffering deeply from some cause, mental or physical, and I am inclined think the latter. I do not think he went to bed at all last night, for I awoke several times, and heard him pacing his room restlessly."

In his terrible despair Laurence had made up his mind to destroy himself, and he sat silently meditating in what manner he should accomplish his object. It would be easy enough to take a small dose of prussic acid, and he would be dead in a few seconds; yet he turned with a faint shudder from that picture. He would not be poisoned like a rat in a hole; he would die where the fresh breezes blew upon him.

He took up a revolver—one the doctor always kept loaded in the house—and scanned it curiously. Yes; he would walk far out to the sands, where the rocks raised their jagged heads at low tide; he would use the revolver there, and the waves would carry his body out to sea. A thousand times better this than he should sleep in a dishonored grave. His letter to the doctor lay upon the table; he put the revolver in his pocket, and, without one backward look, opened the door of his room and passed out.

CHAPTER IV.

Marion Leigh, while trying to forget Miss Thornton's words and give her undivided attention to her book, was startled by hearing some one descend the staircase—some one who evidently did not wish to be heard, for the steps were slow and hushed. Glancing at the clock on the mantelpiece, she saw that the hands pointed to eleven, and wondered a little who could be going out at this hour, unless indeed some one were ill, and the young doctor had been summoned. She hastily laid down her book, and went into the hall. There she encountered Laurence Blantire, and was at once struck by the ghastly pallor of his face and the wild despair in his eyes.

"What is the matter?" she cried, involuntarily.

He tried to pass her with a bow, for he dared not trust himself to speak.

Marion, feeling vaguely alarmed at his wild appearance, and recollecting, perhaps, Miss Thornton's words, hastily interposed between him and the door, thus forming a barrier to his egress. Then, for the first time in her life, Marion Leigh laid her hand on Laurence's arm, and looked with anxious, kindly eyes into his face.

"Trust me," she said gently. "I see there is something wrong. Where are you going, Mr. Blantire?"

"I am going," he returned, slowly, "to put an end to my wretched existence."

If she felt any fear, she did not show it; at that moment she rose superior to herself.

"No man should take his life; it is not his own to do as he pleases with," she said, earnestly.

"Mine is utterly valueless!" he cried, despairingly.

"Come with me," she urged. "I will not keep you long."

He did not try to resist her, but allowed her to lead him back to the drawing-room where she had been sitting. Mechanically he took the chair she pushed toward him.

"Now, will you tell me what your trouble is?" Miss Leigh asked, gently. "I am sorry for you. I want to help you, and will help you if I can."

And then he told her his story in a low, shamed voice—told her of the doctor's warning, of his neglect of that warning, of his temptation, and his fall.

"You have committed a great wrong," she said, when he ceased speaking; "but it was not like a premeditated evil. I can quite understand the suddenness of the temptation, and you yielded to it in a reckless moment." She was silent for some minutes, her gaze bent pityingly on the handsome head bent in abject sorrow and shame; then she went on, "After all, I see no reason for despair. I think you may retrieve the past—live it down. In your place, I should try to do so."

"I cannot retrieve the past," he said. "I cannot replace the money; the doctor cannot be kept in ignorance of my conduct, and you understand him well enough to know that he will have no pity on me."

"It seems to me a sad thing for a life like yours to be wrecked for the sake of a paltry $250, and I think I see my way to getting it for you. I have saved $200 of my own out of what my father allows me for myself, and I can borrow $50 from Miss Thornton, which will make up the sum you require."

"But how—how," he stammered, "shall I repay you?"

"You will earn money some of these days," she replied; "you can pay me then."

"You have saved me!" he cried, with a sudden burst of relief and gratitude, "you have saved me from death. Henceforth my life is yours, to do with as you will."

"Let us hope I shall never put your gratitude to so severe a test," she returned lightly; "but, if ever I need your help, I shall ask it. And now," she added, "go to your room, and try to sleep. You shall have the money in the morning; and promise me that you will let this be a lesson to you."

CHAPTER V.

Laurence Blantire looked very much ashamed, and his manner was nervous and constrained when he met Miss Leigh on the following morning. She, on the controry, was as calm as though nothing unusual had passed between them. As a proof of her sympathy and friendliness, however, she held out her hand to him—an unusual circumstance with her.

"We must proceed in a business-like fashion," she said then. "I have the money—$200 of it is my own, and with the $50 borrowed from Miss Thornton, will make up the sum you require. I should advise you to pay it into the bank at once, before my father comes home. There is no need to thank me, I am pleased to help you; but, to show that I consider it a business transaction, I shall ask you to sign this receipt for the $250."

Perhaps, if he could have foreseen the uses to which this document would be put, he would have hesitated to do as Marion requested; as it was, no thought of the future entered his mind. He signed the receipt and then took up the bank-notes she held out.

He would have expressed his gratitude then; but Miss Leigh cut short his broken sentences by reminding him that there was no time to lose; so he was fain to take his departure. He hurried at once to the bank, and if the kindly manager wondered why the young doctor looked so pale, and his manner was so strange, he made no remark upon it.

Laurence soon told his errand, and paid in the $250 to the doctor's account. Then he walked slowly home, his heart filled with sincere repentance and the resolution to do better. He did not forget, for one moment, the shame of his crime; the remembrance of it would go with him to the grave; but he was freed from a great peril, and for the time he thought most of his freedom.

When Dr. Leigh returned and found all things well, he was pleased with Laurence's attention to the patients, his industry, and skill; he praised him as the grim old doctor seldom praised any one.

"I shall not hesitate about taking a week's holiday now," he said.

The young man's heart beat high with gratitude. If it had not been for Marion, how different and how terrible this meeting would have been!

The same evening the doctor inquired whether Laurence had paid the money he had left him into the bank, as he had directed him to do. The young man answered in the affirmative, and then the subject was dropped.

One thing struck Dr. Leigh after his return trip to London, and that was that Laurence Blantire seemed suddenly to have become quite devoted to him. He slaved rather than worked; he saved the doctor all possible trouble. No son of his own could have studied his interests more. Dr. Leigh augured well from it. The young man would rise in his profession some day, he thought, and do credit to his teaching. He was pleased, too, that Laurence had given up his former companions.

Just one week after that fatal game which had cost Laurence so dearly, he had met Captain Walsh, who hailed him with glee.

"Come to my place," he urged, "and try your luck again." But Laurence shook his head.

"A burned child dreads the fire," he replied.

"You don't say you were scorched?" rejoined the captain.

"So effectually as to cured for the remainder of my days," Laurence said; and without any further words, passed on.

"I might possibly have made a few dollars more out of him," soliloquized the captain. "It is strange that he should suddenly evince such a dislike for play. I'm afraid we frightened him last time."

Laurence Blantire set himself to work with renewed energy. Every penny he was able to save was always scrupulously handed over to Miss Leigh. He determined to deny himself every luxury and pleasure until he had paid this just and urgent debt.

One morning Dr. Leigh sat in the breakfast-room, with a newspaper unfolded before him. Marion still lingered behind the urn, while Laurence, who had finished breakfast, was looking over some notes for the doctor.

Suddenly Dr. Leigh raised his head with a start.

"This must refer to you, Laurence," he said. "Listen:

"'Two hundred and fifty dollars reward offered to any one who can give reliable information as to the marriage of Sylvia Burton Carr with the late John Blantire, surgeon. Letters to be addressed to Messrs. North & Son, Solicitors,'" and an address followed.

"Yes, it must refer to me, or, to speak more correctly, to my parents," Laurence replied. "My mother's name was Sylvia Burton Carr."

Marion looked up, keenly interested, and the doctor cried:

"I thought so. You should write to those lawyers at once, Laurence. Rely upon it, the advertisement has something to do with you personally."

GOES BEFORE THE KING.

Big Policeman Rides a Big Horse and Delights the Populace.

British crowds delight in processions of public shows of any kind. They invest prominent figures in such street ceremonies with a glory all their own. Thus Wright, the lord mayor's fat coachman, and Police Sergeant A 1, who rides immediately before the king's carriage, are among the most popular men in London, an exchange says.

Wright pleases the multitude because he is fat, for the ill-fed millions of London always hail with delight the man of portly frame and rubicund visage. Such a man represents a whole year's array of Mansion house banquets to the onlookers on the sidewalk.

Police Sergeant A 1 is less a laughing matter. His presence inspires awe among a people saturated with class differences and the majesty of an unapproachable court.

To ride, as this police sergeant does, jauntily before the entire royal family, is a unique privilege. The sergeant carries it off lightly, too, and, ever on the watch, he proceeds ahead of his ruler, clearing the path, directing the route to be taken, indicating to the street police weak points in the line of protection, detected by his keen, experienced eye.

He is a first-class officer, as one can judge by his badge of A 1, which by a curious coincidence, represents the divisional police district to which he is attached and the number assigned to him on the roll there.

Nearly all the royalties of Europe have been piloted through the London streets by Police Sergeant A 1, and in no city of Europe has there been such complete immunity from attacks by anarchists or other foes of crowned heads.

It is not a wise thing for anybody to attempt to cross the path of Police Sergeant A 1 and try to reach the king's carriage. With a bound the well-trained mount of the soldier-policeman is alongside the venturesome pedestrian and the rider has him in a grasp of iron. In a trice the unwary one is handcuffed and forced into a trot. He becomes what is known as a stirrup-prisoner, an undignified figure for holiday crowds to laugh at. The experience of such a luckless person is a sorry one.

Within call of Police Sergeant A 1 are hidden groups of police, mounted and on foot, on all public occasions. England, by reason of the freedom of opinion enjoyed within its borders, is free from street scuffles on the occasion of royal processions, but precautionary measures are always taken. From his lofty seat the stalwart officer scans the crowd as he moves along. An expert in judging the situation, he knows just where to have the crowd pushed back a bit more and where all is well. Many times King Edward has complimented him on the zealous way he has discharged his responsible duties as "the man who goes before the king."

"Apaches" of Paris.

The re-establishment of the death penalty has produced no sensible diminution in the total of crimes of murder, and the "Apaches" of Paris and their fellows and imitators in the provinces are growing in numbers and audacity, an exchange says. At the present time one of the effects of the floods has been to bring the "Apaches" like rats on the boulevards from their usual haunts in the suburbs. They assemble on the principal boulevards in front of the great restaurants and theaters, and, often in connivance with the chauffeurs and the drivers, force the public to submit to paying, first, a tip to two or three of themselves, with the alternative of vile abuse or blows, and, second, of a double fee to the drivers. As it has invariably rained heavily at midnight for the last three weeks, the scenes at night on the exit from the theaters have been a disgrace to any civilized city. The newspapers are filed with complaints, but up to the present no remedy has been attempted, and it would require treble the available force of police to put down this nuisance—which is not altogether unknown in London.

Ways of Women

Wives and the Clubs.

A great many folk think that after marriage a man should not go to his club in the evening. The sensible girl who wants to be happily married will never seek to curtail her husband's liberty. It stands to reason that a man likes men's society occasionally, even though he is devoted to his wife.

He needs a change of scene, change of ideas and a different outlook on life to make him doubly pleased with his home surroundings. An evening at the club is the best thing in the world to keep things bright at home, and when a wife interferes with her husband's liberty she shows she does not trust him. Loss of trust means all sorts of trouble, and is often the precursor of the ominous "rift within the lute."

Not the Usual Romance.

Recently one of our most fastidious young men, says the Muscotah Recorder, bought a pair of overalls and found in them the name of the sewing girl who made them.

He very promptly wrote her a letter with all the effusiveness necessary in such a case, and in due time received a reply, which, however, was void of the romance usual in such cases. Here it is: "I am a working girl, it is true, but I make a good living and I do not care to support a husband, as I would do if I married some silly noodle who gets mashed on a girl he never saw. Permit me to say that I do not know how my card got in that pair of overalls, and that when I do marry, if ever, it will be some fellow who can afford something better than a 47-cent pair of breeches."

Charming Summer Hat.

Peach basket hats were too extreme to last, and the inverted flower pot has come to take its place. This season the little frill of lace at the brim edge, the broad band of soft ribbon over which is festooned the popular tiny roses, and the fluffy aigret, combine to make this hat a dainty and becoming creation.

Epigrams About Women.

Countess Vera de Tallyrand, of Paris, has just written for private circulation a little volume of aphorisms on life and love entitled, "Thoughts and Remembrances." Here is advice to men, couched in epigrams on women:

To please women one must adhere to only one.

Woman is like the dew. It is a tear of dawn, a fall of pure alabaster, it is a pearl; if it fall to earth it is mud.

When woman loves she pardons even crime; when she ceases to love she does not forgive even virtue.

Of her own sex the countess remarks:

The coquette mistakes her desire to please for her need to love.

The first thing that women know is that they are beautiful; the last thing they realize is that they are old.

A woman is like an army; she is irretrievably lost if she has no reserve.

Women are always more or less children. Sentiment leads them by the nose and reasoning irritates them.

Marriage Superstitions.

"Blessed is the bride that the sun shines on."

A bride should use no pins in her wedding clothes, and she should avoid looking in the glass when she is completely dressed for church.

The wedding ring should not be tried on before the service, and to take it off afterward is unlucky.

"If you marry in Lent you will live to repent." May is an unlucky month for weddings, and June and October are specially lucky.

It is an old Yorkshire custom to pour hot water over the doorstep after the happy couple have departed, in order to keep the threshold warm for another bride.

Growing Dahlias.

The finest dahlias I ever saw were grown by the individual feeding method. When they were planted a tin can containing good barnyard manure and having a nail hole in the side near the bottom, was set in the earth close to each hill, and flush with the top of the soil. When the plants began to grow this can was filled with water every day, and the water seeping through the manure fed, as well as moistened, the roots of the plant right where it was most needed. Try this method if you wish fine dahlias.—The Housekeeper.

Feminine Rights Upheld.

The Supreme Court of Georgia recently held that woman has an inalienable right to change her mind. The decision was in a suit brought by lawyers against A. J. Chastain to force him to pay for work done for his wife in helping her sue for divorce from him. After suit was brought Mrs. Chastain decided to return to her husband. The latter refused to pay the fees. The Supreme Court holds that in such a case, if the wife changes her mind and notifies her counsel to withdraw the suit, the wife's counsel cannot thereafter press the case over the wife's protest by having service of the petition perfected and obtaining a judgment for fees. A woman, says the court in conclusion, has an inalienable right to change her mind.

Fads and Fancies in Dress

A number of smart shoulder capes are being shown.

Favored styles in gowns are the tunic and overdress types.

Veiled effects upon costumes are a feature of Parisian importations.

Lingerie dresses in peasant blouse style will be much seen this summer.

New models in suits show the belted waist line and the peasant sleeve.

The use of fancy waistcoats in short coats increases in popularity in Paris.

Walking dresses of blue serge are prominent. Shepherd's checks are good, also hairline mohairs.

Black, emerald green, kingfisher blue or wine-red velvet bows worn at the neck are still popular, especially when worn with a turnover collar and lace or net stock.

Care of the Shoes.

During the spring months, when showers are frequent, a good plan is to treat the soles of the shoes to two or three coats of varnish, allowing each to dry before applying the next. The uppers may be rubbed with castor oil as a means of resistance to the dampness, though some persons claim a cut lemon rubbed into the surface of the leathers (uppers) is better. Certainly there would be no fear of getting the edge of the skirt oily if the lemon were used. Damp shoes should always be dried slowly to prevent shrinkage.

How to Eat.

Here are Horace Fletcher's rules for eating, which are given to all patients of the Harvard Dental School Dispensary:

Eat only in response to actual appetite, which will be satisfied with plain bread and butter.

Chew all solid food until it is liquid and practically swallows itself. Sip and taste all liquids that have taste, such as soup and lemonade. Water has no taste, and can be swallowed immediately.

Some Pointers.

Most housekeepers are agreed that better work can be accomplished by using a heavy iron than a light one.

When boiling fresh potatoes try putting a sprig of mint in the water to give a delicious flavor to the vegetables.

Cream to be whipped must be one day old. No sugar should be added either before or after it is beaten. The sweetening should be in the pudding or cake with which it is served.

Putting on Airs.

Smythe was poor ten years ago,
His name then was plain Smith.
Brown got rich and tacked an "e"
Unto his name forthwith.

Smythe's two daughters, Lil and Grace,
Have grown up Grayce and Lyll;
Browne's two boys, though, Will and Dick,
Thank heaven, aren't Dycke and Wyll!

Everyday Living.

Only the few live in a rational fashion, making life a sensible mixture of work, rest and play, and doing each under proper conditions. Fresh air, sunshine, nourishing food and sensible clothing are the essentials of good health, and when they are duly considered, life is a pleasant thing. We can not avert accidents, which are not of our own making; we can not always avoid the mistakes of others. There is misfortune and sorrow to be reckoned with, but anticipating them or taking them too much to heart is distinctly wrong.

Seamless Shoulders.

Seamless shoulders distinguish a great many of the new negligees, and at once commend them to the woman who makes such robes for herself, as they do not require the perfect shaping of the garment between the throat and the elbow. Some of the most artistically draped negligees consist of single or double widths of material crossing the shoulders and joined from the center of the back to the front, the V at the nape of the neck being filled in with a triangle of embroidery or lace and the sides below the arms supplemented with sharply pointed gores running from the hem to the inner seam of the cut-in-one sleeves.

Dainty Low Cut Bodice.

Accompanying a perfectly plain skirt of gray silk poplin was a dainty bodice of chiffon cloth, in self tone, such as the sketch illustrates. A handsome jet ornament is placed just above girdle and jet trimming is used for small V in front and for bands down each side, these bordered with narrow black velvet ribbon. Same treatment is given sleeve bands, which have as a finish a frill of Irish lace.

Fancy Net Turbans.

The flowered turban has given way to a large one made of coarse fancy net. The same kind is used that we have had for gown drapery during the winter. Brilliant colors are seen, such as purple, the new vivid dark blue, black, white with a black spot and chantecler red. The turbans are an artistic mass of this net twisted into puffs and loops and ends. The latter are wired in order to keep their shape and give the turban character.

When Silk Is Wrinkled.

Crushed silk may be smoothed out and restored to something like its original freshness by being sponged with gum arabic water. Sponge on the right side of the silk, and when almost dry iron it on the reverse side. Do not use a really hot iron, or you will make the silk stiff and papery.

Using Influence.

"He seems to be an up-to-date politician."

"I should say so. Before proposing to Miss Specie he got up a petition with 2,000 signatures urging her to accept him."—Life.

Sorry He Spoke.

Hub—A penny for your thoughts, dear.

BLACK SATIN DINNER GOWN.

Soft black satin is a suitable material for a gown to be patterned after this model. The trained skirt is draped near foot with black velvet ribbon, which joins on left side under a large bow; otherwise the skirt is plain. There is a tunic of dotted net cut away in front and forming points on each side, where there is an inset of jet trimming matching that bordering decollete neck and sleeve bands. Latter are finished with a frill of black lace. Black velvet ribbon is used for shoulder straps and on left side continues down and edges tunic all around.

INTIMATE STORY OF FORTY-NINTH INDIANA

Col. Keigwin Puts History of Popular Regiment Into Manuscript for Preservation.

IN CAMP AND ON THE MARCH.

Liquid Courage in Face of Advance of Morgan's Raiders Near Jeffersonville.

Survivors of the Forty-ninth Indiana Infantry are much interested in a history of the regiment, and its services in the War of the Rebellion, which has been put in manuscript form by Colonel James Keigwin, who succeeded John W. Ray as colonel, the latter resigning in June, 1862, and Keigwin continuing colonel till the close of the war. In his reminiscent talk Colonel Keigwin has much to say of the part which Jeffersonville played in the great contest, and of early military life in Clark county, and he weaves in a number of amusing incidents, not only bearing directly on regimental experiences, but along other lines. For instance, when the draft was ordered in Clark county, Dr. William F. Collum was examining surgeon to whom every man wanting exemption from military duty was compelled to report. Dr. Collum kept a dairy of his examinations, and it is of record in the department at Washington, that, as Keigwin says, "there were more able-bodied, unsound men under 45 years of age than can now be found on the same number of square miles on the face of the globe," and if "one should search the catalogue of all diseases to which the human race is heir, they will be found duplicated in that record."

Prohibitionists Imbibed Courage.

When the Morgan raid struck Indiana every able-bodied man in Jeffersonville was ordered out, formed in companies, provided with arms and equipments, and set to guard the pike leading from Charlestown, over which Morgan was supposed to be marching. Among them were two staid citizens, S. B. Diffendeffer and Isaac Gaither. The latter was a pronounced prohibitionist and an earnest Methodist. Diffendeffer had filled his canteen with something more substantial than water and he was taking a good hearty pull at the contents when he discovered that Gaither was looking at him. Common courtesy demanded that Gaither should be invited to join, and to Diffendeffer's intense surprise the invitation was accepted with alacrity. After taking a long and strong pull at the canteen Gaither's courage began to be demonstrative, and he raised his gun to an aim, pointed steadily down the Charlestown pike, and shouted in stentorian tones, "John Morgan, if you are ever coming, come right now!" Morgan failed to report.

After service in West Virginia the regiment was transferred to the west, and the steamer bearing the "boys" anchored in front of Jeffersonville for the night, with instructions from the Secretary of War that no furloughs should be issued. Many of them were in sight of their homes, and, as a result, they stole overboard, spending the night in "Old Jeff," and reporting the next morning, while the steamer was passing through the canal at the falls. Lieutenant Thomas Barr, of Company B, was officer of the guard, and at the canal many relatives and friends came to visit their loved ones, who were barred from leave of absence. Among them was Mrs. William Smith, with an infant in her arms, and as Lieutenant Barr was assisting her on the steamer he let go his grip of the infant, and it fell into the water between the boat and the canal. Without a second's hesitation Barr sprang to the rescue, without even throwing aside his sword. He saved the child, but at great risk of his life. When the regiment went into action some months later at Chickasaw Bluffs, the father of the little one was killed.

Marriage as Military Necessity.

When the steamer bearing the Forty-ninth infantry was steaming down the river Colonel Keigwin discovered that two young women had disobeyed the order to leave the boat at New Almany, and they explained that their sweethearts were members of the regiment, and they had concluded to remain aboard till Memphis was reached, when they would be married. Keigwin remonstrated, but in vain. The young women were determined. After thinking over the matter and finding it imposible to secure marriage license, and further encouraged by the fact that all laws at that time were in a chaotic condition as to enforcement, he concluded to issue an order directing the chaplain to marry the two couples, "on the ground of military necessity," and the chaplain pronounced the ceremony after first securing a copy of the order, so as to protect himself, he said, in case his conference called for a bill of particulars. The young wives then remained aboard till Memphis was reached.

Eighteen months after this wedding on board the steamer, by which time the husbands and their regiment had wandered into Texas, one of the men received a letter from his young wife, saying that after thinking the matter over she had concluded the marriage on the steamer was illegal, and as she had found a man she liked better she had married him. Still later the other wife concluded that she had not been legally married, and she found another life companion. This impressed Colonel Keigwin that marriage as a military necessity, had its disadvantages, although he always did think that the union would have "stuck" had it been appealed to the courts.

Novel Excuse Accepted.

The Forty-ninth infantry served all through the central southern states, participating in many campaigns and in a number of hard-fought battles and Col. Keigwin recalls that at the time of the first "long roll" a man in the first file of "fours" in Company A was under the impression that a regiment went into a fight "endways," and as the front files fell the others closed up till all were killed or wounded, or the enemy was driven off the field. At this particular time this particular soldier turned up missing, but he was found at the rear of the last company, where he explained that he was afraid that the enemy "might tackle us at t'other end," and so he got back there in order to be in at the death. The excuse was so novel that it was accepted.

When the regiment was in rendezvous at Jeffersonville the recruits were advised to report in their cast-off clothing, so that when they drew uniforms they would not feel impelled to send the cast-off raiment home. Many of the recruits accepted this admonition almost literally, and when they reported in camp they discounted a Falstaff crew in motley array. The young women of Jeffersonville vied with each other in pleasant attentions to the officers of the regiment, and one of the famous debutantes of the city invited them to what nowadays is called a "function." The captain of one of the companies thought the invitation included himself and command, and he marched his entire company, clothed as they were in rag-tag garments, to this reception, and before they left not a crumb of refreshments remained.

Gambling Became Epidemic.

While the regiment was participating in the western Louisiana campaign, it remained for several weeks along the Bayou Tesch with nothing to do. Gambling became epidemic, officers and men were alike affected, and horse racing, cock fighting, card playing, "chuck-a-luck" and kindred games ran riot. The situation became so bad that Col. Tom Bennett of the Sixty-ninth Indiana infantry, and Col. Keigwin called on General Ord, commanding the corps, and suggested that an order should be issued discountenancing all forms of gambling. The order was issued and apparently obeyed. A few days afterward, while Bennett and Keigwin were walking together, they observed a number of soldiers under the shade of a tree, deeply interested in something or other, and the officers drew near to ascertain if the order against gambling was being violated.

"Are you boys playing chuck?" queried Bennett.

One of them replied: "You stopped the only amusement we had, but now we have found a new game not covered by the order."

"What is it?" asked Keigwin.

"We are running grayback races."

"That's a new one on me," quickly rejoined Bennett. "I want to know something about it."

Then a way was opened for Bennett and Keigwin to step inside the ring, where they found a cracker box on end, on which was a circular piece of white paper, about ten inches in diameter, fastened by a pin in the center. Each man placed a "shinplaster" in the pool, after which the boys hunted inside their shirts for the gamest grayback that could be found, holding the same over the pin in the center and letting the insect fall when the word "go" was heard. The first grayback off the paper won the pool.

Had Him in Training.

Keigwin and Bennett were so taken with the novelty of the game that Bennett accepted Keigwin's challenge to pit a Forty-ninth grayback against a Sixty-ninth, and he ordered one of his soldiers to get out a "thoroughbred." However, the Sixty-ninth grayback won and Bennett pocketed the $5 wager. A week after the race the soldier who furnished Keigwin with the grayback which lost the race reported at headquarters for special duty, and while the colonel was talking with him he discovered a large grayback on the soldier's coat collar. He immediately took him to task for his carelessness in not keeping himself clean, but the soldier very carefully caught the grayback and placed it back on his person, remarking: "I've had that grayback in training for the last week to beat the Sixty-ninth, and I'm going to win back the money that you lost to Bennett."

While Colonel Keigwin's recollections of the Forty-ninth do not give the history of the regiment in detail, it is an exceedingly interesting review of what was accomplished during its long years of service, which began in Kentucky and ended in Texas. Scores of incidents are touched upon, in which Keigwin and his command bore an active part. The writing was a labor of love on the part of Keigwin, and the work in many respects is one of historical importance. The feasibility of placing it in book form has been discussed.—Indianapolis News.

A Very Near Man.

At Richfield Springs, one day, Gen. Buckner heard some military skeptics criticising Gen. Grant's military ability. "Why, Hooker was as grave as Grant," said one man excitedly. "But Grant was a very near man," said Buckner. "And McClellan was a greater strategist," said another scoffer. "But Grant was famous for his nearness," said Buckner. "He may not have been brave, but he was always near." "What do you mean by nearness?" asked another scoffer petulantly. "Why, when I looked around at Fort Donelson for some one to surrender to, Grant was right there handy; and I noticed when Gen. Lee surrendered at Appomattox, Grant was the nearest General to take his sword. Oh, he was near, Grant was."

Where He Got His Support.

At a certain battle of the late war a Federal chaplain happened to get into the vicinity of a battery of artillery which was hotly engaged. The Confederate shells were plowing furrows about the guns, and the cannoneers were grimly and actively at work to answer shot for shot. The chaplain addressed himself to a sergeant, who was very efficient but at the same time rather profane, in the following words:

"My friend, if you go on this way can you expect the support of Divine Providence?"

"Ain't expectin' it," said the sergeant. The Ninth N. J. has been ordered to support this battery."

A PAIR OF GLOVES.

The Impudent Store People Wouldn't Take Them Back.

Mrs. Pinkerton's first question was about the gloves.

"Did you exchange them?" she asked.

"No," said Pinkerton, "I didn't."

"There," she complained, "I might have known you would forget it. How careless! I told you the very last thing before you left the house to be sure to attend to it. Really, I don't see how men can be so thoughtless."

"I didn't forget," said Pinkerton. "I tried to change them, but they wouldn't take the things back."

"Wouldn't—take—them—back?" she said. "Why not?"

"They said they were soiled."

"Soiled? Well, of all things! If they are they got soiled in their own store. I didn't soil them. I have never had them on my hands. I couldn't get them on. They were half a size too small. They gave me the wrong number. Why didn't you tell them so?"

"I did."

"Whom did you tell?"

"The clerk and the floorwalker and everybody who would listen to me."

"And what did they say?"

"They laughed."

"The impudent creatures! I'll never buy a cent's worth in that store again, you see if I do."

"That's just what I said," Pinkerton put in. "I said you never would."

"And what did they say to that?"

"They laughed again."

"Well, that settles it. I never will buy anything there now. Where are the gloves?"

"In my pocket."

"Let me have them, please. Soiled, indeed! I'll see if they are."

Mrs. Pinkerton unwrapped the package. As she took out the gloves she blushed slightly.

"Well," she said.

"Well?" echoed Pinkerton. "What's wrong?"

"N-nothing much," she said, "only this is an old pair of gloves. I cleaned them last week with gasoline. I made a mistake and sent them back instead of the pair I bought yesterday."—New York Herald.

Proof Against Wasp Stings.

A Scottish naturalist in a paper on the habits of wasps tells how a blackbird will stand at the side of a hanging wasps' nest and deliberately tear it in pieces in order to get at the larvae, apparently undisturbed by the swarm of angry insects, whose vicious stings instantly put to flight the human curiosity seeker who ventures near to watch the demolition.

Prevention of the Flight of Birds.

To prevent birds from flying without the barbarous and injurious system sometimes practiced of cutting their wings it will be found sufficient to tie together with a thread three or four of the largest feathers of one wing. This destroys the balance, the wings do not act symmetrically in the air, and flight is rendered impossible. Fowls, pigeons, etc., may be kept within bounds in this simple fashion.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON

1:00—Song service, led by Prof. J. E. Sturgis.

Mrs. M. J. Baldwin talked on the graded lessons which should be taught in all the Sunday schools, for they are a great help to the scholars, that they tend to broaden their minds, that they will be better fitted to teach the word of God.

Mrs. G. S. Fulmer, of Garrett, gave a most interesting talk in regard to the state convention which was held at Indianapolis.

Bro. Barnham, of Ashley, then told of the great and good things that he had received from this convention, the great inspiration it had given him to follow out some of the good thoughts and suggestions which had been given during the many sessions.

Different ones told of the great help they had received from the convention and of the determination to follow out the suggestions to put them into practice.

Resolutions read by Bro. Higley were accepted.

The delegates of different parts of the county heartily thanked the people of Butler for their kind hospitality toward them during this convention.

The county officers were then elected for the following year, to meet at Waterloo.

Installation prayer by Mrs. M. J. Baldwin.

Do you want a small farm of less than fifteen acres in DeKalb county? Sandy soil, the very best for gardening and poultry. Small house and barn. Requires a down payment of $200. Wallace C. Webster. 4tf

THE BLACK BASS.

Mysterious Habits of the Fish That Puzzle the Naturalist.

Why the black bass bites on one day and refuses every bait the next; why he takes helgramites and only helgramites on Monday, grasshoppers on Tuesday and frogs on Wednesday; why he bites only on dark days for a fortnight and then shifts his biting humor to days bright and breezy; why you find him today on sandy bottom and tomorrow on mud and the day after on the rocks, are baffling traits of the bass that relate merely to his sporting relations with the angler. But there are other mysteries that puzzle the naturalist and bear on the organic life of the fish.

Up in Maine are two bass rivers not far apart. In one the fish run often to four, even to five, pounds; in the other rarely above a pound and a half. In one of the largest lakes of New Hampshire the writer's score for a whole season once ran up to 398 fish. Food was evidently abundant, for the bass were "chunky" and the viscarea thick with fatty tissues. Yet the postmortem showed in the stomach only glutinous, unrecognizable white matter, and the largest bass of the whole season drew the scales at but a pound and three-quarters. What did those bass live on, and why didn't they grow bigger? Again, in the uplands of Connecticut are two large lakes some eight miles apart. In the one bass are often caught in winter ice fishing; in the other lake almost never in winter, though in its open summer waters bass fishing is the better. Remembering that the bass are supposed to hibernate and in fairly deep waters, would not that fact argue in the late season darker outward hues and deeper bronzes? Yet the head of a large bass hatchery has observed a silvery change of the bass at the approach of winter when his habit and habitat would imply the exact reverse. Such are a few of the anatomical enigmas of the black bass that make him and his paradoxes an interesting study for that open minded angler who blends the naturalist with the sportsman.—Collier's Weekly.

Elihu Yale's Grave.

Elihu Yale, from whom the college in New Haven took its name, sleeps in the graveyard at Wrexham church, near Chester, England. The following inscription (restored some years ago by the council of Yale) is to be found on one side of his tombstone:

Born in America, in Europe bred, in Africa traveled, in Asia wed,
Where long he lived and thrived; in London dead.
Much good, some ill, he did, so hope all's even
And that his soul through mercy's gone to heaven.

—Boston Globe.

In a Bad Way.

A teacher in an elementary school at Graz, Austria, received a letter from a mother who explained that she had been dangerously ill with atheism and rheumatism and had kept her little girl at home to nurse her.

A Native Interpretation.

"Tell me," said .... inquiring Englishman of an American friend, "what is the significance of the eagle shown on your money?"

"It is an emblem of its swift flight."

The Object.

Rich Uncle Ebenezer—So you are named after me, are you? Small Nephew—Yes; ma said it was too bad, but we needed the money.

Edgerton

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Krill attended the Embalmer's convention in Cleveland last week.

Frank Green of Wessington, South Dakota, was the guest of his brother, Chester and family the latter part of last week.

Mrs. Relyea is on the sick list.

Miss Bertha Dimler of Toledo, spent last week with her mother in Edgerton.

Si Simons of Butler, visited with his parents in Edgerton last Monday.

Chas. Madden of Butler was in our town last Tuesday.

E. A. Farnham went to South Bend last Friday and from there he went to Chicago to attend the graduation exercises of the Northwestern College, where his son Waldo graduated in medicine. There are 150 graduates in the class.

Fred Burkhart and family of Chesterton, Ind., spent last week with his parents near Edon and his wife's folds near Edgerton.

L. C. Harding of Butler, was on our streets last Tuesday forenoon.

Curtis Harpster of Waterloo was in Edgerton last Tuesday looking after the trade for Bueyer Bros.

Chas. Rathbun of Chicago came home Monday to attend the funeral of his grandmother, Mrs. Koebler, who was buried last Tuesday afternoon.

Mrs. Koebler died very suddenly last Sunday at 12 o'clock. She was feeling bad Saturday, but cooked three meals as usual, and Sunday forenoon about ten o'clock, she was taken very sick and died in two hours. The funeral was held at the home of her daughter Mrs. W. E. Rathbun, Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The Eastern Stars had charge of the funeral, Rev. Ewers of the Presbyterian church preached the funeral sermon. Interment in Maple Grove cemetery.

The Perfect Silence.

There is no sensation in the world like that which comes over you when walking through a dense grove of redwoods. Their trunks rise hundreds of feet into the air and are lost in the dense roof of foliage like the columns of an Egyptian temple grown to superhuman height. On the ground there is no underbrush, but only ferns of a size and shape that suggest a prehistoric period and fallen trunks that have lain unrotting for 3,000 years. There is no sunlight and no birds sing. If a storm arises, it is an hour before a drop reaches the ground. Here all is as it was since creation, and there is no time. It is the perfect silence.—Exchange.

The Color of the Eye.

The color of the iris is not uniform in any eye. Some eyes have spots, others stripes, still others blotches of white, green, blue, yellow and black, and the eye takes its color from the predominance of one hue. An eye that is considered gray will often be composed of black and yellow. An eye that is thought to be brown will be very dark red with spots of yellow or blue.

Wonderful Bargains in Fine High-Grade Suits

WE have experienced the greatest business during the last three months in the history of our store. Our price on high-grade Suits were so attractive that we have drawn customers thirty to seventy miles to take advantage of our prices.

The Result: Our stock of Suits became so badly broken that our buyer was obliged to go to market again, where he bought over 2,000 of the finest Suits made by "Hart Schaffner & Marx," "B. Kuppenheimer" and the "L. System." These Suits we place on sale this week, marked $5 te $10 under the regular price. We will sell you "Kuppenheimer" Blue Serge Suits in several of the very latest models at $15 that you cannot buy in the state for less than $25. We will sell you "Hart Schaffner & Marx" Style Gray Worsted and Cheviots at $15 that we will guarantee to be $7 to $10 under the price of any other store. Over 200 patterns in our $55 line marked $7 to $10 less than they can be bought elsewhere.

Come To Our Store The bargains are for you no matter how far you live from Fort Wayne. Read the Fort Wayne papers for special bargains in Hosiery and Porus Knit Underwear.

The fourth quarterly meeting of Butler circuit will be held at Zion church, June 25, Saturday night and Sunday morning preaching. J. A. Davis, Pastor.

Last Tuesday evening ten members of class No. 7 of the U. B. Sunday school with their teacher, Mrs. Eva Young, went to the home of Miss Minnie Alwood during her absence. When she returned she was greatly surprised to find things arranged differently than she had left them, however, we didn't give her time to consider the matter for we could keep silent no longer. When the excitement was over all joined in games and contests, after which light refreshments were served. The remainder of the evening was devoted to music. At a late hour the guests departed wishing Miss Minnie many more such happy surprises.

VEVA FARNER, Secretary.

The Mutzfeld Reunion

The third annual Mutzfeld reunion was held at the country home of E. W. Mutzfeld, Saturday, June 11. About sixty relatives came from far and near with well filled baskets. The forenoon was spent in a social way, recalling memories of former days.

After partaking of dinner, which all enjoyed, the meeting was called to order by the president, John Mutzfeld, and a good program was rendered. The following officers were elected for the coming year:

President—William Mutzfeld.
Secretary—Mabel Mutzfeld.
Treasurer—Charley Mutzfeld.

It was decided to hold the next reunion at the home of John Mutzfeld, of Auburn. All were then treated to ice cream by Grandma Mutzfeld.

Relatives were present from St. Louis, Mo., Garrett, Larwill, Fort Wayne and Auburn.

PICKUPS FROM NEARBY CITIES

ELKHART, Ind., June 16.—The new band instrument factory to be erected by C. G. Conn at Elkhart to take the place of that recently destroyed by fire will cover ground with an area of 100x680 feet. Practically no wood will be used in the construction and the plant will be modern and attractive.

LAGRANGE, Ind., June 16.—Herbert S. Gilhams, who has been superintendent of the Roma City schools for the past three years, has accepted a like position at Lima. He was at the head of the schools at the latter place before being elected superintendent of Lagrange county.

GARRETT, Ind., June 13.—Burglars visited this city for the first time in several months last Friday evening. The home of Fred Moses located in the north end of the city was entered after midnight and several articles taken. Mr. Moses, who works at the B. & O. shops at night had gone home at midnight for lunch and some time after he left his wife and Mrs Julia Moses, his mother, were awakened by steps on the lower floor. They decided to make an investigation and after they started down the stairs the intruders made a hasty exit out the rear door. In their haste the door was left open. Upon investigation it was found that a pocketbook containing some money was missing as was also a ladies gold watch and several less valuable articles. No clew has been found that would aid in the identity of the thieves.

ANDERSON, Ind., June 14.—Sophia Lenz, six years old, was run down and killed by the automobile of Charles East, a local hardware dealer, here late today.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., June 15.—The Fort Wayne-Warsaw interurban project was revived yesterday with the incorporation of the Fort Wayne Traction company in this city by Mr. J. A. Berry, promotor. The capital stock is $10,000 and will be increased to $100,000 later. Incorporators are Messrs. J. A. Berry, E. G. Hoffman, Ralph Berry, E. W. Cook and G. M. Leslie, and the proposed new road will connect Fort Wayne with Arcola, Coesse, Columbia City, Larwill, Pierceton, Wooster and Warsaw.

GARRETT, Ind., June 14.—George Palmer, who resided in this city until about a year ago, is confined in the county jail at Auburn, held for wife desertion. He was married in this city some time ago and soon after left for the west. He was located at Warsaw by Sheriff Thomas.

LAGRANGE, Ind., June 14.—The Lagrange base ball team expect to play Kendallville at that city Sunday afternoon. A special train is being arranged to take the fans from this city and the indications are that a large number will attend. The train will leave after dinner and will return after the game. On account of the rivalry between the two teams a fast contest is expected.

AUBURN, Ind., June 14.—Rev. W. L. Meese, who is known as the "Marrying Parson," of the middle western states will attend the old settlers' meeting in this city Thursday, according to word received in this city today. The reunion promises to be an interesting event and will be attended by many from a distance as well as many from the surrounding states. A fine program has been prepared.

WATERLOO, Ind., June 15.—The death of Mrs. Sheldon H. Hine occurred Sunday morning at 9 o'clock, and while not unexpected, it came with a sadness to the family. Mrs. Hine had been critically ill since last November. The funeral was conducted from the home at the corner of Union and Washington streets at two o'clock Tuesday afternoon by Rev. W. A. Service, of the Presbyterian church. The burial took place on the family lot in the Waterloo cemetery. A large audience, including many of her old neighbors and friends, assembled to pay their last respects to the one they loved.

ANGOLA, Ind., June 13.—Mrs. Samuel Miller, an Angola lady seventy three years of age, was found dead in bed Sunday morning. She is an aunt of Mrs. Judge E. A. Bratton. Her husband who is still living has had several strokes of paralysis and is practically helpless.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., June 13.—Governor Marshall has named George W. Miles, of Syracuse, to be state fish and game commissioner to succeed Rev. Z. T. Sweeney, of Columbus, Ind. Governor Marshall first named George Swartzcopf, of Columbus, but inasmuch as the governor insists that the appointee shall reside at Indianapolis and the salary is but $1,200 a year Swartzcopf thought he couldn't afford to take the job.

See Fred Briggs for cement blocks.

A. U. Vernier spent Sunday with his mother at Stryker, O.

Harley Kepler returned home Thursday evening from the navy.

Miss Anna Gehring left Tuesday for Auburn to be gone several days.

Miss Effie Bogert returned to her home near Spencerville, Sunday.

Mrs. John Brown and daughter Nora, spent Monday at Fort Wayne.

Mrs. Noirot of Auburn, was the guest of Mrs. Lewis McInturf, Monday.

Ross Boyle is expected home from Marion this week for a few days visit.

Miss Alice E. Orahood was the guest of friends at Milford Center, over Sunday.

D. H. Knisely left Wednesday for a week's visit with his daughter at Medina.

L. F. Orahood and wife took dinner Monday with Levi C. Oberlin and wife, near Milford Center.

Bludd Gaskill and wife of Pleasant Lake were the guests of Walter Hallauer and wife, over Sunday.

Mrs. Guy Griffith and little daughter, of Toledo, came Wednesday for a visit with her parents, Joel Latson and wife.

Mrs. Harrison left Wednesday for her home in Fayette after several days visit with her son, Dr. L. H. Harrison and wife.

Frank Snyder moved his family into his remodeled home on Wednesday. It makes a fine appearance and is a credit to Oak street.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. George Howe, June 13, a girl; to Mr. and Mrs. Byron Johnston, June 14, a girl; to Mr. and Mrs. George Swinehart, a boy.

Matchless bargains at the Racket store. For the remainder of the week we will give 12 boxes of Prairie Dog matches for 5c with every purchase of 25c or more. 24-1

People driving in from the country to attend church, Sunday forenoon, may have the privilege of tying their teams in the new feed barn free of charge. In the evening the regular rate will be charged. J. Stuver, prop.

D. T. Kiess, Sam Gearhart and Wm. Knepper of Edon, O., attended the Carleton lecture here last Thursday evening. They came over in an auto and just outside of the city had a break down which caused them to remain over night.

S. T. Graf and wife expect their daughter, Mrs. Ben Roberts, to arrive Sunday. Their household goods will follow and they will make Butler their home at least for some time. Mr. Roberts expects to work for the Butler Co. next fall and winter.

The city council has given the marshal strict orders to pick up every dog caught on the streets without a muzzle, and the officer informs the HERALD that the orders will be enforced, therefore all persons owning dogs should muzzle them at once and avoid further trouble.

Oh! horrors, just to think of it, Miss Ethel Roosevelt's dog had a severe attact of mal-de-mar enroute to the U. S. while on board, the Kaiserin, but the suspense to the American people is lifted by wireless message that the dog is better, and such is the news of the present day.—Waterloo Press.

A carnival company will arrive in this city next Monday, and the citizens will be given a great treat (nit) provide the company has the snake, rat and dog eating man with them. Anyway the HERALD advises the citizens to keep vigil over their fourfooted pets which they can't bear to see wear an ugly muzzle. It doesn't matter so much about the rats and snakes.

Mrs. Bert Shapland, of Kendallville, entertained a number of friends at "Five Hundred" last Monday evening at the home of Mrs. Chas. Noragon. The guests were requested to come in comic attire and was responded to by a clown, school girl, gold dust twins, a young German and his bride, also a couple of happy minstrels (who entertained the ladies with guitar music) and others. After a short time at cards in which Mrs. A. U. Vernier secured as prize, a hand painted plate, the guests were assembled around the festive board where all enjoyed a sumptuous repast after which they took their departure, tuned to the saying, "A little fun now and then, is relished by the best of men."

The HERALD goes to press too early to give its readers a report of the republican county convention which is being held at Auburn today (Thursday) We learn, however, that L. H. Higley of this city, is a likely candidate for representative. Geo. W. Geedes has been favorably mentioned for county auditor, but he will not accept the honors. Mr. Higley has been a worker in the party for a number of years, and if they are going to recognize him at all it is about time. But no matter who is nominated he will have to be some pumpkins if he stands a ghost of a show with McKennen.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

It is surprising the many different appetizing ways that Corned Beef can be prepared for the family's meals. Every one likes Corned Beef and there is no more healthful or delicious dish than Libby's, carefully selected from prime beef and properly "corned."

There is some waste, to be sure, when bought at the butcher's, but in the plan here suggested you may buy the finest corned beef in the world in which there is absolutely no waste and every particle of which can be eaten.

Suppose you ask your grocer for Libby's Corned Beef. It represents all full value—no bone, no gristle—just clean, pure corned beef selected first hand from the finest beef stock—no scraps or second pieces—and corned and cooked to perfection in Libby's wonderful white enamel kitchens. A can of Libby's Corned Beef sliced and served cold with dill pickles and potato salad is a delightful meal and will be enough for four people.

Corned Beef Hash.—Take the contents of a can, chop fine, add one-fourth as much boiled or baked potatoes, a little fried onion and a small quantity of water. Cook slowly until thoroughly heated, then serve on toast with or without poached eggs.

Corned Beef Omelette.—Beat the yolks and whites of four eggs separately and add one-half of the whites to all of the yolks. Put in a hot frying pan and, when nicely browned on the bottom, sprinkle a cup of minced corned beef over it. Spread over this the remainder of the whites, put in the oven and brown on top. Then fold and serve.

Creamed Corned Beef.—Mince the contents of a can of Libby's Corned Beef. Put over this a dressing of cream gravy with the yolk of an egg beaten into it. Serve on toast.

New England Boiled Dinner.—You may have this in one-fourth of the time it usually takes. Put a can of Libby's Corned Beef in boiling water—it is already cooked—and serve in the usual manner with vegetables.

Besides the economy in the use of Libby's Corned Beef, another great advantage to the housewife in using it is that it is all cooked when bought and there is no necessity for the long, tedious and expensive boiling which is necessary with raw corned beef. The house is not filled with steam and odors and valuable time is saved. Libby's Corned Beef is ready at once for serving in any one of the many ways mentioned above, and you will find it a great convenience to try it next time. Be sure you get Libby, McNeill & Libby's Corned Beef.

She Didn't Care.

Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, at a luncheon in New York, said with good-humored mockery of the suffragettes:

"If they keep on, their outlook, really, will become as naively selfish as Mrs. Dash's. Mr. Dash, as his young wife posed before the mirror in a decollete gown from the dearest shop in the Rue de la Paix, regarded the pretty little lady indulgently, and said with a sigh:

"'You do look nice in that frock, dear, but it cost me a heap of money.'

"'You dear old boy,' she cried, 'what do I care for money when it's a question of pleasing you?'"

FIVE YEARS OF SUFFERING.

Restored to Health by Curing the Kidneys.

Mrs. A. P. Hester, 614 Fourth Ave., Evansville, Ind., says: "For five years I was laid up with kidney trouble for weeks at a time. My limbs were swollen and I suffered almost unbearable pain. The kidney secretions were scanty, passed too frequently and scalded. I shook like a person with palsy. My case completely puzzled the doctors. Finally I began with Doan's Kidney Pills, soon felt better and ere long was cured."

Flowers at Funerals.

The custom of having flowers at funerals is very ancient. The Greeks, centuries before the Christian era, crowned the dead body with flowers and also placed flowers on the tomb. The Romans decked the funeral couch with leaves and flowers and spread flowers, wreaths and fillets on the tomb of friends. Most of our funeral customs are derived from the Romans such as dressing in black, walking or riding in procession, raising a mound over the graves, etc., and among the rest is that of using flowers at funerals.

THE HYDE CASE AN AMAZING STORY OF CRIME.

Dr. B. Clarke Hyde was found guilty at Kansas City, Mo., of murder in the first degree in causing the death of his wife's uncle, Colonel Thomas H. Swope, and his punishment fixed by law at life imprisonment. The jury had been out two days and three nights. The verdict is the climax to the most remarkable homicide case known to Missouri, and adds to the annals of crime for the twentieth century the final word in murder as a fine art. The man convicted of responsibility for the Swope tragedy touched the "edge of the cycle" in the devilish ingenuity with which he employed modern science to consummate his ends.

The circumstances attending the deaths of Colonel Thomas H. Swope, the Kansas City millionaire; his nephew, Chrisman Swope, and his cousin and confidential business agent, James Moss Hunton, and the epidemic of typhoid fever that attacked eight members of the Swope family and a house maid within a short time afterward, have formed one of the most mysterious cases in recent court and police investigation.

The death of Colonel Swope on October 3, 1909, mystified his family and close friends. Dr. Hyde had treated the colonel during his last hours, and in signing the death certificate gave apoplexy as the cause. Only two days before Hunton had died at the Swope home under similar circumstances following a stroke of apoplexy. Dr. Hyde and Dr. G. T. Twyman of Independence treated Hunton. The patient was bled profusely, it was charged, at the suggestion of Dr. Hyde. After six pints of blood were taken from Hunton the bleeding process was stopped, but not until Dr. Twyman had repeatedly protested that too much blood was being taken from the old man. Hunton's death soon followed.

When an epidemic of typhoid fever started in the Swope household in which eight persons were stricken and one, Chrisman Swope, died, John G. Paxton, executor of the Swope estate, and Mrs. Logan O. Swope, sister of Colonel Swope, and mother of Chrisman, instituted a vigorous investigation.

Dr. Edward J. Stewart came forward with the statement that on November 10 Dr. Hyde had obtained from him an active culture of typhoid bacteria. After this Dr. Hyde was placed under constant police surveillance. Then Dr. Hyde filed suit for $600,000 damages against Attorney Paxton, Dr. Stewart and Dr. Frank L. Hall, alleging defamation of character.

Colonel Swope had been in feeble health for some time, but was thought to have improved. He was not so well a few weeks prior to his sudden death and remained in bed. On October 3 Dr. Hyde gave him what the physician said was a digestive capsule. Twenty minutes later Colonel Swope went into convulsions. His neck and arms and limbs stiffened and he gasped in his death agony, "Oh! I wish I had not taken that medicine." He died ten minutes later.

It was proven at the trial that Dr. Hyde had purchased cyanide of potassium five-grain capsules and it was charged that he gave one of these capsules to Colonel Swope. Dr. Hyde said he bought the cyanide to kill cockroaches in his office and as a disinfectant. Six days later Colonel Swope's will, leaving Kansas City real estate valued at $1,600,000 to members of his family, was filed for probate.

On December 1 Miss Margaret Swope, niece of Colonel Swope, was taken ill with typhoid fever. Two days later her brother, Chrisman Swope, was attacked with the same malady. Nurses attending Chrisman were surprised when he had convulsions exactly like those suffered by his uncle. He also had been given a capsule by Dr. Hyde. The young man died December 6.

Miss Cora Dickson, governess in the Swope home and a cousin of Colonel Swope, and Miss Coppege, a maid, were both stricken with typhoid fever on December 4. Five days later Sarah Swope, 14 years old, a niece of Colonel Swope, became ill with typhoid fever, and on December 11 Stella Swope, another niece, was stricken with the same disease.

Mrs B. Clark Hyde

On December 18 Miss Lucy Lee Swope, daughter of Mrs. Logan Swope, was seized with typhoid fever four days after her arrival from Europe. Dr. Hyde had gone to New York to meet her, accompanied her to the Swope home and treated her during the early stages of her illness. About the same time Stewart S. Fleming of Maury county, Tennessee, a nephew of Colonel Swope, who was visiting the family, was taken ill with typhoid fever. Margaret Swope, who also was treated by Dr. Hyde, had a convulsion after taking a capsule, but she was given an emetic at once by Dr. Twyman and she recovered.

On January 7, 1910, the body of Chrisman Swope was secretly exhumed and four days later the body of Colonel Swope was removed from its tomb and the analysis of the liver and kidneys of Colonel Swope's body resulted in the finding of fifty-two-sixty-sixths of a grain of strychnine by the Chicago chemists. The coroner summoned a jury which after investigating the death of Colonel Swope decided he died as the result of strychnine poisoning administered at the direction of Dr. Hyde.

The county prosecutor then issued a warrant, charging Dr. Hyde with murder in the first degree, after John G. Paxton, executor of the Swope estate, had filed an information against the physician. Judge Latshaw impaneled a grand jury which returned indictments charging Dr. Hyde with murder in the first degree in connection with the death of Colonel Swope and Chrisman Swope, and manslaughter in connection with the death of Moss Hunton. In all Dr. Hyde was indicted on eleven counts, the remaining indictments charging him with trying to murder members of the Swope family by introducing typhoid germs and poisons into the medicines administered by him.

WOMAN'S FIGHT FOR A THRONE

INTEGRITY OF AUSTRIAN EMPIRE MAY HINGE ON CLAIMS OF MORGANATIC WIFE OF HEIR APPARENT

A woman is fighting single-handed for the right to share one of the proudest thrones in Europe.

Her motive is mother love. Her weapons are tact, beauty, personal charm. She is ambitious not for herself, but for her little son.

The thrilling, silent battle being waged by Princess Sophie of Hohenberg, morganitic wife of Archduke Franz Ferdinand, heir-apparent to the Austrian succession, is holding the attention of all the world. Arrayed against her and entrenched in aristocratic tradition is all the arrogance of the Princes and Princesses of the imperial house of Hapsburg.

Hungary already has come out as her champion. The Hungarian Parliament recently pronounced her claims to the Hungarian throne valid and declared that when Ferdinand became King of Hungary she should reign as his Queen. This question of deep political import is perturbing the statesmen of Austria and of Europe. If Austria refuses the throne to the woman Hungary is ready to crown, Hungary may revolt. What the possible withdrawal of Hungary from its union with Austria would mean is difficult to prophesy. Some of the contingencies are a disastrous war, battles, sieges, death for hundreds of thousands, the crumbling forever of the ancient empire that traces its history to the Caesars, and a readjustment of the map of Europe.

The Princess Sophie has been gaining ground. Kaiser William openly has espoused her cause. On his recent visit to Vienna his manner toward her was particularly cordial and he would not allow her to be excluded from the dinners given in his honor. He made it clear that when she visited Berlin she would be received as the future Austrian Empress. When Archduke Ferdinand and his wife soon afterward returned the Kaiser's visit, the German ruler attempted to carry out his program. In a way he was successful, but his program of cordiality and encouragement was marred slightly by the Empress, who preserved a coldly aloof attitude toward the aspiring Austrian Princess.

The attitude of the German Empress reflects that of the haughty royal women of the Austrian court. A powerful cabal against Princess Sophie at Vienna is headed by Archduchess Isabella and the Archduchess Grizella, eldest daughter of the present Emperor and wife of Prince Ferdinand of Bavaria. These Princesses and their feminine allies are moving heaven and earth to prevent Princess Sophie from establishing her right to the crown. If they could have their way they would block Prince Ferdinand's path to the throne and crown his nephew, young Karl Frank, son of Archduke Otto, in his stead.

It was while lady-in-waiting in the train of the Archduchess Isabella that Sophie's love affair with the Archduke Ferdinand began and in the inception of the romance is to be found the origin of the bitter feud the Archduchess has waged against the younger woman. Isabella planned that one of her daughters should become the bride of Ferdinand, and so, in the end, ascend the Austrian throne. Sophie, innocently enough, was the rock upon which these ambitious dreams went to smash. So the Archduchess' jealousy and desire for revenge are at the bottom of the vendetta which now involves most of the women of the Austrian court.

The Archduchess Isabella had several daughters. When Archduke Ferdinand began to call often at the ancestral castle of his distant cousins, Isabella believed, as did the entire court circle, that he was enamored of one of thehe royal young princesses. Ferdinand, the polite, the courtly, made much of his cousins, and his attentions set their hearts fluttering with vague hopes of a crown. The only question with them and with their mother was which one he would select to share his brilliant future. So diplomatic was Ferdinand and so absorbed in their own ambitious dreams were the Archduchess and her daughters that they did not suspect the real motives that brought the Archduke so often to the castle. The slim, shy, modest young Countess Chotek did not, for a moment, enter their calculations.

Then one day came disillusion like a bolt from the blue. The Archduchess Isabella, in her satins and furbelows, was sweeping up the stairway of the castle. A dimly glittering object at her feet caught her eye. She picked it up. It was the brooch of her lady-in-waiting. The Archduchess would return it. But just then some mischievous imp must have whispered into Isabella's ear. Idly curious, she opened the locket. A portrait of a handsome young man met her gaze. Ah, ha! She had stumbled upon the Countess Chotek's secret. So that sly minx of a lady-in-waiting was in love! The picture was a miniature of the Archduke Ferdinand.

Excitement and consternation akin to panic seized the household. The Archduchess hastily summoned her daughters. They found her storming up and down the floor in tears of rage. She thundered out the story that had been revealed by the locket. Could it be possible that the heir to the throne of the empire would pass by the daughters of this princely house and wed a woman of lowly origin? Countess Sophie was sent for. She came with downcast eyes. "I want the truth," shouted the Archduchess. And Sophie told the story of her romance timidly. It was true she loved Ferdinand and Ferdinand loved her and had asked her to be his wife. Her usefulness in Isabella's menage ceased from that moment. The lady-in-waiting was instantly dismissed. The Archduchess immediately informed the Emperor, who summoned his nephew for an explanation. Franz Ferdinand declared he was engaged to the Countess and meant to marry her. The Emperor tried in vain to dissuade him, but finally compromised on a year's delay, promising to give his consent then if the Archduke remained of the same mind.

Young Ferdinand and the Countess Chotek were married at Reichstadt, almost privately, with only three of the Hapsburgs present. Even the brothers of the Archduke, Carl and Otto, did not appear at the wedding, while the Emperor merely sent a message of congratulation. The Archduchess Maria Theresa, however, was present and proposed the nuptial toast.

For several years nothing disturbed the Archduke's married life. The Countess never appeared in public with him, the carriage she used lacked the golden spokes of the wheels of imperial equipages, and whenever the Archduke attended court festivities the wife stayed at home.

The Belvedere palace, which for more than a century contained the imperial picture gallery, was modernized and fitted for a princely residence, and it was understood that the future Emperor's morganatic wife would continue to reside there, even after her husband succeeded to the throne. The Burg palace and Schoenbrunn were to be reserved for receptions and festivities, and the Emperor would return to the Belvedere every day, after having attended to the business of the state in his official rooms in the Burg.

The father of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand was Karl Ludwig, younger brother of the present Emperor, famed for his gloomy disposition and clerical views. Ferdinand's mother died when he was 8 and he was brought up by a devoted steupmother whom his father married when the Archduke was 9. He was educated with a view to his ultimate entry into holy orders.

When he was 15 his tutors realized his unfitness for the life and he was destined to be a soldier. In the earlier years of his manhood the Archduke was an almost chronic invalid. At one time he was obliged to go to Egypt for his health, and lived out on the desert for a year, fighting what his physicians told him was tuberculosis. But since his marriage he has been so devoted cared for by the mother of his children, with whom he spends all his leisure time. In November, 1900, after a month's debate, the Buda-Pesth Parliament formally acknowledged Frank Ferdinand as the heir apparent to the crown of St. Stephen and recognized the right of his wife to share with him the Hungarian throne.

It is only since the birth of her son, Maximilian, that the Princess has come from the seclusion in which she lived for a few years after her marriage. Now she deems it necessary, if she would win her point, to place herself as prominently as good taste will permit her before the public. She is not finding it necessary to conciliate Hungary, as her position there is unquestioned, the Hungarians having declared that they ignore the meaning of a morganatic wife. There the King's wife will be Queen, and, residing in the castle of Buda, she will receive the nobility with her husband.

The Princess, now past 40, is a far more beautiful woman than she was at the time of her marriage, when she held no claim to beauty. From a thin, pale girl she has blossomed out into a well-rounded, attractive woman, who will command her rightful share of attention, and who seems in a fair way to get it. She is an ideal mother, and spends a great deal of time and thought on the upbringing of her children. Her little daughter, Sophie, is a beauty, and the boys are veritable Kings in embryo.

Certain it is that the old Emperor is rapidly nearing the great goal. That the Princess has a hard fight ahead of her yet is also certain. But with the future of the little Maximilian at heart, with the sympathy of the Hungarians to serve as a sort of anchor to her hopes, and with an unlimited amount of perseverance, Princess Sophie of Hohenberg stands a good chance of winning her fight and achieving a throne for herself and her descendants.

Flowers Bloom in Darkness.

After two years of experimenting with nearly every spring flower of this section of the country, Dr. Marion Mackenzie of the department of biology at Temple University has established the fact that every kind will blossom as quickly and as beautifully in the darkness as in the light, says the Philadelphia North American.

The experiments were conducted in the greenhouses of the botanical garden at the University of Pennsylvania and extended over two years. The flowering plants were studied comparatively under conditions of high and low temperature, in the darkness and in the sunlight.

Among the varieties that flowered in the darkness were the violet, all varieties of the maple and poplar trees, the wild azalea, sassafras, the jack-in-the-pulpit and the skunk cabbage. The observation that darkness does not retard the blossoming was so generally true that Dr. Mackenzie thinks it justifiable to state as a result of her experimental work that all flowers of our climate will bloom under these remarkably unnatural conditions.

It was a matter of some surprise to Dr. Mackenzie that the skunk cabbage, thought by even the most admiring naturalists to be a worthless perennial plant, burst forth into a rich bloom when brought indoors. The flowers, too, noted the experimenter, are more gorgeous than those of many plants that the housewives of to-day are harboring in their homes.

RIDDLES OF THE ORIENT

Mysteries of the West an Open Book to the Wise Men of the Far East.

TRANSMITS NEWS QUICKLY.

Secret Means of Communication, Mesmerism and Hypnotism and the Eastern Volapuk.

In India, central Asia, Arabia, as well as in the northern and central Africa, the natives have from time immemorial possessed some mysterious method of transmitting news, within the space of an hour or two, over distances of many thousands of miles. Study of the subject in the orient have convinced investigators that the means employed is not electricity, such as we understand it. For telegraphy when we first introduced it into the orient was regarded by the latter as a wholly new and foreign contrivance. But that some of the people of Asia and of the dark continent have mastered one of Lord Salisbury's riddles of nature to the extent of successfully applying their discovery to the quick transmission of news is an established fact.

When Lord Mayor, the viceroy of India, was murdered in the Andaman islands, the news of his death, within an hour after the perpetration of the deed, was communicated to one of the principal English officials at Simla by an old and trusted servant, who had been long in his employ, although the distance between the Andaman islands and Simla is something over 2,000 miles. The telegraphic announcement of the assassination of the governor-general did not reach the summer capital until more than twenty-four hours afterward.

Mesmerism and hypnotism were practiced for centuries in the orient before they ever made their way to Europe and America, and in many respects have been developed in India to an extent that savors of the supernatural and which, nevertheless, is wholly within the laws of nature.

It is claimed by the natives of India that some of their wise men have mastered, if not the language of animals, at any rate that of birds. That the feathered denizens of the air have a language intelligible to each other and capable of being mastered by mankind was believed by the ancient Greeks and Romans, older and in some respects wiser than ourselves.

No white man has ever been permitted to acquire the species of sign Volapuk which is understood by all natives engaged in trade throughout Asia and northern and central Africa. By means of it they are enabled to conduct their commercial transactions even though one of the parties may mail from the north of China, the other from the southernmost part of Arabia, and the third from the mysterious city of Jerboub, which is the stronghold of the grand master of the great Moslem Order of the Senoussi, in the hinterland of Tripoli, some hundreds of miles to the west of the oasis of Siwa. In some of those great markets of the Orient you can see merchants from the two most extreme portions of the Asiatic continent squatting gravely face to face with their hands on one another's arms.

Not a word is exchanged, but concealed under those long sleeves the negotiations are in progress, the hand of one moving up and down the arm of the other, each motion and each pressure conveying some meaning. The method has, moreover, this advantage, that owing to the negotiations being thus carried on their nature remains hidden from the prying curiosity of the loungers standing around.

Other means of oriental communication, equally puzzling to the white man, no matter how long he has resided in the East, are, for instance, the marks on trees. Some twenty years ago the British authorities in India were much wrought up over the daubing of mango trees throughout the length and breadth of Hindustan, with patches of clay mingled with cow or buffalo hair—cattle being sacred in the eyes of the Hindus. Notwithstanding all the efforts of the English, it was found impossible to discover the perpetrators of this species of plastering, which was effected with the most astounding secrecy and rapidity, mango trees extending over an area of hundreds of square miles having been thus marked during the course of a single night.

That it constituted some secret signal or conveyed some hidden message the most erudite English students of Indian lore and history were convinced, and the veterans of the Anglo-Indian service recalled, not without concern, that the terrible native revolt of 1857, which literally deluged the Deccan with a sea of blood, was immediately preceded by the equally mysterious distribution of little unleavened cakes—chupatthies, they were called—among the people of India. They were passed around by unknown hands, and to this day the British government has been unable to obtain any clew as to who baked and who disseminated them. Equally at sea are the authorities as to the precise message which they were intended to convey, although the simultaneous outbreak of the insurrection immediately afterward in various parts of India far distant from one another has naturally led to the belief that they constituted some kind of prearranged signal for the great rising.

To Make Clothes Last.

Table linen is expensive. It costs more today than it did five years ago. When it begins to wear in holes, to come from the wash with worn spots that tell how soon it will be no good, no wonder the housewife despairs. Cheap, common soap full of caustic that eat the linen are greatly to blame. Easy Task laundry soap is an enemy to dirt and stains and a friend to the table linen. Get two five cent cakes; try it, and if it does not surprise and satisfy you the makers will return your money.

Compensation.

Nervous Passenger (on lake steamer)—It must be terrible to think of an accident happening to the boat while you are away down there in that hole.

Stoker—It's jist the other way, ma'am. If the boat sinks I won't have to go through more'n about half as much warter as you will 'fore I git to the bottom o' the lake.

"Mamma, did you ever notice how Uncle Jasper eats?"

"No, dear; it is impolite to watch your uncle while he is eating."

"But you don't have to watch him, mamma. You can hear him eat."

PERRY DAVIS' PAINKILLER

For a sudden chill or cold (instead of whiskey) use Painkiller. For colic, diarrhea and summer complaint this medicine never fails. 25c, 50c and $0c bottles.

What does that mean?

It means that the men that in a past generation would have been independent merchants are now the employes of these stores, and never can be anything else; employes on wages with time checks, fines, and their daily work dependent upon a manager's caprice. That is their prospect in life. It is hard (in some of its aspects), and we dislike to admit it, but it is the truth.

The gigantic department stores and mail order houses are built of the ruins of independent stores, just as the Christian churches of Rome were built of the fragments of the old temples, and each independent store destroyed is an independent merchant turned into a salaried employe.—Charles Edward Russell in Success Magazine.

Just a Chance.

"Yes, you offer the property low enough, Mr. Yipsley," said the real estate agent, "but it will be best for you to give some satisfactory reason for wanting to sell."

"The reason why I want to sell is that the property is all run down. It doesn't bring me 2 per cent on the money invested in it. I'm not offering it at a sacrifice. I don't need the money. I want to get rid of it, but I am asking all it's worth."

"Um—well, I'll list it for you, Mr. Yipsley," said the real estate agent. "It's barely possible that the novelty of the thing may attract some equally cranky purchaser."

THE CRIMINAL'S NEMESIS.
Arrival of the Sheriff.

—Minneapolis Journal.

THE MESSENGER.

O ship, ship, ship,
That travelest over the sea,
What are the tidings, I pray thee
Thou bearest hither to me?

Are they tidings of comfort and joy,
That shall make me seem to see
The sweet lips softly moving
And whispering love to me?

Or are they of trouble and grief,
Estrangement, sorrow and doubt,
To turn into torture my hopes
And drive me from paradise out?

O ship, ship, ship,
Thou comest over the sea,
Whatever it be thou bringest,
Come quickly with it to me.
—Arthur Hugh Clough.

HER CONVENIENT EXCUSE

"It's awfully sweet of you to think of it and I should love to go if I were well," said Mrs. Buckley over the telephone. "Oh, no, nothing serious, but I don't feel quite able to go out ——. Oh, yes, I shall be all right in a day or two. Thank you so much for asking me. Good-by."

Mrs. Buckley hung up the receiver with a sigh of relief. "I'm glad I had the presence of mind to decline," she said to herself. "I don't care at all for a stupid drive with Mrs. Drake. Besides, with the Hendersons coming to dinner to-night I've got too much to do this afternoon to waste time going round the park behind her old slow-coach horses."

Two hours later Mrs. Buckley was assisting the cook in the manufacture of a wonderfully complicated dessert when her husband burst into the room with an anxious frown on his brow.

"I've been looking all through the house for you, Nan," he said, a little impatiently. "I didn't expect to find you in the kitchen."

"Why not? How did you happen to come home so early, Tom?"

"I heard you were ill."

"Ill! Why I'm not a bit ill."

"So I see. But I met Drake at lunch and he told me you were so sick you couldn't go out for a drive with his wife. I naturally thought you had some sudden attack and no one had had sense enough to call me up, so I rushed home."

"You poor old dear," Mrs. Buckley laughed indulgently, as she continued to whip cream. "I had no idea you were so easily alarmed."

"Any one would have been alarmed by what Drake said. How in the world did he ever get the idea that you were sick?"

"Mrs. Drake telephoned me this morning, asking me to go driving, and as I didn't feel like it I said I wasn't well."

"Oh, that's it? Why didn't you say you didn't feel like it?"

"You know you can't say such things, Tom."

"Well, I rather think I can. However, since you're in no immediate danger I'll console myself with a little golf the rest of the afternoon."

"Very well, but come home early. You know the Hender——" Mrs. Buckley ceased speaking as the door closed none too gently behind her husband. "Any one would think," she smilingly mused, "that Tom was disappointed because I'm not sick."

At 6:30, after an extremely busy afternoon, Mrs. Buckley was dressed and waiting for husband and guests.

"Why in the world doesn't Tom come?" she fretted. "He'll surely keep dinner waiting while he's changing his clothes."

At 7 o'clock neither he nor the expected guests had arrived and Mrs. Buckley, tired and nervous, walked the floor of her flower-bedecked rooms.

"Well, here you are at last," she cried as Buckley appeared at 7:30. "What detained you? I've been almost wild."

"I didn't suppose you'd worry, Nan. You see, we started a foursome so late that——"

"But you knew you had to dress for dinner, Tom?"

"Dress for dinner? To-night?"

"Yes, of course. You know as well as I do that the Hendersons are coming. I can't understand why they're so late. It's inexcusable. I'll think twice before I invite them again. They should have been here an hour ago."

"But, Nan, they aren't coming."

"Aren't coming? What makes you think they're not coming?"

"Well, you see, after I left Drake to-day I ran into Henderson and I told him I was hurrying home because you were ill. He said he'd telephone his wife that the dinner was off. It was thoughtful of him, wasn't it?"

"Oh, very!" Mrs. Buckley spoke with much sarcasm. "It would have been very thoughtful of you to have mentioned to me that the Hendersons were not coming. Perhaps you think I like to work all day getting up a dinner for people who aren't coming."

For a moment Buckley looked a little crestfallen. Then, making a strong recovery, he said boldly: "But, my dear girl, I was so delighted to find you weren't really sick that the sense of relief drove every other thought out of my head."

"Except the thought of golf."

Again Buckley looked somewhat nonplussed, but in an instant he rallied.

"Hang it all, Nan, we wouldn't have had this muddle if you had told Mrs. Drake the truth in the first place."

"I can promise one thing, Thomas, dear; I won't indulge in another innocent fabrication very soon if I think there's the slightest possibility of its falling into your clumsy keeping."

"Well, then, truth is once more triumphant," laughed Tom. "And your company dinner won't be wasted, my dear, for I'm ravenous."—Chicago Daily News.

ODD FIVE-FOOT LIBRARY.

English, Russian and Yiddish Mingled in Girls' Collections.

Since Dr. Eliot came to the front with his interesting assertion that a five-foot shelf is large enough to hold all the books required for a liberal education, there have been published many lists of small libraries, the Scrap Book remarks. One of the most unusual was that of the collection made by four Russian girls, none of whom had been in this country more than six years.

These girls were involved in the New York city shirt-waist strike, and it was a mishap which befell one of the quartet which led reporters to their little rooms on the crowded east side, and the discovery of what may be termed "the ambitious immigrant's five-foot library."

First on the shelf and occupying the place of honor is Webster's unabridged dictionary. Next is "The Talmud." Then in order, "Lexicon of the Christian Bible" in Yiddish; Ruskin's "Queen of the Air," Owen Meredith's "Lucile," Walter Scott's "Anne of Geierstein," complete set of Shakespeare, Karl Marx's "Capital," in Russian with Hebrew notations; Charlotte M. Braeme's "Wedded and Parted" and "Weaker Than a Woman," Conan Doyle's "A Study in Scarlet," Charles and Mary Lamb's "Tales from Shakespeare," Washington Irving's "Rip Van Winkle," Elias Peretz's "Sketches," humorous, in Yiddish (not Hebrew); Oscar Wilde's "The Love," in Yiddish translation; Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Wonder Book for Girls and Boys," Jacob Sheftel's "The Moon and Stars" in Hebrew (not Yiddish); Leo Tolstoi's "The Resurrection," Oscar Wilde's play, "Salome," in English; D. M. Haramelan's "Free Love," in Hebrew; an English-Jewish dictionary, prayer book for the holidays in Hebrew; Martin G. Brumbaugh's "English Fifth Reader," "Lives and Stories Worth Remembering," a symposium of famous people; William H. Maxwell's "Introductory Lessons in English," Alonzo Reed's (Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute), "Higher Lessons in English," Margaret Stockman Dickson's "A Hundred Years of Warfare," Westall and Stepniak's "The Blind Musician," James Otis' "The Revolutionist" and many Hebrew and Russian religious books.

In the room were two plaster busts, bought, like books, with money saved from the daily cost of living by girls earning at most a dollar a day. The busts are of George Washington and Beethoven.

The variety betrays with really remarkable fidelity the intellectual thirst of the younger generation of Russians as well as its wide range of interests.

BUENOS AIRES TO VALPARAISO.

Wonderful Railroad Spanning South America to Be Finished Soon.

The most wonderful railway in the world will be completed, if all goes well, in the course of the next week or two, Pearson's Weekly says.

It is the first line to be carried across the continent of South America, and it has taken over thirty years to build. But its chief interest lies in the immense elevation it reaches in crossing the Andes.

Here the passenger will be literally and actually traveling above the clouds. At one point it soars to a height of 12,000 feet, more than 4,000 feet higher than the world-famous Great St. Bernard Pass.

The Atlantic terminus is at Buenos Aires in Argentina, the Pacific at Valparaiso in Chile, both tropical towns; yet the line runs for hundreds of miles through a region of eternal snow and ice.

Avalanches sweep the track at intervals at these immense altitudes. So, in order to protect the trains, sloping wooden sheds, enormously strong, have been built at these points. Under them engine and carriages will be able to travel in safety, even while the snow-slides are actually thundering overhead.

Among the other wonders of this most wonderful line are a spiral tunnel, absolutely unique of its kind, that cost over £1,000,000 to bore, and a string of 118 bridges, linked together by short stretches of solid, permanent way over a distance of thirty miles.

At one point, too, the track is carried over a deep and wide ravine on a huge arch of living rock, which constitutes a natural bridge.

THE POINT OF VIEW.

No man's opinions can be free from some kind of prejudice, conscious or unconscious. Two rich men, says a writer in the Philadelphia Ledger, were conversing. Both had retired from active business, and both, as befitted their stations in life, were commiserating over the things that money would not buy, and seeking a remedy for the evils which seemed to threaten their hard-earned assets and their serene enjoyment of their declining years.

"It seems to me that something or other will have to be done some time," said one.

"I believe you are right," said the other. "I have been thinking of writing a magazine article or two, setting forth my views on the subject."

"What a coincidence! So have I. What are you going to write about?"

"The unequal distribution of wealth and how to remedy it. Do you think that is a good subject?"

"Capital! What attitude are you going to take?"

"I am going to take the attitude that a more equitable distribution of wealth would not come amiss, and I think I know how to remedy it."

"Good! What is your remedy?"

"Well, in the first place, it would never do to disturb a man of wealth during his lifetime."

"Of course not!"

"On the other hand, however, I think it is a bad thing for young people to have large fortunes left them. Money not earned is not appreciated."

"That's true."

"Accordingly, I am going to take the stand that all property should revert to the state at the death of the man who amassed it. What do you think of that?"

"Won't do at all."

"Why not?"

"Um—ah—well—you see, I have children."

In the books a girl fights hard to keep a man from stealing a kiss, but in real life he can get one any time that needn't be snatched so abruptly it tastes of teeth.

After children are twenty-seven years old they should quit calling their father papa.

HOUSEHOLD TALKS

Asparagus Salad.

Cut off the tough ends of asparagus, then cut in inch lengths and boil tender in boiling salted water. Let cool in the liquid in which it has been cooked. For a pound of asparagus boil hard two eggs and dice one cupful of celery. Cut fine enough English walnut kernels to make half a cupful. To these ingredients add the asparagus drained from the liquid. Serve in nests made of fresh watercress and put a generous spoonful of mayonnaise on top of each serving. The egg should be thinly sliced.

Potato Soup.

Wash, peel and cut four medium-sized potatoes into small pieces, cover with cold water, salted, and cook until done. Have ready a pint of milk scalded in a double boiler, together with a tablespoonful of minced onion and a little celery or celery seed to flavor. Take the potatoes from the fire, turn off the water and mash. Thicken the milk with a tablespoonful of melted butter with a tablespoonful of flour, then add to the potato and mix. Add a tablespoonful of fine minced parsley and serve with crackers or croutons.

Rice Waffles.

These rice waffles, which are specially popular served as a course at a luncheon with brown sugar or maple syrup, are not at all difficult to achieve. Add to one cupful of freshly boiled rice, still hot, an ounce of butter and three eggs beaten to a froth. Add to two cupfuls of sour milk or cream a teaspoonful of salt and soda, then combine the two mixtures. Lastly, add flour to make a rather thick batter, turn into the well-greased and heated irons and bake.

Best Indian Pudding.

Put one pint sweet milk in double boiler on stove. Then take two tablespoonfuls corn meal, one-half cup molasses, a little salt, one-half teaspoonful cinnamon, one-half teaspoonful ginger. Mix these and add to milk; stir until it thickens; when cool add one beaten egg, one cup cold milk and one teaspoonful butter. Put into buttered dish and bake slowly one and one-half or two hours. Cover until last half hour.

Soft Cornbread.

Put one pint of milk over the fire When ready to boil add a little salt and one-half cupful of sifted corn meal stirred in slowly. Let this boil up once. Take from the fire and add the yolks of three eggs, one at a time, and without beating them. Stir the eggs well into the meal and milk. Beat the whites to a stiff froth and add last. Pour into an ungreased pan and bake in a moderate oven. This is really like a corn meal omelet.

Cheese Souffle.

Two tablespoons of butter in a double boiler. Add one heaping tablespoonful of flour. When smooth add one-half cup of milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt, a little pepper. Cook two minutes. Add the yolks of three eggs, well beaten, one cup of good grated cheese. Set away till cool. Then add the whites of three eggs, well beaten. Turn into a buttered dish and bake twenty-five to thirty minutes.

Chicken Patties.

Remove the skin from a chicken, pick all the meat from the bones and pound to a pulp; soften half a pound of bread crumbs in milk, take out and press dry, then rub three ounces of warmed butter into it, add a teaspoonful of summer savory, put in the meat, a little grated nutmeg and salt; moisten with the yolks of four eggs and bake in patty shells.

Banana Rolls.

Peel some bananas and cut them in halves lengthwise. Squeeze some lemon juice on to a deep plate, and roll the banana slices with castor sugar. Have ready some short pastry. Roll the banana halves in this and close up the ends by moistening with lemon juice. Brush the rolls over with beaten egg, prick lightly with a fork and place on a greased baking tin. Bake in a good oven till brown.

Fig Pudding.

Take a cupful of stale bits of bread, moisten with two tablespoonfuls of melted butter, a cupful of milk, two well-beaten eggs, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, a pinch of salt, and add to this mixture one-half pint of chopped figs. After stirring, steam an hour in a buttered double boiler. Serve with lemon sauce.

Cement for Tinware.

An excellent cement for mending tinware is made by mixing litharge and glycerin to the consistency of thick cream or putty. The mended article must not be used until the cement has had time to dry, which may be a week or more. The litharge can be secured at drug stores.

Rhubarb Pie.

One cup chopped rhubarb (all solid, no juice), one cup of sugar, yolks of two eggs, one dessertspoonful of flour; mix well and flavor with lemon extract. Beat two whites and brown. If you do not care for the meringue on top, use only one egg. Tastes like lemon pie.

Quick Brown Bread.

Two cups graham flour, one cup sour milk, one-half cup molasses, two tablespoons sugar, pinch of salt, one teaspoon soda in two tablespoons warm water, three-fourths cup raisins chopped and floured; bake forty minutes in a moderate oven. Excellent.

Maple Filling for Cake.

Boil one cupful of maple sirup until it "hairs" off the spoon. Add the white of one egg, beaten until stiff, and stir the mixture until smooth and creamy.

Answer This Question

When shown positive and reliable proof that a certain remedy had cured numerous cases of female ills, wouldn't any sensible woman conclude that the same remedy would also benefit her if suffering with the same trouble?

Here are two letters which prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Fitchville, Ohio.—"My daughter was all run down, suffered from pains in her side, head and limbs, and could walk but a short distance at a time. She came very near having nervous prostration, had begun to cough a good deal, and seemed melancholy by spells. She tried two doctors but got little help. Since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, Blood Purifier and Liver Pills she has improved so much that she feels and looks like another girl."—Mrs. C. Cole, Fitchville, Ohio.

Irasburg, Vermont.—"I feel it my duty to say a few words in praise of your medicine. When I began taking it I had been very sick with kidney and bladder troubles and nervous prostration. I am now taking the sixth bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and find myself greatly improved. My friends who call to see me have noticed a great change."—Mrs. A. H. Sanborn, Irasburg, Vermont.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful—or that either of these women were paid in any way for their testimonials, or that the letters are published without their permission, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

What more proof can any one ask?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

Women Construct Sidewalks.

A novel town improvement has been started in the Glen Park district in California, in which the women of that section take a prominent part. The women are engaged in a successful sidewalk crusade, having for its object the laying of cement sidewalks throughout the district. They have contracted with a rock dealer, a member of the local improvement club, for the necessary material for the purpose at half the usual price. A teamster, also a member of the association, hauls their material at a little over half the usual price, and a sidewalk builder is engaged to supervise the work and see that it is done properly.

The labor itself is done by the women and children of the neighborhood, who crush and pound the rock into place, pull up the forms, relay them, ride with the teamsters and assist in loading and unloading the wagons. Their method of procedure brings the cost of their sidewalks considerably below the regular price.

Famous Men Who Never Married.

Among the illustrious men who passed through life in single blessedness may be mentioned Sir Isaac Newton, Thomas Hobbes, author of "The Leviathan;" Adam Smith, the father of political economy; Chamfert, the greatest of French talkers; Gassendi, Galilei, Descartes, Spinoza, Locke, Kant, Bishop Butler, the author of "Analogy;" Bayle, Leibnitz, Hume, Gibbon, Macauley, Buckle, Pitt, Charles James Fox, Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael, Michelangelo, Sir Joshua Reynolds, the artist Turner, Handel, Beethoven, Schopenhauer, Rossini, Mendelssohn and Meyerbeer.—Detroit Journal.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children teething; softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic. 25 cents a bottle.

The Matter Explained.

"Why do they say 'as smart as a steel trap?'" asked the talkative boarder. "I never could see anything particularly intellectual about a steel trap."

"A steel trap is called smart," explained the elderly person in his sweetest voice, "because it knows exactly the right time to shut up."

More might have been said, but in the circumstances it would have seemed unfitting.—London Tit-Bits.

Silence!

The instinct of modesty natural to every woman is often a great hindrance to the cure of womanly diseases. Women shrink from the personal questions of the local physician which seem indelicate. The thought of examination is abhorrent to them, and so they endure in silence a condition of disease which surely progresses from bad to worse.

It has been Dr. Pierce's privilege to cure a great many women who have found a refuge for modesty in his offer of FREE consultation by letter. All correspondence is held as sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription restores and regulates the womanly functions, abolishes pain and builds up and puts the finishing touch of health on every weak woman who gives it a fair trial.

EDWARD MAY, Your Tailor

REAL LIVE WASHINGTON GOSSIP

(BY TAVENNER)

Indications are that Congress will pass, over the protest of democrats and progressives, a railroad regulation bill that will not provide for a physical valuation of railroads.

The millionaire colony of the senate, some of the members of which own stock in railroads, fought desperately to kill every physical valuation amendment proposed.

A physical valuation would expose to the country the extent to which railroad stocks have been watered, and would, therefore, tend to prevent overcapitalization in the future and pave the way for reasonable freight and passenger rates. This is why the railroads fear it.

The interstate Commerce commission partisan republican in make-up, has recommended physical valuation year after year. The commission, in its last annual report, somewhat hopelessly, as if realizing the extent to which railroads dominate Congress, says: "The commission has, in previous reports, expressed the opinion that it would be wise for Congress to make provision for a physical valuation of railroad properties, and desires to reaffirm in this report its confidence in the wisdom of such a measure."

Physical valuation was recommended by Roosevelt time and again. This, by the way, is at least one Roosevelt policy that Mr. Taft has deserted cold-bloodedly. Taft has raised neither voice nor pen on behalf of physical valuation, and it is understood that the idea is antagonistic to his pro-railroad temperament.

Yet the Supreme court, in the Nebraska rate case, held that "the basis of all calculation as to the reasonableness of rates must be the fair value of the property being used for the convenience of the public."

As progressive legislation, a railroad regulation bill without a provision for physical valuation, is a farce.

The national democratic platform of 1908 declared in vigorous language for "efficient supervision and rate regulation of railroads" and to that end strongly recommended the taking of a physical valuation by the Interstate Commerce commission.

But when it is considered that Harriman contributed $260,000 to the republican campaign fund on behalf of the railroads, that probably numerous other railroad magnates advanced equally large sums, and that the very bill Congress is about to place upon the statute books was originally drawn in New York and submitted to the railroad interests before being introduced in Congress, it is not so strange that the physical valuates amendments received ther death stabs even after passed by a goodly majority in the House of Representatives.

Oh, American people, you must be more vigilent than you are if would continue to deserve the title of a patriotic people!

Bratton Not a Candidate

Judge E. A. Bratton is not a candidate for congress, not even a receptive candidate. In fact he has not the remotest idea of seeking any purely political office. He did seek the nomination for appellate judge but filling that office is right in line with the profession chosen as his life's work years ago and he has no notion of departing from the path trodden so long.

During the past few days some of the democratic papers in the Twelfth congressional district have been mentioning him as a probable candidate against Cyrus Cline of Angola. But the judge absolutely declares he is not in line for it nor will he get in line. —Dispatch.

A Fisherman's View of Law

Judge Stephen A. Powers, of Angola, who is not only a fisherman but a good lawyer as well, sees some inequalities in the fish law and comments as follows:

"I noticed an article in the Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette in reference to the licensing of fishermen. In our county we have 100 lakes, many of them beautiful sheets of water. In the early days we had good fishing. I have myself pulled in a few bass and pickerel from Crooked, James and other lakes. Before the advent of the sports and before the present fish law was enacted we had plenty of fish.

Our pioneers, who settled the county and many of whom chose their habitation on the shores of these lakes, or inland ponds, with their children in their natural freedom, unrestrained by any laws, spent many happy days with hook and line and many joyous nights with the old fashioned hickory bark torch.

Under the law the adjacent land owners hold to the quarter section line, although it may be covered with water, and the people of the county where these lakes exist have inherent rights which the sportsman from abroad must not by force or law take away. If a country boy catches a bluegill "unlawfully," he is hounded to the rack by the fish wardens and mulcted in great costs. But last Sunday I saw a "sportsman" carry away from Lake James two strings of fish so long that he could not hold them up high enough to keep them from trailing along the ground. I guess if we should go back to our old ways and give the common people a chance we would have as many fish and as much joy for the masses as we would by licensing the boys and girls of our lake counties to catch fish.

I guess if we could spear carp and dogfish (I saw a dogfish opened the other day that had 200,000 eggs in it) and big destructive fish, and restrain non-residents of our lake counties from carrying off our fish and require them to take out licenses to fish at all and let our country boys and girls in lake counties go free, the American people of the rural districts would rise up and call their country senators blessed.

KEEP THE KIDNEYS WELL

Health is Worth Saving, and Some Butler People Know How to Save It

Many Butler people take their lives in their hands by neglecting the kidneys when they know these organs need help. Sick kidneys are responsible for a vast amount of suffering and ill health, but there is no need to suffer nor to remain in danger when all diseases and aches and pains due to weak kidneys can be quickly and permanently cured by the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. Here is a Butler citizen's recommendation.

Henry Barnhart, Butler, Ind., says: "I used three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills about a year ago and can say that they benefited me greatly. I had sciatic rheumatism in my left limb and could not put my feet to the ground. I knew that my kidneys were out of order, as the secretions were highly colored and filled with sediment. Learning of Doan's Kidney Pills, I procured a supply at Phillips' drug store and after using them a short time, I was entirely relieved. I have not been bothered by kidney complaint since. I have told several other people about my experience with Doan's Kidney Pills."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

POWERS IS NAMED FOR JUDGE

Excellent Choice Made in DeKalb-Steuben Circuit—Good Man is Nominated for Bench

WATERLOO, Ind., June 9.—Frank M. Powers, of Angola, was unanimously nominated for the judgeship of DeKalb-Steuben circuit court at the democratic judicial convention held in this place this afternoon. On motion of Attorney Ed Atkinson, the democratic ticket is to be left blank so far as the officer of the prosecuting attorney is concerned.

The convention was attended by nearly every delegate and was a very enthusiastic one and when the name of Frank Powers was presented hearty applause was brought forth. The delegates certainly entertained but one opinion, that of nominating and electing Mr. Powers to the judgeship of the DeKalb-Steuben circuit and they will bend every effort to do so.

Chairman Kircher of DeKalb county, called the meeting to order at 2 o'clock and after making a few remarks in which he stated it was plainly evident that the democrats were not yet willing to abide to the will of the republicans he asked that the permanent chairman be named. Charles Brown, of Auburn, was made the chairman, while William H. Leas, of this city, was chosen as secretary.

When nominations for the judgeship were called for, Attorney Charles A. Yotter, of Angola, came forward and in glowing sentences presented the name of Mr. Powers. Mr. Yotter told of his personal friendship and personal acquaintance with Mr. Powers and voiced the opinion that he was the very man for the office. It was then moved that Mr. Powers be nominated by acclamation which was done and every delegate together with all democrats present arose to their feet, thus sanctioning his nomination.

Mr. Powers came forward and gave a short address in which he expressed great appreciation for the honor bestowed on him. He stated that inas much as his fellow democrats had selected him as their representative he would put forth every effort to secure his election in November. "I have grown fond of the peace and quietude of my home life, I am proud of the friends I have made during my twenty-five years practice as a lawyer, but I feel it my duty at this time to grant the request of the democratic party and appear for them on the ticket at the coming elections because I feel it the duty to respond when I have been urged and told that I was wanted. I now enter this race with the determination to win and I expect to do so with the help of the people."

Mr. Powers also gave his views regarding the duties of the judge when sitting on the bench and stated that it was a place where justice to all, the rich and poor and the democrats and republicans or any other party members, should be given. In conclusion the speaker said: "I shall go forth from this convention to carry my case before the voters with confidence of a victory."

William Troyer, of Butler, suggested that the prosecuting attorney's office be left vacant and after the motion by Mr. Atkinson to that effect was made, this was unanimously favored. The meeting was then adjourned after being in session for an hour and every one in the house made it a point to grasp the hand of the candidate in congratulations.

Mr. Powers is fifty years old, and was born in York township, Steuben county. He has always lived in that county. When a young man he liked the law and soon became an apprentice in the law office of Woodhull & Croxton, of Angola, and received his legal education under the instruction of the Hon. Joseph A. Woodhull, who was at one time judge of this circuit, and is at present the oldest practitioner in this judicial district. Mr. Powers has practiced law over 25 years. For 15 years he was associated with W. G. Croxton until the latter's death and for five years he has been in partnership with John G. Yeagley.

GOV. MARSHALL SPEAKS TO LABORERS

"No Man Need Be Ashame For Working With His Hands" Said the Governor

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., June 16.—Special—Governor Thomas R. Marshall's great popularity with the laboring class on the one hand and his devotion to the man who works with his hands on the other have not been demonstrated in a more striking way recently than upon the occasion of his appearance the other day at the plant of the T. B. Laycock Manufacturing Company at Indianapolis as the guest of honor at a dinner which the company gave its 350 employes. The Governor delivered an address upon this occasion and said some notable things on the subject of the relationship between capital and labor.

In the first place, the Governor stretched a point to be able to address the men at the bed factory. When he returned from a southern trip a short time ago, the Governor found that his popularity had by no means waned. He found on his desk enough requests for speeches to have taken a better part of his time for many week to come. But it has been his policy to look after the State's business first, and so he declined most of the invitations. It was after he had made all the engagements he felt he could make that the invitation to address the employees of the Laycock company came and his interest in laboring people prompted him to accept the invitation.

The Laycock company maintains for its employees a dining room where meals are served at cost to them each noon, a large library, shower baths, a factory garden, a diary and a number of other things which go toward making their lives and their work more agreeable to them and these things were of deep interest to the governor. Referring to these features of the plant the Governor said all that capitul and labor needed in the solution of the difficulties that have existed between them is a better understanding that the chief need is for each of these great classes to come to a full and proper understanding of the other and to come to a realization of the fact that there is a mutuality of interests between them such as they only too often fail to appreciate.

The Governor was of the opinion that the case of the Laycock plant, the actual duties of the one class towards the other had been appreciated to a very large degree and he believed the day would come in Indiana when such conditions would be the rule rather than the exception. Addressing the bed factory men, the Governor said:

"No man need be ashamed for working with his hands. He should be proud of it. And I believe you are. When a man who works does the best he can, he is as good as any other man in this country. Why, a ditch-digger can be a better man than the President of the United States providing he is a better ditch-digger than the President is a President. My best word for you, he said, is that you endeavor to maintain the friendly relations which now exist between you and the men who manage this institutian. I do not know them well, but from what I have seen and heard here today, I believe of them that as they succeed, so will you. I am sure you cannot succeed unless they succeed and they cannot succeed unless you can. This is not merely an institution of dollars and cents, buildings and grounds, but is an institution such as, please God, there will be many more of in Indiana in time to come."

Governor Marshall told the laboring men that everybody who amounted to anything in this country works and that honest toil, of whatever character a man's life work demanded, was the most honorable thing in life. He told them not to covet the state of the rich man, for he said the more a man has, the more he seems to need and want. He said he knew he really had a better time on $1,000 a year when his sucome was limited to that amount than he has now with a Governor's salary.

The Governor was received very enthusiastically by the working people and returned the compliment at the end of his speech by going to the door leading from the big dining hall and greeting every employee as he left the room.

An interesting feature of the program which the company prepared for the entertainment of the Governor was the publication of an "extra edition" of Factory News, the publication the company regularly issues for its employees. This "extra" was in the form of a four page newspaper, with a big picture of the Governor on the first page. After the Governor, the other prominent men invited and the employees were seated, half a dozen "newsies" rushed into the dining room calling "Huxtrie"! Gov'nor Here! Huxtrie 'dition!" and the paper made a decided hit.

Henry Clay.

Many able men have preferred to be in the house of representatives rather than in the senate. Henry Clay liked the turbulence of the lower chamber better than the solemn stillness of the other branch. He began his real political career there in 1811, although he was in the senate as early as 1806. Clay's service in national office extended to his death in 1852, while he was a member of the senate. It covered a period of forty-six years in all, though part of the time he was in private life.—Argonaut.

SMILES AND KIND WORDS.

"A smile can do wonders, and a kind word can do wonders. Two smiles can do more than one, and two kind words can do more than one kind word. It comes down to a simple problem of arithmetic. If one smile and one kind word may serve to make one tired heart happy, how many tired hearts can a dozen smiles and a dozen kind words make happy? The problem is simple. Don't be stingy with your smiles and your kind words."

What He Is Called.

A teacher in one of the lower grade schools was instructing a class in the departments of the national government recently and came finally to the customs department. "When an ocean liner reaches Philadelphia," said the teacher, "a man all dressed up in uniform meets the passengers and takes all they have and inspects it. Now, can any one in the class tell me what that man is called?" A ready hand in the last row flew up. "Well, Tommy?" "Please, ma'am, he's called a pirate." —Argonaut.

A Pathetic Appeal.

"When Wolseley conquered Cetewayo," said an English officer, "he took nearly all his wives away from him. I believe he only left the monarch a half dozen or thereabouts. Cetewayo day after day sent piteous messages to Wolseley pleading for the rest of his wives, but the British soldier refused sternly. When Wolseley came to leave the country Cetewayo, in despair, sent this message to him:

"'If you will not send me any more wives will you not, at least be enough of a gentleman to exchange the six I have for six others?'"

W. R. Holden thinks a "Booster's Club" would be a good organization for Butler, and the HERALD concurs. Certainly anyone who has any interests in the town is anxious to see it improve, if no more than for a selfish purpose. But wouldn't a united effort be much more effectual than the old way of each man boosting his own business? All pulling together and boosting for each other could not help but result in strengthening the commercial interests and make a lively town.

Will Carleton was greeted at the Thompson opera house in this city, last Thursday evening, by about seven hundred people. His entertainment, which consisted of a lecture and a few recitations from his own pen, was greatly appreciated by the large audience. Many people went for the sole purpose of seeing the author, and were very agreeably surprised with his fine lecture. He was a guest at the banquet in the afternoon given by the Uniform Rank of the Knights of Pythias, and during his stay in the city was entertained at the home of D. H. Knisely. Although the author held his audience for nearly two hours, not a person left the room, and many would have gladly stayed another hour. He did not recite any of his early poems, which was the only disappointment to his entertainment. Carleton is in a class by himself so far as lecturing. He gets away from the long beaten paths of other lecturers in way of orignality. Butler people have heard one of the world's greatest characters, and the thanks are due to the progressive efforts of the committee which secured his service.

Some interesting statistics about the migratory habits of a portion of the human race have been collected by a great city gas company. It was found, for example, that in the course of thirty-two months 132 families moved into and out of one tenement building. During the same period a single apartment sheltered twenty-five different families. Surely the philosophy of Poor Richard must be at fault, for in these cases "three removes" could not have been "as bad as a fire."

Artemus Ward said that a comic paper was no worse for having a joke in it now and then, and his words have ever since been quoted as embodying the gospel of wit and humor. The great form of American mirth is the joke. "It is to laugh"—that's our creed in a sentence. Misplaced capitals, awkward spelling, impossible grammar, infinite incongruity of situation, endless word-play, grotesquery of action and character, heightened by pictures equally funny, these are the things that make us laugh. We are quick to catch the point of a cartoon, to enjoy the exaggeration of a caricature. But to smile at the mock-serious, to be amused by satire, is a refinement as yet beyond us.

Probably half in jest, Anthony J. Drexel, multi-millionaire of Philadelphia, expressed his consternation over the cost of a breakfast at one of New York's splurge hotels. He ordered two eggs and a cup of coffee and the bill was $1.75. "A man's wages for a day," he remarked—"not for me," he added, "but for many just as good a man." Of course, the many just-as-good men don't pay that price for eggs. They can buy a dozen for what Mr. Drexel paid for his coffee, and they can drink coffee a week on what Mr. Drexel paid for one of his eggs. Nevertheless, the price Mr. Drexel pays has its influence upon what the common man pays. Under the cold storage system the great companies can hold up the supply of eggs, and then, if they can sell the fresh eggs in New York to absurd hotels for a monstrous price, they will add something to the price the common man pays for storage eggs. The rich people of to-day have a chance to make a dent upon the price of living by assuming the virtue, if they have it not, of demanding their money's worth, and refusing to give away their money simply because it comes easy. The virtues of abstinence are as open to the rich as to the poor.

Where there is a rapid growth in a country there is always a tendency to overestimate the population. This falls in with the plans of boomers and even gives pleasure to disinterested patriots. No doubt it is felt in Canada just now, and the fever of it may have got into the blood of Sydney Fisher, minister of agriculture, who predicts that the census of 1911 will show that the Dominion has 8,000,000 inhabitants. However this may be, there have been changes enough in the last ten years to make the development of Canada one of the most interesting studies of the time. During the latter part of the last century the growth of the country had been slow. The population, which was 4,324,810 in 1881, increased to 4,833,239 in 1891 and to 5,371,315 in 1901, making a small percentage for the twenty years. But though complete figures are lacking, it is certain that there has been an astonishing change since the beginning of the present century. The Province of Manitoba, which had a population of 255,211 in 1901, had increased to 365,688 in 1906, and in the same period Alberta had advanced from 72,841 to 185,412 and Saskatchewan from 91,466 to 257,763. In 1901 the number of people from the United States was placed at 127,899. The immigration from the United States alone in the year 1909 was more than 90,000, and the current has been strong for several years. It is to be noted also that the newcomers from this country take capital with them, and the estimate of the Canadian immigration commissioner is that these immigrants added to the wealth of western Canada at least $90,000,000. That the country will prove attractive from now on is highly probable, because it offers inviting farms to settlers, and its fame as a wheat field is constantly increasing. The crop of last year was valued at $120,000,000, and each year sees a large increase in the acreage devoted to wheat cultivation.

PHYSICAL EXERCISE.

English Physician Says It Is Not Good for Office Workers.

A distinguished London physician, Dr. Alexander Bryce, has started a discussion by asserting that office workers should not take exercise after their day's work. He says:

"The root reason is that though head work is not exercise in the sense that it develops the body, it most decidedly is exercise in that it quickly induces 'fag' and physical lassitude. So it is almost pathetic for a man to expect any good to come from taking more exercise when the exercise involved in the day's work has already tired him out.

"One takes it that young people have had sufficient outdoor exercise to reasonably develop their frames before beginning office work. So when once they have started in the office in earnest it is much better for them to realize at once that their days of hard physical strain are over and done with, and that henceforth they must confine these efforts to week-ends and holidays. They can follow this advice calmly enough, for it does not mean at all that they are going to deteriorate suddenly into wrecks.

"The body and system easily attune themselves to circumstances, even to over-civilized and consequently rather unnatural circumstances, and indoor head workers will soon find that a very decent state of health can be maintained with little or no apparent exercise.

"For all people living under the undoubted inconvenience of earning a livelihood a most excellent rule of thumb in regard to this much misunderstood question of work and exercise is the following: Never try to mix the two, and stop exercising at once if you do not find that it gives you real enjoyment.

"And I need only add," he concluded, "that the rational way home after a day's work in the office is by train, tram or omnibus, not walking, and that the proper time for real exercise is when no thought of work need intervene for at least forty-eight hours after the exercise has stopped."

ITINERANT NEWSMEN.

Owing to the wide-spread illiteracy among the poorer classes in Mexico, public newspaper readers have become a feature of Mexican life. Few men of the peon class are able to read or write. Consequently the newspaper-reader is enabled to earn a living by making the rounds of the drinking places and reciting the news of the day. In "Mexico, the Wonderland of the South," W. E. Carson tells of this custom.

A certain amount of literary skill is required to follow this strange calling successfully; the reader is, in fact, a sort of peripatetic news distributor. He selects only two or three items which he knows will interest his audience. The Orizaban reader, for example, started with the most important topic of the day. He read an article which discussed the financial panic then in progress in the United States, and the hard times it had caused in Mexico through the closing of mines and other enterprises controlled by Americans. Things were improving said the newspaper, and thousands of Mexicans who had lost employment would soon be going back to work and earning plenty of money to buy food and drink.

The reader next selected what journalists would term a "human interest" story. In tragic tones, with appropriate gestures, he entertained his audience with a dispatch from northern Mexico which related how a drink-crazed peasant had set fire to the hut of a neighbor with whom he had a feud, and had shot down his enemy as he attempted to escape. Pursued by the rurales, the murderer had fallen, riddled with bullets, after opening fire on his pursuers.

This "top of the column" story seemed to excite intense interest. Leaping down from his perch on a barrel, the reader went round, sombrero in hand, and made a collection; then bowing politely, with a "Buenos dias, senores!" he sauntered off to the next drinking-place.

Polyglot Dialect.

"How do you like my new Japanese dialect stories?" inquired the budding author of the eminent traveler. The latter smiled.

"They read," he answered, "like a combination of Chinese, Cingalese, Bengalese, Javanese, Maltese and slangese. Aside from this they are pretty fair."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Nearly every man wants to lay off every time he sees a flag, or hears a band.

"Lest We Forget."

Even permitting the Republicans themselves to be judges, the Democracy is on its way to victory in the fall elections. The most benighted partisan must admit it is highly probable that a Democratic majority will organize the next House of Representatives. It is, in fact, so far certain that we can well afford to drop for a moment the conventional language of political enthusiasm and face, in seriousness and sobriety, the responsibility so soon to be thrust upon us. For there are two facts we cannot ignore, except at our peril.

The speech of partisanship ascribes all wisdom to itself and all folly and fatuity to its adversaries; in its phrases, the great day of a party's life is election day, and the victory of the ticket means the salvation of the country. We all know how far the truth is from all this. There are mixtures of purpose and of ability in all parties; election day is often for the victors—as with the Republicans in 1908—but the beginning of sorrows. The winning of elections is a small matter; the great thing is the carrying out of pledges.

When the Democracy carries the Congressional elections next fall it will not carry them on the tenets of its platform alone. The Republicans saw the handwriting on the wall two years ago and promised downward revision of the tariff; and in matters of conservation, the regulation of transportation and the control of abuses of corporate power the avowed position of the two parties is much the same. But the Republicans have not moral power enough to give to the country the things which they promised; the nation will turn to the Democracy to get precisely the things it vainly hoped to realize from the vote of 1908. The Republicans having come to the Democratic position on the tariff, so far as promises are concerned, the contest is based upon confidence in moral power rather than an opinion.

Now the other great fact is that the opportunity to execute the mandate given by the people when they go to the polls next November will not come at once. Even if a Democratic majority is elected it cannot organize the House until December, 1911, unless President Taft should decide to convene a special session at an earlier date, as he did in case of the present Congress. Political revolutions move slowly under the peculiar checks of the Federal Constitution, and the process of transferring the Government from one party organization to another is a matter involving months of delay. The most radical upheaval would only suffice to bring a Democratic House thirteen months after the election, while the limit of possibility in the Senate makes change of control there impossible before March, 1912.

But the American people will not wait this long for Democracy to prove its fitness for power. Before it can possibly control both houses it will be on trial. As soon as the House is organized with a Democratic Speaker the hour for action will have arrived, and by the time the first session of the Sixty-second Congress has adjourned the country will have made up its mind exactly what measure of confidence Democracy is entitled to; and it will have formed its opinion mainly upon the character of the men in the lead in the lower house. The use they make of their power, the extent to which they make necessary legislation possible by co-operation with the Senate and the Executive, above all the shape they give to the measures which come from their hands—these things will guide the country's future choice. If the Senate proves reactionary the House will be shaping bills which it knows will never become law, and the temptation to pander to a cheap popularity will be strong. But if it fall before them the country will know and mark the fact.

Now it will be easy to be elected to Congress on the Democratic ticket this fall, and short-sighted politicians will therefore crowd each other for the nominations. Party leaders should see to it that only the best and brainiest men are placed on guard—that a facile success be not permitted to throw away the opportunity of the party. Democratic Congressmen must remember the difference between criticism in opposition and the shaping of measures which, though they fail of passage, will rightly be accepted by the country as measuring the power of the Democracy for constructive legislation. This is no time for loose talk about triumphant Democracy. An off-year triumph can easily prove a demon's legacy. If the choice of Congressmen be not dictated by the highest motives of patriotism the victory will be valueless.—St. Louis Republic.

Cause for Expensive Living.

Another cause of the higher cost of living—one which is especially operative in the United States and the Continental countries of Europe—is the increasing rates of customs tariffs and of taxation due to militarism. It is impossible to attribute the generally higher prices due to the heavy load of taxation laid upon the consumer to a general cause, like the cheapening of gold. In the United States the enormous sums spent by our national government on harbors and rivers, on pensions, on the army, and especially on the new navy, must be paid for by somebody, and that somebody is the consumer of the taxed goods. On an average imported dutiable goods are increased in price to the American consumer by over 40 per cent. But, to the extent that importations are impeded, not all of this tax of over 40 per cent goes to the government, but much of it goes to the protected interests. The duties are so high as not to be revenue duties, and our treasury gets only about $300,000,000 of this tax, or less than half of its annual expenditure. The truth is just coming home to the mass of the people that our extremely high protective duties have raised the expenses of producing many goods, raised prices and raised the cost of living to every family throughout the length and breadth of the land. This is one reason why industrial activity to-day spells "hard times" for the unorganized consumer.

Some of our public men are not dealing fairly with the people when they direct attention solely to the Payne-Aldrich act of 1909, and assert it has in some respects lowered duties. Suppose that it had done so, as compared with the Dingley act of 1897? Then, that only transfers the cause of offending to the duties fixed by the Dingley act, which were, on the whole, the highest in our list of high-tariff enactments. It is no comfort to a drowning man in forty feet of water to be told that just back of him the water was forty-one feet deep. It is no comfort to the consumer, submerged by import duties of 40 or a hundred or several hundred per cent, to be told that a microscope will discover a fractional change of a per cent here and there—when in fact hosiery, gloves and clothing bear increased duties.—J. Laurence Laughlin, in Scribner's.

The First Gun in Iowa.

Ten thousand insurgent Republicans, cheering Jonathan P. Dolliver and Albert B. Cummins as they excoriated the Taft administration and denounced Aldrich at Des Moines the other night, spoke the unmistakable sentiment of Iowa.

Senator Dolliver's masterly analysis of the unspeakable Aldrich-Taft tariff and its multitude of deceits, and Senator Cummins' open charge that Aldrich is allied with the Guggenheims and Thomas F. Ryan in the rubber trust of Congo iniquity and the looting Alaska scheme are enough to shake even the remote strongholds of Eastern money.

The first gun in the Iowa campaign was a broadside. Hull, Smith, Towner and Kennedy, the four Iowa standpatters in the lower house, will consult their own interests by dropping out of the contest and making way for progressive Westerners, who cannot be used as tools by Aldrich and his New England mill bosses.

Thanks to Dolliver and Cummins, Iowa will register its protest next November against the Aldrich-Taft tariff, with its high cost of living, and the whole fabric of standpat graft and bribery that rears itself from Washington to Alaska.—Chicago Journal.

The Senate Uprising.

Political pessimists predict that, even with a Democratic House of Representatives, tariff reformers can not make much headway against a hide-bound Senate. These doleful prophecies are groundless. Events foreshadow the disintegration of the standpat majority in the United States Senate in the near future. Aldrich has ruled the Senate by methods that most of his henchmen secretly despise. With the passing of Aldrich, and his chief lieutenant, Hale, there will be an entirely new deal. Aldrich packed the Senate committees at will. All chairmanships and most of the committee memberships have been given to his standpat followers. Aldrich's view of legitimate politics is shown by his brazen refusal to put any Republican "insurgent" on an important committee. Even the crumbs were denied these rebellious ones.

All this will change with the breaking up of the "old guard." There will be an influx of new Senators. There will be new committee arrangements. There is no possibility of the coming Senate leadership being a repetition of Aldrichism. The insurgent Republican Senators are already strong enough to prevent such a catastrophe. And they are growing stronger. The august Senate is feeling the force of public opinion protesting against the tariff and its high cost of living as keenly as the more popular body, the House of Representatives. The people will not tolerate a reactionary "House of Lords" standing in the way of real tariff revision.—Chicago Journal.

Writing the Platforms.

Senator Beveridge's suggestion that the coming struggle is "between the people and the powers of pillage" should sink deeply into the minds of platform writers in this campaign. The appeal for votes by the progressive element must get away from platitudes. It must treat party shibboleths with disdain.

There is not a shadow of doubt that a majority of the American people believe the tariff to be the stronghold of special privilege. They are convinced that the Aldrich-Taft revision did not break these chains of privilege. The people want the tariff revised—not by friends of the tariff, but by friends of the people. No real revision is possible by the paid attorneys of trusts. In appealing for votes, therefore, progressive platform writers should keep uppermost this central truth—that it is not a struggle between political parties at all, but between the people and the money power.

Let the platforms be simple and direct, going to the root of this nation's greatest economic affliction. A trust-controlled tariff is a public enemy, and the people are ready to fight it under proper leadership. The waving of party banners will not do this year. The old battle-cries will not help a revival of national conscience. Besides being simply stated, the platforms of the progressives in all States should set out in clear and precise terms that the battle between men and money knows no sectional bounds.

The world's production of corn has reached the enormous figure of 90,000,000 tons a year.

WILL IT STAND THE PRESSURE?

Economical Cistern Filter.

A practical filter is necessary for the cistern. One may be constructed of any good, sound oak barrel, as shown in the illustration herewith. One head is removed and several holes bored in it. It is then dropped inside and forms a false bottom, as shown, leaving a clear space between it and the bottom or head proper. Six or seven inches of coarse gravel or broken stone are next placed on the false bottom, and on this stone a layer of charcoal six or seven inches thick is placed, and on the charcoal a second layer of stone or gravel. In all it should be about eighteen or twenty inches thick. The water enters the barrel at the bottom between the head and the false bottom through the regular down spout, which is clearly illustrated. It passed up through the gravel and charcoal and out at the top through a second pipe which leads to the cistern. The top layer of stone may be improved on by filling the voids between the stone with sand. The sand is covered with cheesecloth stretched on a wire and the cloth and wire held in place with one or two stones. A small wooden plug or faucet is placed at the lower end of the barrel to drain same after a rain or when washing out the filter. Give the barrel two or three coats of paint, provide a close fitting cover and your filter will do the work just as well as any twenty-five dollar filter in the land.

Unique Door for the Pigpen.

A very convenient way of feeding pigs was observed in the swinehouse of a prominent breeder, an arrangement that made the tridaily feedings a matter of so little difficulty that a child could place the feed before a pen of unruly noses.

The front of each pen was hinged at the top, swinging downward against the farther sides of the uprights, as here shown, the weight of the door being sufficient to hold it in place. On the front of the door is a vertical bar with a pin through the top, as here shown. This is held in place by two wooden blocks notched out to admit of the bars sliding up and down, the blocks being bolted to the door. If desired the home blacksmith could easily shape a piece of iron to perform the same duty.

At feeding time the bar is lifted and the door swung in past the trough, directly beneath. Then the bar is dropped, thus holding the door back of the trough. This keeps the hungry mob on the other side of the door while the feeder takes his time to clean the trough, if need be, and to pour in the feed. A few transverse bars across the top of the trough prevent any unusually piggish pig from crowding down the length of the trough to the exclusion of others. When ready to admit the pigs to the feed the bar is lifted and the door drops to its usual position. Any farmer can make such a device, all that is required, besides the lumber that would have to be used in any case, being the hinges.

Age of Usefulness.

The period of a hen's usefulness depends altogether on the hen. While the first year is usually the best for egg production, it is not always the case, some hens laying better the second year. But, as a rule, one will get the greatest number of eggs from a given number of fowls by having the pullets hatched early. March and April are the best months, so as to get them laying early in the fall, and change them each year, disposing of the fowls when they cease laying to go through the molting process.

Keeping Tab on Hens.

It is a good plan to watch for the hens that are laying and those that are not. Those that are not laying these days should be disposed of, for they take away what profit the busy ones make. The eggs from the persistent layers should be used for hatching purposes, so that a better strain of laying hens may be obtained for next season. It is only by careful watching and observation that the busy hens can be told from the drones.—Agricultural Epitomist.

Uses for the Corncobs.

Save all the corncobs. They are good for smoking meat in absence of hickory wood, and they are splendid for burning to a charred condition for hogs. The surplus cobs should go into the manure. They are good absorbers of liquids and improvers of soil texture, besides supplying some fertilizing elements and adding humus to the soil.

Easily Made Fire Kindler.

Put about a gallon measure full of sawdust that has been well saturated with kerosene into a deep tray. Add enough melted rosin to stiffen the entire amount when it is cold. When cold, says Popular Mechanics, this mixture can be cut into squares and put away until ready for use. Put one square of the kindler into the fireplace of a stove and place the fuel on top. A hot fire will be produced in a short time after the lighting.

Farmed Lands.

An exhaustive census investigation of farm interests throughout the United States showed that in the last ten years the total number of farms has increased 18 per cent. In the older States, from Ohio eastward, there has been going on for twenty years a tendency toward the amalgamation of farms distant from market into larger holdings. There are now almost three times as many farms as in 1870, and an unprecedented increase in the value of farm lands and live stock is the even more momentous fact revealed by this inquiry. The land in farms, with their buildings, improvements and live stock, is to-day almost $30,000,000,000, a gain of 44 per cent in ten years. Present values are two and one-half times the farm values of thirty years ago. In the North Central States the increase in the value of farms is 43 per cent; in the South Central States, 58 per cent; in the North Atlantic, 13 per cent, and in the South Atlantic, 34 per cent.

Keeping Milk Utensils Clean.

Discard the dishcloth and the dishtowel when the milk utensils are being washed. Wash them in warm water first, with plenty of some washing compound, and use a brush to do the work, but never a rag. Get into every part of them, after which rinse off with clean warm water, and then either put them in boiling water or pour boiling water over them. Stand the parts up so they will drain and use no cloth to wipe them. The hot surface will dry them quickly, and they will be clean. Leave the parts in a sunshiny place if possible.

Testing Poultry for the Table.

Some experts in choosing poultry for the table depend upon testing the breastbone, but sometimes dealers break this on purpose, then you are out. In a young chicken or goose the cartilage in the breastbone will bend easily. If the bird is a year old it will be brittle, and in an old fowl will break before it will bend to any amount. To make this test, take the end of the breastbone farthest from the head and make the attempt to bend it to one side. If it is young it will bend easily to either side.

Substitute for a Wrench.

If in need of a wrench and one is not at hand, take a large bolt and run on two nuts, allowing a space between them to fit over the nut to be turned. This will make a serviceable wrench, a substitute that will prove very beneficial in case of an emergency.—Thos. L. Parker, in Popular Mechanics.

Beef and Dairy Cattle.

When a dairyman has faced the actual practice of selling cows from his herd for beef he will not feel encouraged over the outlook of combining beef and dairy qualities in the same herd. There is a popular prejudice against eating beef from an old, played out dairy cow, and there is no advantage in trying to combine the two qualities in one animal.

Dynamiting Holes for Planting.

Tree planters advocate dynamiting holes for the planting of fruit trees. When there is an impervious hardpan they advise the digging of the hole deep enough for the tree, then placing a small stick of dynamite in the hardpan and the explosion will loosen up the ground so that the roots of the trees may take deeper hold in the soil.

Disposition of Breeders.

In breeding profitable horses care should be taken to select animals known to possess desirable qualities. Vicious mares should not be bred. Every year bad dispositioned horses send quite a number of persons to premature graves and cripple others, while the material damage they do is quite considerable.

Coal Tar Remedy for Mange.

For itch or mange, rubbing of tail or mane, wash thoroughly with warm soft water and soap, then rub in with brush a proper strength of coal tar dip used on sheep and dogs. Scrub every three or four days until cured. Disinfect stalls and harness also or you never will get rid of the pest.

Removing Dents from Wood.

A very good way to remove dents in wood is to take a piece of wet felt and place it on the dent. Press with a hot flat-iron and the dent will instantly disappear. This is good for all cases of dented wood.

Useful Little Suggestions.

A dirty collar often makes a sore shoulder.

Are rabbits and mice skinning your young trees?

Cheap harness often proves an expensive instrument.

The most perfect milk can be quickly and easily spoiled.

It will cost no more per pound to grow a colt than a calf.

A little axle grease applied where it belongs saves horseflesh.

Successful hog raisers will always have clover alfalfa pastures for their animals.

A cheap paint can be made from a solution of borax and water mixed with linseed oil.

Every farmer in the country has a place for sheep, some perhaps only for fifty, others for 1,000.

Let the young pigs learn to eat with their dams and as soon as possible put them all on pasture.

Make your head save your heels by careful planning, and you can do twice the work with fewer steps.

Hornless cattle are preferred by feeders and shippers, and they will usually pay a premium for them.

We do not need manure nor commercial fertilizer on our orchards as much as light cultivation and perfect care.

A Fatal Temptation

CHAPTER VI.

Dr. John Blantire when quite young, just beginning his practice, had been called in to attend a young lady patient whose name was Sylvia Burton Carr—a girl not more than nineteen years of age. She lived with her father in a quiet, retired way, evidently on a slender income; and John Blantire had no idea that they were related to the great family of the Carrs, of Carrswell.

There had been a quarrel between the brothers of the Carr family—the eldest Rudolph Carr, having disagreed with his two brothers, Richard and Edmund. Richard joined the army, and gained some distinction, after which he returned home badly wounded. He died unmarried, and without being reconciled to his brothers. The good-natured Edmund had neither strength, energy, nor wealth—he simply drifted through life; he married early, and had one daughter, named after her mother, Sylvia Burton. He never made any attempt to increase his small income; he had none of the spirit or ambition of the Carrs. He was content to read and to dream his life away. When his daughter Sylvia was in her nineteenth year, she fell dangerously ill; and John Blantire, then a poor, struggling surgeon, was hastily summoned, as being the nearest and the cheapest doctor within reach. Sylvia Burton Carr fell madly in love with him, and he with her.

"We shall be parted at once if my father knows of our attachment," she said to him. "He is indifferent on all subjects, but with regard to my future prospects he is decided. He would sooner see me dead than the wife of a poor doctor; but your wife I will be, John, nevertheless," she added, "and never the wife of any other man."

Eventually the young couple eloped, Sylvia declaring that it would be useless to endeavor to obtain her father's consent to their union. Mrs. Blantire never saw her father again. She had but one child, her son Laurence. The young man had never dreamed that the day and the hour would come when the Carrs, of Carrswell, would seek him. But the four sturdy sons of Rudolph had died one after the other from various causes, and then the old baronet fell ill with grief and anxiety. He began to wonder who was to succeed him. Edmund had one daughter—Sylvia Burton Carr; they found the registry of her birth; but they could find no trace of her. Her father was dead, her neighbors had long since lost sight of her. It was only after infinite trouble that the lawyers succeeded in discovering that she had married John Blantire, and had had one son. This son, if he were living, was indisputably Rudolph's heir and the future master of Carrswell, and forthwith the search recommenced for him.

When Messrs. North & Son received Laurence's first letter, Mr. North, the senior partner, answered it in person. It may be imagined what a sensation this visit caused at Seafield House; and when he told his errand the sensation was greater still. Mr. North smiled when he saw Laurence.

"You certainly have the Carr features," he said. "When you go to Carrswell, you will see many faces hanging on the walls there just like your own. There needs little confirmation of the fact that you are the son of Sylvia Burton Carr, and, when that is proved, you will be installed as Rudolph's heir."

The young assistant listened with a white, grave face that somewhat surprised the lawyer. He had expected some natural elation of spirits at the news he brought; but there was none. The young man's face grew graver and paler; he was thinking what a stain he had brought on an honored name, that he was unfit to uphold the glories of an ancient race because he had branded himself "thief." So he listened with a pale, shadowed face to the description of the brilliant future in store for him.

"If all goes well," Mr. North went on, "you will succeed to Carrswell and twenty thousand per annum. You do not look so delighted, Mr. Blantire, as I should do in your place."

"I am not worthy of it," he replied.

Every one in Seafield soon heard the news concerning Laurence Blantire, that he was heir to a great estate and title, that his mother had belonged to a good old family, and his father had run away with her. Before long it was known all over the countryside, and every one rejoiced to hear of the young doctor's good fortune. So many people came to see and to congratulate him, that Laurence had little time for his adieus. He found a few minutes for Miss Leigh. He sent to ask her if she would see him, and she hastened to the conservatory, where he awaited her. She held out her hand, and smiled as she greeted him.

"I am asking myself," she said, "if it be a fairy tale, or if it be true."

"It is true," he replied, "quite true. You can imagine how great is my gratitude to you; but for you rank and fortune would have found me in a dishonored grave. Think how much I owe you! Tell me, how shall I prove my gratitude to you?"

"You say you wish to prove your gratitude to me," she replied. "Perhaps the day may come when I shall ask you to do so."

"I shall not fail," she said, earnestly.

"Remember your words," she returned. "When I ask a favor, I shall remind you of them."

"No need to do that," he assured her. "I realize now," he went on, "what sin is; but for that dark background, I should be the happiest man in the world."

"You must forget it," she said, gently; and, looking at her with troubled eyes, he answered:

"It is the one thing I shall never be able to forget."

Laurence left Seafield House with good wishes and kind words lingering in his ears, but all deadened by the dark memory of his sin; only for that, how brightly happy he would have been!

CHAPTER VII.

It was late in the afternoon when the lawyer, accompanied by the young heir, arrived at Carrswell. Laurence was very silent as the carriage, which met them at the station, drove through the spacious and magnificent park—he was more silent still when the mansion itself came into view.

"I am the first Carr who has entered this house with the stain of a crime on his soul," thought the young heir; and the lawyer wondered again how any one could see this magnificent heritage and show so little emotion.

If he could but forget it—just for one hour! If he could regain the lightness of heart, the ease of mind, the serenity of conscience that had been his four months ago! Oh, thrice accursed sin, the memory of which would not die!—oh, dark and miserable shadow, that even all the glory of his present life could not brighten!

Rudolph was very ill—too ill to see the young heir on the night of his arrival; but the next morning he desired his presence. Rudolph lay in one of the state chambers—he looked very ill, very gray, and haggard.

"Welcome to Carrswell!" he said cordially though feebly. "You take the place of my sons to me."

"I wish," returned Laurence, gently, "that I could take the place of one son to you."

"I like the boy," said Rudolph, a few minutes later. "North, are all the documents right?"

The lawyer drew near with a roll of papers in his hand.

"I have everything here that can possibly be needed—certificates of the birth, marriage, and death of your brother, Edmund Carr, certificates of the birth, marriage, and death of his daughter, Sylvia Burton Carr, of the death of her husband, John Blantire, and of the birth of this young man, Laurence Carr Blantire."

"He must drop the name of Blantire, and take that of Carr," said Rudolph. "Come nearer to me," he continued; then, turning to the lawyer: "You are right, North; he has the true Carr face; no one could mistake him. If—if—I could have foreseen that I should have lost my sons, my four bonny lads, I would have tried to find the Blantires long ago. He looks good—he looks honest and true. Laurence, you will try to do credit to the old name?"

"That I will, Heaven helping me!" he replied.

"You will be a rich and a great man; you must be a good one also, or the rest will not avail."

"I will try, Heaven helping me," he answered. The recollection of that terrible fall of his was too strong upon him to allow him to say more.

"I like this boy," thought Rudolph; "he is modest and unassuming. Come nearer still, Laurence," he went on, aloud. "You are very young to find yourself placed in such a position; you will have many temptations; men will crowd round you—and women—ah! women, too—But perhaps you have a safeguard—have you?"

Laurence thought of the beautiful face that had so strangely impressed him; and, even as he thought of it, the expression of his own face changed and grew more bright and tender.

"I have," he replied; and there was quite another tone in his voice as he spoke.

"That is right, the heart of a young man is best in safe keeping. I shall not live long, Laurence, and for the short time I have to spend on earth you must remain with me, and try to learn how to manage a large estate. When I am gone, you can bring your bride home."

An impulse came over the young man to say, "I do not even know the name of the girl I love"—he never thought of Marion—she had been very good to him, she was very handsome and very proud, she had saved his life, but she never entered his thoughts as a girl to love and marry.

CHAPTER VIII

It was about three months after Laurence's installation as the heir of Carrswell that Rudolph sent for him to his room one morning.

"Laurence," he said, "owing to my illness you have had no opportunity of meeting our friends and neighbors. Here is a letter from Mr. D'Este; he lives at Swanscourt, about six miles from here, and he asks you to a dinner party next week, to be followed by a ball in the evening."

"I would much rather decline the invitation and remain at home with you," he young man replied. "I do not like to leave you."

"This is a social duty, you see, Laurence, one of the kind that ought to be fulfilled, whether we like it or not. He is one of our leading men; he has always shown the greatest courtesy and kindness toward me; doubtless he intends to continue the same toward you. You must go, Laurie."

"If you wish, sir," Laurence replied.

On the day indicated, young Blantire went to Swanscourt, and was most cordially welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. D'Este.

"We have been longing to make your acquaintance," said the former; "but Rudolph has been so ill, it seemed hardly right to trouble him with visitors. You are welcome to Swanscourt. As we are to be neighbors, we ought to knew each other."

Mr. D'Este was a kind, large-hearted, generous man. His wife was a nonenity. Though she was a handsome woman still, it was a languid kind of beauty, quite in accordance with her weak, sentimental character.

"You have not been introduced to my daughter," she said. Her heart warmed to the handsome, gallant young fellow, whom she felt sure her daughter would like. "Come with me," she added. "Magdalen is generally surrounded by a little court of admirers; she is at the further end of the room."

They paused before a beautiful, graceful girl. The light from the chandelier fell full upon her. Laurence saw the gleam of white pearls in the bright coils of her hair, and then his eyes rested on her face. A low exclamation burst involuntarily from her lips. It was the same face he had seen but once before in his life, but which had haunted his dreams persistently—the face of the girl he loved.

Mrs. D'Este looked up at him at the sudden exclamation. He had grown deathly pale. She smiled complacently. He was not the first one upon whom her daughter's charms had had a similar effect.

Meanwhile, the little crowd of admirers made way for the countess and the stranger, then the lovely face was turned smilingly to Laurence, the beautiful eyes rested kindly on him, as Magdalen said a few words in a voice that seemed to him like sweetest music—only a moment, and then she moved away to speak to some one else. When the countess left him, Laurence remained standing like a man in a dream. His eyes followed every movement of that graceful figure, saw nothing else—no one else; he forgot everything except the presence of Magdalen d'Este.

He never remembered afterward with whom he went down to dinner, of what viands he partook, or what subjects were discussed.

(To be continued.)

DEBTORS SAFE AND UNSAFE.

Much More than Honesty Considered by the Credit Man.

There are many people who have an idea that this business of giving or refusing credit is merely a matter of the applicant's honesty or dishonesty; but there's a whole lot to it besides that. Honesty is only one of the essentials of a safe risk—not all of them. Most business men are honest as honesty goes nowadays, the Bookkeeper says, but that alone does not constitute a valid reason why the credit man should turn over a good many dollars of his firm's money to them, to do with as they see fit. The difference between a safe debtor and an unsafe one is the difference between business capability and progressiveness, plus honesty, and business incompetence and languor, either with or without honesty—and there are a hundred and one other things to be considered in each individual case. The credit man's job offers opportunities for sleuthing as well as a place with the Pinkertons; the credit man, it is true, does not of necessity have to be able to tell, from an examination of the cigar as dropped on the office carpet by the suspect, just how much money that gentleman has at home in the bank, but he ought to be able to read plain signs and to gather some information of value to himself from the applicant's personality and his method of telling what he has to tell.

Just as the stream is limited in its rise by the height of its source, so is the credit man's chances for perfection in his work bounded by the completeness of his records. Our principal method of determining what is most likely to happen in the future is by a study and comparison of the things that have happened in the past. The fact that John Smith has always met his obligations with a certain degree of honesty and promptness is not, to be sure, any reason for believing that John Smith is absolutely certain to continue to do that same thing for all the rest of his life, but it is an excellent indication that—unless the whole course of his actions be changed by some occurrence of great consequence to him or his business activities be affected in some way by some circumstance which could not possibly be foreseen—he will continue to do that same thing. Like others, the credit man must be guided by a knowledge of what has gone before, and the more exhaustive and comprehensive a record he has of what has already happened, the better will be his chance for calculating wisely on future probabilities. The best carpenter living could not be expected to turn out a good job unless he had good tools to work with; the credit man's records are the tools of his trade.

The Modern Child.

"Where do you live, my little man?"

"I ain't got no regular home."

"Haven't any home? Why, that's strange. You have good clothes to wear and you look as if you had plenty to eat."

"Yes, but part of the time I stay with mamma and part of the time papa has me, and the rest of the time I'm in the custody of the court."—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Desperate Subterfuge.

"Henrietta," said Mr. Meekton, "can I eat anything I find growing on a tree and still be a consistent vegetarian?"

"Certainly."

"Oh, joy! I notice that a lot of your chickens have taken to roosting in the woods."—Washington Star.

Doing His Best.

"Do you whistle or sing or recite?"

"No."

"Can you do anything to entertain the guests?"

"Well, I can name all the vice-presidents we've ever had. The accomplishment has been mentioned as unusual."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Acquaintances

"Do you see that old gentleman, mamma? He often speaks to me."

"Does he, darling? What does he say?"

"Oh, he says: 'Don't you throw any stones at my dog!'"—Throne and Country.

From Experience.

Mrs. Henpeck—Wonder why they call the man who stands up with the groom the best man at a wedding?

Mr. Henpeck—Because he's the best off.

The very name and appearance of a happy man breathe of good nature and help the rest of us to live.—R. L. Stevenson.

WOMAN'S SPHERE

The Encouragement of Women.

When we have the "blues" or are suffering from disappointment of any kind, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine, we are apt to think that there is not much we can do but grin and bear it until the discouragement has run its course and the suffering ceases.

It is not necessary, however, for any one to suffer tortures from disappointment or discouragement, for there is a remedy right inside of us for the worst fit of the "blues," the keenest disappointment. Any person who wishes can, by a little scientific training of his thought, completely change his whole mental attitude in a short time by substituting for the suggestion which pains him, troubles him, which brought on the "blues," its opposite. We can antidote our troubles in the same way that we antidote those of others, encouraging ourselves in the same way in which we encourage others.

The next time you feel the "blues" coming on, or a fit of depression or despondency, just get by yourself, after taking a good bath and dressing yourself becomingly, and give yourself a good talking to. Talk to yourself in the same dead-in-earnest way that you would to your own child or a dear friend who was deep in the mire of despondency, suffering tortures from melancholy. Drive out the black, hideous picture which haunts your mind. Sweep away all depressing thoughts, suggestions, all the rubbish that is troubling you. Let go everything that is unpleasant, all the mistakes, all the disagreeable past; just rise up in arms against the enemies of your peace and happiness, summon all the force you can muster and drive them out. Resolve that you are going to be happy, that you are going to enjoy the day, no matter what happens. Just say to yourself, "This is an abnormal condition. Harmony is the everlasting fact. Discord must be unreality, harmony the reality."

Health and Beauty Hints.

Because it matters little how light her hair becomes, a blonde may wash her hair more frequently than a brunette.

When shampooing never rub the soap directly on the hair, as it gums and is almost impossible to rub or rinse off. Always have the soap in some liquid form.

Bushy, irregular eyebrows should be brushed lightly with a camel's-hair brush dipped in olive oil. The same treatment is good for stiff and harsh eyebrows and it is said to make them grow.

To stop bleeding of the fingers, hand, arm or foot, raise the part as high as possible. The best plan in the case of, say, the hand, is to put it under the cold water tap for a minute or half a minute, and then raise it above the head.

When a person feels jumpiness, weariness and listlessness, accompanied by headache, there is indicated a general run-down state of the nerves and the system. Plenty of plain nourishing food should be eaten. There should be daily outdoor exercise and a good internal nerve tonic should be taken.

There are various causes for redness of the nose, not to suggest the use of alcoholic beverages as being one of them. If cause exists the remedy suggests itself. But another cause is defective circulation. In such cases outdoor exercise is necessary and much good will result from a cold bath every morning, followed by a brisk rubdown. A good tonic should be taken.

Cleaning Walls.

One of the best ways of cleaning walls—that is, removing dust from them—is to take a large wad of cotton batting and place it in a loosely woven piece of soft cheese cloth and go over every part of the walls with it, changing to a clean piece of cheese cloth when necessary. This is an improvement over the old plan of wiping the walls with the batting alone, because it is impossible to leave the tiniest atom of lint when the batting is inclosed in the cheese cloth.

Cleaning Handbags.

The handbag or satchel of undressed kid, when soiled by usage, need not necessarily be turned over to the professional cleaner. The secret of restoration is a piece of sandpaper rubbed over the surface. A very fine grade of sandpaper is required. When this is used with care the effect is magical and no injury to the material accrues. Many kinds of leathers without polished surfaces—for example, suede, undressed and ooze calskin—can be cleaned thus.

A soft satin chiffon is one of the most attractive trimmings for the popular fur hat.

A two-inch bead fringe makes a pretty trimming on a very short cap sleeve for a ball gown.

Beaver cloth may be bought by the yard and is a fashionable material for covering the winter hat.

Double revers are shown on some of the coats for winter, the under one of cloth, braided and the upper one of silk or satin.

One of the latest petticoat models has all the fullness fitted out over the hips and across the back in small V-shaped darts, making an excellent, smooth fitting foundation for the gown.

Foreign Words on Menus.

Here are a few of the foreign words, with their translation, used on menu cards in the hotels:

Cafe—Coffee.
Demi-tasse—After dinner cup of coffee.
Frappe—Semi or half-frozen.
Fricasse—Stew.
Fromage—Cheese.
Glace—Frozen.
Cafe au lait—Coffee with hot milk.
Neufchatel—A soft Swiss cheese.
Parmesan—An Italian cheese.
Timbale—Pie crust baked in a mold.
Croutons—Bread toasted in squares, used for soup and in garnishing.
Bouillon—A clear broth, usually of beef.
Au gratin—Dishes baked, prepared with cheese.
Menu—Bill of fare.
Puree—Ingredients rubbed through a sieve, usually the term given a thick strained soup.
Tutti frutti—Various kinds of fruits (chopped fine).
Consomme—Clear soup.

New-Old Poke Bonnet.

Poke bonnets will always have their way with girls who possess demure faces.

These bonnets have lately been much in evidence. Persian bands and contrasting bows of ribbon compose the trimming of these pretty hats.

New Type of Woman.

The eyes of the world are directed at the matured women who are doing things. The exclusive society woman and she who has only good looks to recommend her are rapidly becoming a thing of the past. We are living in an intensely practical age. So rapidly are we living that all forces are amalgamating, and evolving a type of woman such as the world has never seen before. She is not a fledgling, nor a merely pretty thing, but a woman of gracious tact and wide sympathy, who has lived down many a bitter disappointment and crushed many a sorrow, but who is imbued with the optimistic spirit of Young America; she knows that in order to do her best she must look her best; she inspires old and young with her youthful enthusiasm; she is sincerely interested in every humane question of the day; thus unconsciously does she cultivate those endearing qualities of the heart, the daily exhibition of which, in the course of years, imparts an atmosphere of soft, sweet, femininity, and gives to a woman when she reaches middle life that delightful subtle spirit we call "charm." This is perhaps what the satirical Bernard Shaw meant when he asserted that no woman is possible until she has reached her thirty-fifth year, and not worth talking to until her fortieth!—Delineator.

Value of Fresh Air.

Half the evils and ills of humanity could be cured if more people realized the value of fresh air. It is the basis of all beauty and health, and the girl who is endeavoring to procure a lovely complexion by the use of face lotions will find fresh air twice as efficacious.

When you are terribly fatigued try taking half a dozen long, deep breaths, and see if you don't feel more like living. When insomnia has you in its grip try breathing deeply and regularly as you lie in bed and you will be surprised how easily sleep will come. Nervousness can be cured by forming the habit of breathing deep and long, and one medical authority prescribes it in his schedule for nervous women.

All singers are invariably high-chested and free from colds or chronic coughing spells. It is because they have learned to breathe from the waist, instead of the top of the lungs, as the majority of people do. To breathe deeply is to stimulate the heart and the circulation. It means a full, high chest and broad shoulders. It means practical immunity from the dangers incurred by exposure. It means a good carriage and well-poised head. And, best of all, it means perfect physical health.

Cleaning Windows.

A cloudy day is the best for washing the windows, because the warm sunshine dries the water too quickly and the window is streaked at best. Do not use soap in washing the windows. Clear, warm water, with a little kerosene or ammonia added, will give a highly polished surface. Add one tablespoon of ammonia or two of kerosene to a gallon of water. The professional window cleaner often does not use water at all. He first rubs the thickest of the dirt off and then covers the window with a coating of whiting and household ammonia, leaves it on for fifteen or twenty minutes and then rubs it off with an old rag or a newspaper and polishes it to shininess.

The Treatment of Cancer.

Dr. Rampoldi, professor of ophthalmology at the famous University of Pavia, has made a noteworthy discovery which may have important bearings on the search for a cure for cancer. He has experimented with a fluid obtained from the Abrus precatoria, or Indian licorice, and has succeeded in curing several cases of tumor, which, according to his report, disappear within three weeks without leaving any scar. So far Prof. Rampoldi has had about twenty successes and a fair proportion of failures, the latter, however, being confined to cases of tumor of the tongue, lips or throat, of which only half yielded to the treatment.

He Knew One.

"Some adjectives," said the teacher, "are made from nouns, such as dangerous, meaning full of danger; and hazardous, full of hazard. Can any boy give me another example?"

"Yes, sir," replied the fat boy at the end of the form; "pious, full of pie."

Science Vs. Tact.

"Frank, never bring that scientific man to our house again."

"What's the matter?"

"I never saw such impudence. He says the diamonds I wear are merely another form of charcoal; the idea!"—Life.

Why, Oh, Why?

Why is it that when a man discovers that he is a "genius" he allows his hair to grow long, and that when a woman becomes similarly conscious she has her hair cut short?—Fliegende Blaetter.

TWO MATERIALS IN ONE SUMMER GOWN.

Memories of the War

How Grant Rewarded a Brave Boy.

The public will never lose its keen appetite for Lincoln and Grant stories, good ones, based on fact. I have such a story—a Grant story. It is about the officer in the regular army who will be the last to retire for age, on Aug. 13, 1915, of all the men who served in the Civil War and later became regular army officers. Before he was 12 years old he was a musician in the Twenty-second Michigan. At the battle of Chickamauga he threw away his drum, picked up a wounded man's musket and was in the two days' battle, doing full duty as a private soldier. He had a narrow escape from capture. The commander of a confederate regiment demanded the child's surrender when the Michigan regiment was flanked. The child replied with a shot that emptied a saddle and gave the lieutenant colonel of the confederate regiment promotion to the rank of colonel. For this act of courage the child-soldier was made a lance sergeant, and as such served to the end of his term, which included the battles, under General Grant, about Chattanooga in November, 1863.

The old commander heard of the child's conduct while at Chattanooga a short time before he went to Washington to accept his second commission in the regular army from President Lincoln. General Grant and President Grant never forgot the child-soldier of Chickamauga and Mission Ridge.

The boy's people were poor. They could not send him to school before he was a soldier, they received most of his pay while he was in the army and when the war was over he had to work at anything he could find to do to help the family.

In 1871, when 20, he determined to seek an appointment to West Point. His friends tried to dissuade him, knowing that his lack of education was so great as to make it certain that he would not be accepted.

"Nobody would nominate you for a cadet, under the circumstances," said one of his friends.

"Well, I am going to try, anyway. President Grant knows something about men, and I guess he will send me to West Point."

President Grant's attention was recalled to the child-soldier of 1863 and he was asked to nominate him for the military academy. The nomination was made at once, but the boy was "found"; or, to use a less technical term, he "fell down." He was short in mathematics, short in history and literature, short in height and weight and short in general information.

In time the youngster appeared in Washington with a fixed purpose to see his soldier comrade and friend in the White House, the President.

"Whom do you wish to see?" asked a doorkeeper.

"The President."

"You can't see him now."

After waiting half an hour the boy tapped the doorkeeper on the shoulder and asked how much longer he would have to wait.

"I guess you can't see the President to-day," was the reply.

"I guess I can. You go in and tell General Grant that John Clem of Company C, Twenty-second Michigan, wants to see him."

The message was conveyed to the President. A cabinet minister was conferring with his chief at the time. Directions were given to let the visitor "come right in." The great soldier and the child-soldier shook hands like a pair of old friends.

"They thought they didn't need me at West Point, General Grant," said the boy.

The President, after a moment of reflection, wrote a note, slipped it into an envelope, addressed it and told his caller to take it to General Belknap, the Secretary of War. The secretary read the President's note, looked the young fellow over carefully and asked him to be seated.

"Do you know what this note contains?" asked the Iowa general, who also had heard about the boy at Chickamauga.

"I do not, sir."

"President Grant directs me to appoint you a second lieutenant in the United States army."

That was done. He was made a first lieutenant in 1874, a captain in 1882, a major in 1895, a lieutenant-colonel in 1901 and a colonel in 1903.

Upon entering the regular army his education began. For many years he has been thoroughly informed, well educated, and has always stood high both with the army and the public. By virtue of his civil war service he could now retire with the rank of brigadier-general, but it is thought that he will be the last to retire of the thousands of civil war soldiers who went to the regulars. Then we can address the child-soldier of 1863 and Chickamauga as Gen. John L. Clem.

While this is more than a Grant story, it surely is a story that emphasizes the wisdom, justice and goodness of the old commander.

Here is another child-soldier story. It fits in here:

Former State Senator C. Latham Sholes, inventor of the typewriter, was editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel during a part of the war. Two of his boys, both under 17 years of age, were soldiers, and one of them was a prisoner from whom the family had not heard for some time and consequently they were greatly distressed. A third boy, not yet 13, went to the busy editor one day with a request for his written permission to enlist.

"Why, my boy, they don't want little children for soldiers."

"Yes, they do, papa. I've just had a talk with the captain and he says he will take me if you will write your consent."

"But your mother and I can't spare you. You know how hard it was for us to let your brothers go. I can't give my consent. I left your mother crying this morning because she does not hear from her boy who is in prison."

Then the little felow handed his father a copy of that morning's Sentinel, in which was an article urging a prompt filling of Wisconsin's quota in compliance with Mr. Lincoln's last call.

"You wrote that, papa, and now you are trying to prevent enlistments."

"But I didn't ask them to rob trundle beds, my child."

"Please write your consent, papa, the captain is waiting to enlist me."

"What will you do if I don't give my consent?"

"I can write most like you, papa. The captain wouldn't know the difference."

* * *

Written consent was given, and that day the child was in uniform. The train bearing his regiment stopped a few minutes at Kenosha, where the Sholes boy was born. Z. G. Simmons, a neighbor when his people lived there, was at the station. "Pretty young for a soldier, my lad," said Mr. Simmons, "but you can help some," and then handed the child a $20 greenback. When ten or twelve years ago Mr. Simmons got ready to give hundreds of ex-soldiers an annual outing and banquet he chose the child soldier of 1864 to make the arrangements. Several department commanders have chosen the some soldier for chief of staff. He is now serving in that capacity. Many thousands in Wisconsin know Louis Sholes.—J. A. Watrous, in Chicago Record-Herald.

Forced Into Confederate Army.

James Clarke, better known as Dad Clarke, who died at the county infirmary near Logansport, Ind., in April, had served four years in the Civil war, but was unable to get into the soldiers' homes in the north or those maintained in the south for veterans of the Confederate army. His history is one of the most unusual in the annals of the war. His ambition was to get into the soldiers' home at Marion, but his repeated efforts were futile, and finally in despair he turned to the county poor farm, and there he had been for three years, bemoaning his fate that made him a man without a home.

Clarke at the outbreak of the Civil war was traveling through the south with a number of Irish peddlers. The majority of these peddlers lived in Logansport, Marion, Anderson and other nearby Indiana cities. With wagons and packs they traveled throughout the south selling merchandise of all kinds.

The day war was declared 13 of the Irish peddlers were in Jackson, Miss. Excitement was high there, and Clarke and his companions were as enthusiastic as the natives, only for a different cause. They hastily planned to return to Indiana to enlist and go to the front. But before they could leave they were taken into custody, were pressed into the Confederate ranks and were compelled to fight against brothers and friends in the northern army.

For two years they marched, fought and lived with the Confederates, ever watchful for a chance to escape. So far all had escaped death and injury. But during one battle when the two lines were only a few hundred feet apart, the little band of northerners planned a dash for liberty. At a given signal they broke for the Yankee lines. But they had not gone very far before a hundred Confederate guns were turned on them. Twelve fell dead to the ground, and Clarke, the only survivor, fell to escape the rain of lead.

A burly sergeant was about to impale him with a bayonet when a colonel thrust the sergeant aside, ordered Clarke back to the line and made him again take up the fight against the Yankees.

Soon after this Clarke was transferred to Andersonville prison, where he did guard duty for three months under Captain Wirz. Compelled to shoot at any prisoner who stepped across the dead line, Clarke always shot wide of the mark. Later, when he was sent to the front again, the company to which he was assigned was captured in battle by the Union forces and the prisoners were sent to the northern prison near Detroit. Clarke protested that he was a Kankee and had been pressed into service, but none would believe his story. However, on the third day of his imprisonment, he met and was recognized by his half-brother, Joe Murphy, who was on guard duty. Murphy had heard of the fate of Clarke and the other Irish peddlers, and when he explained the circumstances, Clarke was paroled and sent back to Logansport.

Several years ago, he spent his spare time building a coffin. He was very enthusiastic over the project and was buried in it.—Indianapolis News.

A Plucky Irishman.

From Gen. D. H. Hill's article, from a Confederate point of view, in the Century, on "McClellan's Change of Base," we quote the following: "We had taken one prisoner, a drunken Irishman, but he declined the honor of going back with us, and made fight with his naked fists. A soldier asked me naively whether he should shoot the Irishman or let him go. I am glad that I told him to let the man go, to be a comfort to his family. That Irishman must have had a charmed life. He was under the shelter of his gunnycloth coat, hung on a stick, near the ford, when a citizen fired at him four times, from a distance of about fifty paces, and the only recognition that I could see the man make was to raise his hand as if to brush off a fly. One of the shells set the farm house on fire. The owner came out and told us that Gen. 'Baldy' Smith was taking a bath in the house at the time. I do not know how refreshing the general found it, or whether the story was true."

He Was Not a Soldier.

"On the day of the General's death an old soldier of the Confederacy remarked to a stranger near the cigar stand in the Kimball House: 'Well, poor Grant is dead at last.' 'Yes,' remarked the other, 'and he ought to have died thirty years ago.' 'Say, stranger, was you in the war?' 'No, sir.' 'Thought so—good day.'"

Though blessed with the most fertile soil and most favorable climate in the world, the United States produce less wheat an acre planted than England, Germany or Holland.

His Mission.

It was in the surgeon's reception room, and the little man near the door who had been waiting for a half hour or more began to get fidgety.

"I can't wait here all day," he growled.

"Waiting for an operation?" the man next to him sympathetically inquired.

"No," snapped the little man; "I'm waiting to perform one."

The other man stared at him.

"Are you a surgeon?" he asked.

"No," replied the little man. "I'm a bill collector."—New York Journal.

While a Man Trailed a Buck the Birds Followed the Man.

"I met with a curious and not altogether pleasant experience," writes an Anglo-Indian correspondent who has done a good deal of large and small game shooting in India, "when I was one day stalking a black buck. Between me and my quarry lay a large flat field of black cotton soil bordered by a very low, straggling and thinly growing hedge of small babul trees. My only way to get a shot was to cross this, keeping the bushiest tree between me and the buck, which had not much to browse on and was therefore seldom motionless. I proceeded to do the hundred yards on the flat of my stomach. This on loose, hard baked black cotton soil was no joke. I pushed my rifle on ahead. Then, wriggling past it until the muzzle was near my knee, I would pass it on in front again, and so on.

"Progress was slow, and I was so absorbed that I failed to observe shadows crossing, and recrossing my path and circling around until I had gone some fifty yards. Then the whirring of wings attracted my ears, and almost at the same moment a vulture landed on the ground not twenty yards away. I looked up. The air was alive with these repulsive looking birds. Then it flashed across me that I was being stalked! Doubtless these birds were attracted by my extraordinary method of procedure and mistook me for a wounded or dying man making a final effort to reach some shady spot. This was especially possible, as the experience occurred in a famine district where deaths by the wayside were not infrequent. By looking up I had evidently shown myself to the buck, for he was now off at full tilt. I therefore took pot shot at the vulture at twenty yards, but did not allow for the sighting sufficiently and missed him. The thought of being waited for by a flock of vultures while very much alive and well was, to say the least, uncanny."—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Bird's Tail.

In his "Story of the Birds" James Newton Baskett says: To a slight extent in some birds the tail may be used as a rudder, but where the wing is perfected turning is effected with a very scant tail. The use of the tail always has more reference to the up and down movements than to the lateral. It comes into play in alighting (as a brake) or in rising (as a kitelike surface) and is used dexterously by the soaring birds in balancing themselves against varying currents of air.

Quaint Picture of Gladstone.

According to a Turkish newspaper of 1876, William E. Gladstone was born in 1796. For father he had a Bulgarian. His gluttony for gold made him yellow. He was of medium height, his whiskers were cropped close to his face, and "as a sign of his satanic spirit his forehead and upper forehead were bare. His evil temper has made his hair fall off, so that from a distance he might be taken for quite bald."

What He Lacked.

"They tell me," said the innocent maid, "that your marriage was the result of love at first sight. Is it true?"

"It is," answered the round shouldered man sadly. "Had I been gifted with second sight I'd still be in the bachelor class!"—Chicago Record-Herald.

SEEKING HAPPINESS.

All men seek happiness. To this there is no exception. What different means soever they employ, all tend to this goal. The reason some men go to the wars and others avoid them is but the same desire attended in each with different views. This is the motive of every action of every man, even of him who hangs himself.—Pascal.

Henry Clay.

Many able men have preferred to be in the house of representatives rather than in the senate. Henry Clay liked the turbulence of the lower chamber better than the solemn stillness of the other branch. He began his real political career there in 1811, although he was in the senate as early as 1806. Clay's service in national office extended to his death in 1852, while he was a member of the senate. It covered a period of forty-six years in all, though part of the time he was in private life.—Argonaut.

Elliott Boy Drowned Near Elkhart

Harry, the ten-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Elliott, living three miles west of Elkhart, was drowned in the waters of the St. Joseph river about noon today, when he fell from a boat from which he had been fishing, a short distance east of his home.

The first intimation of the accident was received by the father when he went to summon the boy to dinner and found his hat floating on the water. Realizing that the lad must have fallen from the boat, Mr. Elliott secured a rake and endeavored to drag the bottom of the river. Discovering that the water was too deep for this device the father tied the rake to a long pole and with this succeeded in drawing the body to the bank.

BODY QUICKLY RECOVERED

A physician arrived at the Elliott home shortly after the body had been recovered and with twenty minutes of the supposed time of the accident, but his and the efforts of the family and neighbors were futile to restore life to the little boy.

The boy was last seen by his little sister, Gladys, who went to the home for her dinner, leaving the boy sitting in the stern of the boat which was swung out into the river where the water is from six to ten feet deep.

The parents and little daughter were seated at dinner before the absence of Harry was noted, whereupon the father went in search of him, the sister having left him at the boat landing, some little distance east of the home. The frantic actions of the father, following his discovery of the son's hat, were seen by neighbors and many hurried to join in the rescue of the body.

Every effort was made to revive the boy, but the physician and the members of the family and their friends, and owing to the comparatively short time that the body had been in the water it was at first thought that life might be brought back to the little form. After working for an hour and a half, however, it was seen that all effort was to be in vain and the parents were compelled to resign themselves to their loss.

The family was composed of the parents, the daughter and son.—Elkhart Truth, June 20.

The father of the drowned boy is a son of J. H. Elliott, of Butler, and is well known here.

EDON YOUNG MAN BADLY POMMELED

Constable Livergood Prevents a Tragedy--Didn't Want Son-in-law.

Graham Willoughby, a young man from Edon, O., who has been employed by the curbing contractors, became mixed up, Tuesday evening, with Mr. Anthrop, night watchman at the Butler Co., and as a result Dr. Kramer was called on to dress a bad scalp wound just above the brow inflicted by Mr. Anthrop. It is said that young Willoughby recently took a daughter of Mr. Anthrop to Fort Wayne, where they registered at a hotel as man and wife.

After the father located his daughter the Fort Wayne police were notified of the case, but they took no action. The young lady was brought home and the case laid before Prosecutor Smith who seemed to think the case did not belong to him, and so the indignant father concluded he would appeal to the local authorities. He was at the office of Frank A. Brink making affidavit for the young man's arrest when some one came in and notified him that the girl and young Willoughby were at the above named place where the beating took place. He started immediately for the factory, gathering a piece of iron about two feet long. Constable Livergood followed shortly and got there just after the infuriated father had dealt Willoughby a stunning blow on the head. Mr. Livergood thinks there would have been a tragedy had he not interfered.

With the blood flowing profusely from the young man he was lead from the engine room and told to leave town. He went to the office of Dr. Kramer and had his wounds dressed, leaving town the next morning.

A rumor is about town that Willoughby has been married twice, but there is no truth to the report. We are personally acquainted with him and can vouch for this statement.

There are different opinions as to whether the father did right or not. Anyway he made it very plain that he didn't want a son-in law.

NEW IMPORTING FIRM

Fine Purcheron and Belgian Horses Coming. Loeser Bros. Will Establish Stables in Ligonier.

Several weeks ago the announcement was made that Ferdinand Loeser senior member of the firm of Loeser Brothers of this city, had gone to Europe for the purpose of buying a number of fine-bred horses especially adapted to the needs of the horse breeders of this part of the word. Mr. Loeser spent several weeks in France and Belgium where he purchased a large shipment of fine bred brood mares and stallions, a number of Percherons of royal blood and high bred Belgians.

The importation arrived in this city monday morning, and are being put in condition for inspection. Mr. Loeser says that he has paid especial attention to the selection of a number of fine brood mares and high class stallions that are bound to suit the most critical judge of horses. They are bound to attract attention any where. They all come from the best sires in the greatest draft horse breeding locality of the world.

No man is better qualified to select high class horses than is Mr. Loeser. For forty years these gentlemen have been dealing in horses of all kinds but have devoted most of their attention to heavy horses and they have a reputation as most excellent judges of draft stock.

They will establish their importing head quarters here where they are now putting their barns in shape for the care and display of these horses. They propose to serve the people in this part of the state and serve them well. These animals will be sold at a reasonable profit and upon terms that must be satisfactory. Horse breeders are invited to the stables to make an inspection of the animals.—Ligonier Banner.

JOY RIDERS IN WRECK

Went Into a Ditch in Front of the Hodge Residence Just North of Auburn

Four joy riders, two from Edgerton and two from Butler, went into the ditch in front of the Chester J. Hodge farm just north of Auburn Monday night about 10:30 while bitting a pace that would make Barney Oldfield look like thirty cents.

Bert W. Beidler and wife were out in their machine and in turning around the joy riders came up to them so suddenly that they had time only to give them a part of the road, but enough under ordinary circumstances. The driver of the quartette's car undertook to make a quick turn to one side and pass the Beidler machine without a toot. But fate or something was against the party and into the ditch they went.

Fortunately the machine did not turn turtle, but the occupants did. The ladies were pretty badly shaken up, but after they had time to reflect for a minute they entered into the spirit of the occasion with a genuine joy rider's enthusiasm and laughed heartily when they saw Mr. Beidler back his car up to their machine and jerk it out of the ditch just as easily as taking candy from a baby. And off they went.

The car was an "Auburn" and is owned by an Edgerton man. It was damaged but little. A son of the owner was at the wheel and with a gentleman visitor from a distance drove to Butler, got two ladies and went for a joy ride.—Dispatch.

The Sunrise of Life

Infants and children are constantly needing a laxative. It is important to know what to give them. Their stomach and bowels are not strong enough for salts, purgative waters or cathartic pills, powders or tablets. Give them a mild, pleasant, gentle laxative tonic like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is the one great remedy for you to have in the house to give children when they need it. It is absolutely guaranteed to do what is claimed, and if you want to try it before buying, send your address for a free sample bottle to Pepsin Syrup Co., 119 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill. It is sold by all druggists at 50c and $1.00 a bottle. 22-1m

PICKUPS FROM NEARBY CITIES

ELKHART, Ind., June 20.—Harry Elliott, ten years old, was drowned in the St. Joseph river, near his home, two and one half miles west of Elkhart, shortly after 12 o'clock this afternoon. He was fishing from the end of a boat, which was tied to the shore, a short dtstance from his home.

GARRETT, Ind., June 20.—Word was received here today that E. M. McCartney, until a few weeks ago employed as editor of the Garrett Press and correspondent for the Journal-Gazette had been struck and killed by a street car at Chicago last Thursday. Upon leaving Garrett Mr. McCartney went to Chicago and was employed as a special writer on a newspaper in that city. The accident occurred as the young man was returning to his home early Thursday morning.

KENDALLVILLE, Ind., June 20.—The Magnolias of this city, who went to Ashley Sunday were defeated in a hotly contested game with the team from that place in a score of 5 to 4. Big Jim Swartz was on the mound for the "Mags" and did good work, but the boys failed to get the pill in time of need. They substituted a second baseman and one of their fielders who were unable to attend at the last minute.

AUBURN, Ind., June 21.—F. J. Bussard, the Vandalia agent, has been assessed the sum of $175 25 for a buggy ride. The agent got a horse from Liveryman D. N. Myers and the owner of the animal charged the defendant with having neglectfully permitting the horse to become injured. The case was tried in Squire Green's court and the above verdict was the outcome.

WATERLOO, Ind., June 21.—Alumni of the Waterloo high school will hold their biennial banquet next Friday night and the event will be one of the pleasantest ever held A fine program has been arranged which includes short talks from the former graduate and musical selections.

In convention Saturday the republicans of Steuben county nominated the following ticket: Clerk, Frank D. Hughes; recorder, Harley Griffith; treasurer, Jesse Crampton; sheriff, Austin M. Parsell; surveyor, Carey Covell; assessor, Thomas P. French; coroner, Dr. Hamilton; commissioners, Wade Dalley, James Harpham; councilmen-at-large, John Crampton, Columbus McNutt and Charles Chapin; district councilmen, L. D. Munger, George F. Harding, Fred Weiss, Frank Y. Davis.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., June 20.—Three members of the family of Walter J. Lewis, secretary of the American Trust company, left tonight for Indianapolis to take Pasteur treatment after having been bitten by a fox terrior, which according to the announcement of state laboratory officials at Indianapolis today, was suffering from rabies. They are Mrs M. S. Stewart, mother of Mrs. Lewis, Ewing B. Lewis a newspaper reporter here, and Katherine Lewis, 10 years old, Dorothy Gray, daughter of W. W. Gray, was also bitten. She will go to Chicago for treatment.

AUBURN, Ind., June 21.—Little Ilif Beard, step-daughter of A. J. Seydell, was bitten by a bull dog late this afternoon while she was on her way to a local store to do some shopping. The girl left home carrying a pet canine in her arms and had not gone far when she claimed to have been viciously attacked by the large dog. While she was painfully bitten in several places it is thought that she will recover. The bull dog is claimed to be the property of Mr. Lemmon.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., June 20.—Sam Langford and Al Kaufman will not fight in San Francisco. Instead they will clash at Reno, Nevada, the morning of July 4, in the same ring prepared for Jeffries and Johnson.

ALBION, Ind., June 21.—Rev. D. W. Jones, father of Mrs. Dr. W. T. Green of this city, who fell from the second story window of the Green home Sunday night, when the base of his skull was fractured, died this afternoon about 5:30. Rev. Jones had been in poor health for some time and for several months has been making his home with his daughter, Mrs Green. Mr. Jones would have been eighty-nine years of age had he lived until July of this year. He formerly lived in Fort Wayne and established the Gazette in that city. About twenty-five years ago he preached at Collimer, Ind. The remains will be taken to Fort Wayne for burial Wednesday leaving here at 11:05. Short services will be held at the Green home before the remains are taken to the train.

"Our little daughter, when three months old, began to break out on the head and we had the best doctors to treat her, but they did not do her any good. They said she had eczema. Her scalp was a solid scale all over. The burning and itching was so severe that she could not rest, day or night. We had about given up all hopes when we read of the Cuticura Remedies. We at once got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and one bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, and followed directions carefully. After the first dose of the Cuticura Resolvent, we used the Cuticura Soap freely and applied the Cuticura Ointment. Then she began to improve rapidly and in two weeks the scale came off her head and new hair began to grow. In a very short time she was well. She is now sixteen years of age and a picture of health. We used the Cuticura Remedies about five weeks, regularly, and then we could not tell she had been affected by the disease. We used no other treatments after we found out what the Cuticura Remedies would do for her. J. Fish and Ella M. Fish, Mt. Vernon, Ky., Oct. 12, 1909."

A Woman's Advice.

A woman was looking over the shoulder of a man who was writing this item, and just when he got to this point, and was writing the word "soap" she said:

"There's one great essential in a laundry soap. It must be a soap that will not rot the clothes or the fabrics. Some soaps will clean goods, but they rot them; others have sticky, yellow rosin in them and stain the clothes yellow. Just you write that Easy Task soap saves half the work and saves all the clothes and drives away the dirt and keeps away the disease germs and is the best soap I ever found."

And so her advice has been followed, for women know soap.

Municipal Neatness.

After keeping up a tirade for many years against the billboard nuisance it is very pleasant to note in numerous towns that some drastic measures have been taken looking to the curtailment of this most offensive eyesore. The vacant lot is another problem, with or without the billboard. Ash heaps, piles of tin cans, broken dishes, baling wire, old bed springs, broken carts and perambulators, bottles without number and castoff shoes are a few of the decorations noted in vacant lots of some of our towns. Neatness is indicative of cleanliness just as surely in the case of a municipality as with individuals. While it may cost a little to secure this cleanliness, the cost of maintenance of a high standard would be very little, and assurance of such desirable conditions could be brought about by the passage and enforcement of suitable ordinances. Neatness has its own reward, for, aside from improved appearances, a decided menace to health is removed. The value of cleanliness to the city beautiful movement is simply incalculable. Beautiful surroundings have a decided effect upon the character of our lives. Clean characters come only from clean conditions and clean surroundings. That town is not a desirable place of residence in which many evidences are seen of slovenly municipal housekeeping. Uncleanliness is not a valuable asset to a town's progress.

HARD ON CHILDREN

When Teacher Has Coffee Habit.

"Best is best, and best will ever live." When a person feels this way about Postum they are glad to give testimony for the benefit of others.

A school teacher down in Miss says: "I had been a coffee drinker since my childhood, and the last few years it had injured me seriously.

"One cup of coffee taken at breakfast would cause me to become so nervous that I could scarcely go through with the day's duties, and this nervousness was often accompanied by deep depression of spirits and heart palpitation.

"I am a teacher by profession, and when under the influence of coffee had to struggle against crossness when in the school room.

"When talking this over with my physician, he suggested that I try Postum, so I purchased a package and made it carefully according to directions; found it excellent of flavor and nourishing.

"In a short time I noticed very gratifying effects. My nervousness disappeared, I was not irritated by my pupils, life seemed full of sunshine, and my heart troubled me no longer.

"I attribute my change in health and spirits to Postum alone."

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

PROF. WILLIS L. MOORE, chief of the weather bureau, believes that the state of the wind is a factor in our daily health, knowledge of which should no more be neglected than whether we ate mushrooms or toadstools for dinner, or whether we blow out the gas at night or turn off the cock. If we are to accept Prof. Moore's declaration of independence, all fetiches or theories as to the cause of American supremacy must be cast aside and thrown to the winds—to the east wind, preferably. Preferably to the east wind, because that is the opposite of the west wind, and Washington's weather wonder-worker announces that it is to the west wind that Americans owe to-day what they proudly possess. It is because the west wind carries no disease, is highly electrified, bears ozone, has a "downward component," and in all respects is as virtuous and life-giving as its opposite, the east wind, is pernicious and life-destroying, that we are today a great nation and commercial leader.

"It is well known to meteorologists that easterly winds either hug the earth or have an upward component of motion," he says. "They, therefore, gather the humidity, dust, disease, and other bacteria, and, as a rule, they are warm and humid. All of these conditions make them foul winds, under which animal life is enervated and rendered susceptible to the germs which the winds themselves carry and disseminate. The converse is true of the northwest winds. They come from above, with a downward component of motion that bears a direct relation to the velocity. They come from the regions where the air is dry, pure, and highly electrified, and where ozone exists in comparatively large quantities. The cool, pure air of the northwest wind is, therefore, an invigorating air."

Seekers after health and restored vigor need only to pursue the west wind. The more constantly they are bathed in its ozone, electricity, and "downward component," the more speedy and complete will be their cure. In hospitals and sick rooms, when anxious friends are in agonies of suspense as to whether the patient will survive, or be pushed across the dividing line into other regions, doctors will be quite non-essential. All one needs is a weather vane. If the wind bloweth from the west, all is well. The sick one will recover. But if the wind is from the east, abandon hope. Of course, if the letters on the weather vane be misplaced, accurate forecasts are impossible.

Summer visitors to the Atlantic coast would indignantly deny Prof. Moore's indictment of the east wind as foul and humid, while the hotel proprietors would be willing to make affidavits to the contrary. Science is not to be sneered at, though, and it must be a mere delusion that a vacation on our Eastern coast—sailing, bathing, and lying in the sand in the face of the east wind—is an aid to health and happiness. Henceforth "eastern shore" seems doomed to lose its friends; its winds are "foul." Japan, where east and southeast winds prevail for more than six months in the year, cannot be a progressive nation; the Moore theory forbids it. The Romans, who lived in Italy, which on the wind charts is dotted with arrows pointing in every direction, could not have been a great race of world conquerors; they had not sufficient west wind.

The climate of California has long been famed as one of the ideal spots of the world for human existence. Yet part of the secret of its delightful weather lies in the western winds, which coming from the vast expanses of the Pacific Ocean, are moist, not dry, and warm, not cool. On the other hand, the regions west of the Rocky Mountains and coast ranges, are for the most part arid and uninhabitable by man, except as artificial means are introduced by which he can raise enough for his sustenance. Yet the prevailing winds in the States of Arizona, New Mexico, parts of Idaho, and Utah are west winds. Further East are the prairie States, extending even beyond the Mississippi. That this entire section, now the home of millions of people, and producing food for millions more, does not form an American Sahara, is due to the influence of the Gulf of Mexico, in the opinion of the meteorologists. At the very moment of Prof. Moore's announcement, their works on his shelves united in declaring that the mountains of Mexico shunt the rainbearing winds of the gulf to the North, watering the cornfields and grass plains of the West.

The opinion of most meteorologists seems to be that winds usually blow to the land from the ocean, carrying moisture. Their temperature is according to that of the water over which they pass. If transverse mountains are encountered, the wind is forced upward, losing heat as it rises, and thereby causing the condensation of its water vapor. If the mountains are very high, as the Rockies, when the wind reaches the summit of the range it will have lost all its moisture, and is much colder, having given up its energy.

Rushing down on the opposite side, it gains heat, through compression, without doing work, it is claimed, and therefore sweeps the lands beyond as a dry, warm wind, such as is found on every desert. In fact, it is declared that it is the mountains which make the deserts, drawing from the winds as they do all their life-sustaining moisture. Consequently, the character of the wind from any point of the compass seems mainly to be governed by the nature of the earth's surface over which it has passed or is passing. Further influences are the sun, as at the equator and the poles, where certain definite processes go on continually. Another influence which diverts the trade winds from their absolute north and south path is the rotation of the earth.

It is this variability in the climatic elements and differences of geographical situation which give to the countries of the earth their various climates. Thus is explained the fact that New England, with its easterly winds, and England, with its southwest wind—practically the prevailing wind of the entire season round—resemble one another in climate.

Much as one may enjoy gazing at the setting sun, descending within its shrine of glory, while the gentle twilight wind, which often comes from the west in this section fans one's face, there is little to be heard among other men of science in support of Prof. Moore's declaration.—Washington Post.

BIBLES IN 450 TONGUES

Stream Starting from "Door of a Million Bibles" That Circles Globe.

INTEREST IN THE SCRIPTURES.

Ninety Million Copies Printed in Various Languages and at Prices to Suit Every Purse.

There is a door in a 4th avenue building in New York City which has all the hallmarks of shipping department doors in general—battered side posts, polished iron chutes, boxes on the sidewalk marked with names that seem to have been taken haphazard from a gazetteer, the New York Sun says. There is a special name attached to this particular door. This is the door of a million bibles. Out of this door each year 1,000,000 bibles pass to be distributed through the world.

The rumor that a conditional gift of $500,000 from Mrs. Russell Sage awaits the action of the bible society in raising a similar amount is confirmed. Already large sums have been received from the various agencies about the country to be added to the fund which is being raised. It takes approximately $600,000 to pay the expenses of the society each year and the $1,000,000 that the officials expect to receive through Mrs. Sage's gift will be considered in the light of a nest egg, something to depend on in financial depressions and slacking up of contributions.

It was Sir Walter Scott who in his last illness, after asking a friend to read aloud to him and hearing the interrogation as to the book desired, said, "There is only one." As to this "only one," there is, according to the statistics of the American Bible Society, no evidence that the interest of the human family has lapsed into indifference. A record of approximately 90,000,000 volumes in eighty years speaks eloquently to the contrary.

In the salesroom of the society are cases filled with duplicate copies of original books and manuscripts. The fact that the building is not fireproof is the reason why the interesting collection owned by the society is at present housed at the Lenox library. This collection contains editions of the bible in more than 150 languages and dialects. Of English versions and revisions there are approximately 5,000 volumes exclusive of the manuscripts.

Here you will see one of the few "Vinegar bibles," Oxford, 1716, in which a printer's mistake has been immortalized, as in the "Breeches bible." There is a facsimile of the bible printed on white satin which was presented to the empress dowager of China in 1894 by 10,000 Christian women. There is a copy of the bible done into the Mongolian dialect by Schrescherowsky, a cripple, who also did it into Calmuck. There is a copy of the "Mazarin bible," the first book printed from movable metal types in two volumes, which appeared about the year 1455 and the first recognized copy of which was discovered in the library of Cardinal Mazarin—hence the title. It is called the "Gutenberg bible," from the name of the printer, and again termed the "Forty-two-line bible," from the number of lines in each column of its pages. Copies of the several editions of the Gutenberg bible have been sold for sums which would procure nearly 100,000 bibles now printed by the American society.

There are also copies of the Douay version of the bible used by Roman Catholic of the translations from the Latin vulgate made by the English college at Rheims, of the English version of the scriptures now in common use and of the revised edition, the work of English and American scholars, which appeared in 1885. According to the terms of the agreement then entered into no other revision was to be published until after fourteen years, so it was not until the summer of 1901 that the American standard edition of the revised edition was given out.

Translations in 450 Tongues.

Altogether, through the efforts of the society, translations of the bible have been made into about 450 languages and dialects.

At the present time the Bible Society is printing the bible in three of the languages of Africa which have never been used for writing. It is also printing bibles in five of the languages of the Philippines and slowly completing the printed list of thirty languages used in the islands of the south Pacific.

A great many of the books intended for distribution in the far east are printed in places other than New York. For example, there is a fine printing establishment at Yokohama under the auspices of the Bible Society which employs Japanese workmen under contract. From this place distribution is made to the Philippines and to Korea. The society also prints in Shanghai and Chentu and at Bangkok in Siam, and at Beirut in Syria similar work is done, some of it on presses belonging to the Presbyterian American Bible Society co-operates.

Many of the colporteurs, particularly those in the northwest, speak at least twenty different languages and continually requests are coming from them and from outside people begging that the bible may be translated into some dialect or language spoken in far-off points, the very names of which are unknown to the majority of New Yorkers. In the agency which distributes the scriptures from the city of San Francisco in California, Nevada, Oregon and Washington are Spanish-speaking Mexicans, Portuguese, one-half of all the Chinese in the United States, Japanese, Koreans, Hindoos, Malays, Hawaiians and Filipinos.

Early in its history the society made arrangements to supply bibles at half cost to hotels, steamboats and railroad cars, and at the principal seaports, with New York in the lead, a large number are regularly sent among the naval forces and among seamen generally. About a million and a half books have been distributed by the marine committee.

TRAMP'S TRIP Around the World

HARRY A. FRANCK, has followed in the footsteps of Wyckoff, the sociologist of Princeton University, and the late Josiah Flint in leading the life of a tramp. Unlike Wyckoff, he did not undertake this for the study of mankind, and unlike Flint he was not a tramp because he felt in his blood the call of the road. Mr. Franck's experience was a compromise between those of Wyckoff and Flint. He did not make sociological studies while traveling, and he did answer the call of the blood to be free. But he began life as a laborer and earned his way through High School and the University of Michigan by selling papers and waiting on table during his school days, and in the summer vacations he worked on Western railroads as a section hand or in the harvest fields of the Northwest. He got his idea of a trip around the world while he was teaching French in the Central High School of Detroit. When he was 22 he started his tramp around the world, working his way from city to city. He left Detroit and worked his way to Glasgow tending cattle. He was a sailor from Marseilles to Egypt, and at Port Said he worked at pounding beans. He was errand boy at Cairo, in Egypt, circus clown at Colombo, street car inspector at Madras, and laborer at Yokohama. Now he is doing literary work with his own experiences as a basis from which to draw.

BAPTIST MINISTER QUITS TO GO INTO BUSINESS.

Rev. Donald D. MacLaurin has resigned as pastor of the Second Baptist Church in Chicago and leaves the pulpit to embark on a business career.

The withdrawal of Dr. MacLaurin from the ministry is the result of his espousal of the cause of Prof. George Burman Foster of the University of Chicago before the Baptist ministers' conference of Chicago during the proceedings that resulted in the expulsion of the university lecturer from that body because of Unitarian utterances and writings.

Severe criticism of the action of the conference and the ministers who were responsible for it was voiced by Dr. MacLaurin, who declared that they were guilty of a "betrayal of the fundamental principles of the Baptist denomination." The retiring pastor said his defense of Prof. Foster was merely in the name of justice and that he would have defended any other member of the conference in the same way. "There is an impression throughout the country," said Dr. MacLaurin, "that because I defended Prof. Foster I share his religious views. This I wish to deny emphatically."

Dr. MacLaurin has been a Baptist minister thirty-six years, including the nine years he preached while working for his degree at Colgate University. He is a member of the Phi Beta Kappa honorary society. He has been preaching in Chicago nearly three years, having come from New York city, and has been one of the city's most able and widely known ministers.

BEAR TEARS KEEPER.

With his body badly torn and mangled by teeth and claws and his left arm almost torn from its socket, Richard Spicer, a keeper at the Bronx Park Zoo, New York, was unconscious when rescued from the bear pit after a desperate struggle with an angry bear. He was removed to a hospital in a critical condition. Elwyn Sanborn, a photographer, escaped from the pit with minor hurts after a hard fight with the animal. Patcha, a huge brown Russian bear, who had always been considered mild-tempered, became angered when Spicer attempted to make her sit up with her cubs and pose for a photograph. First dealing him a terrific blow with her paw, she next seized him by the arm and dragged him into the den, clawing and mauling him. Sanborn grabbed an iron bar and rushed to the rescue of Spicer, who by that time had been rendered unconscious. Patcha turned on him, but the photographer managed to fight her off. His screams and the cries of a hundred spectators brought other attendants, who rescued the imperiled men.

LAND GRABBER TRICKS

Frauds by Which the Government Is Swindled Out of Thousands of Acres.

OBSTACLES TO SETTLEMENT.

Cattlemen Put Up Fences That Practically Inclose Large Tracts of Public Domain.

There are thousands of easy-money men in the west to-day who are operating skin games as hackneyed in that section as is juggling the shells and pea in Indiana, William Atherton Du Puy says in the Indianapolis Star. The object of their operations is to get from Uncle Sam land to which they are not entitled. The same old games have been worked for generations.

Government lands are not highly prized in the sections where they are plentiful. The government is such an indefinite proprietor that no man has felt called upon to see that fraud is not perpetrated. To obtain illegal title to land has been classed with such jocular lapses of conscience as that which cheats one's neighbor in a horse trade or surreptitiously purloins watermelons. The government, through its agents, is thoroughly familiar with these methods, and it is to prevent them that much legislation is now pending.

There is yet an empire to be saved from unfair appropriation. The government to-day owns land, exclusive of Alaska, greater in extent than all that region east of the Alleghenies upon which dwell 30,000,000 people. There is enough of it to make twelve states like New York, two like Texas or fifty like Massachusetts. There are 80,000,000 acres of it designated as coal land and 30,000,000 acres that may be irrigated. There is enough water power on it to turn the spindles of the nation, present and future. It occupies the position with relation to the public that was held by the lands of Kansas a generation ago. The ingenious methods of its wrongful appropriation are many and interesting.

Great stockmen have much influence in state and county government in the west. The states have the authority to lease public land granted them by the national government for such purposes as the maintenance of schools and institutions. Through the influence of certain wealthy men of the ranches long strips of land are leased or sold. These strips are in such forms as to compare with the frame of a picture. That portion that would go to make up the picture itself is still government land. The stockmen have a perfect right, obviously, to put fences on the land they have bought or leased. But in so doing they inclose in their pastures vast amounts of government land, which, according to law, it is unlawful to fence. This land is practically withdrawn from other settlement, for the homesteader locating there would be cut off from the world by the fences and harassed beyond endurance by the cattleman and his cowboys.

Another method of avoiding the letter of the law in fencing government land is to inclose it almost but not quite. The fence around a field may lack but a foot of inclosing it and a stout post may stand on either side of this gap. No horse or cow could crowd through it. Yet the land is not inclosed by the fence.

The live stock companies also make many filings on land through their herders and cowboys, who take up homesteads of 160 acres each. The homesteader is supposed to reside upon the land to make proof for the purpose of obtaining title. Where the cowpunchers are on a big ranch and moving back and forth, they can, by building a small shack on 160 acres, make such pretense as to residence as to render it difficult to cancel the pending entry. In this way the companies are able to get title to large tracts, or at least control them for many years.

There are several transcontinental railroad lines to which Congress has given the alternate or odd sections of land for from twenty to forty miles on each side of their tracks. This was given as an inducement to the railroads to build into the desolate country in early times, but the result of it has been the loss of title to the government of land that is worth many times the cost of building the railroad. The odd and even sections are so laid out that the railroad companies' grants are as the black spaces on a checker board, the intervening red spaces being government land. Cattle companies purchase the odd sections from the railroads and run their fences to inclose vast areas, the fences crossing from one odd section to another at the points where these barely touch, as do the diagonal squares on the checker board. In this way the fences, strictly speaking, are on the land purchased from the railroads, but an equal amount of government land is likewise inclosed in the pastures. The Supreme Court has held that this does not violate the law. Yet it is practically impossible for the general public to get at even sections, and the cattlemen are getting as much benefit from them as though they were actually owned by them.

WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

What a contrast! The kitchen no longer is stifling hot, the work is now done with comfort, and the housewife is not worn out with the heat.

She saves her strength, keeps her health and is better able to enjoy the summer.

The New Perfection does everything that any other stove can do—all the family cooking, baking, washing and ironing. No smoke, no dust, no odor. Heat is applied directly and not wasted. A turn, and the flame is out.

The New Perfection stove has a Cabinet Top with shelf for keeping plates and food hot, drop shelves for the coffee pot or saucepans, and nickeled towel racks.

It has long turquoise-blue enamel chimneys. The nickel finish, with the bright blue of the chimneys, makes the stove very attractive and invites cleanliness. Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

Cautionary Note:—Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

FARM AND GARDEN

Hollow Concrete Fence Posts.

To construct hollow re-enforced concrete fence posts a few modifications of the ordinary mold are necessary, in addition to the core to be placed in the center of the post, writes C. A. Cook. The mold for an ordinary 4x4 inch post 7 feet long consists of a bottom, two sides and two end gates, all of which are held together by three iron clamps placed over the top of the sides after they are put together. The sides are held to the bottom by small dowel pins inserted in holes in the bottom, so that the sides may be readily revolved, leaving the finished post lying on the base to harden. One end gate must have a two-inch hole in it through which the core may be withdrawn.

The wooden core is constructed of 5 pieces and is 2 inches in diameter. Its full length should be 7½ feet. A round piece of soft wood may be sawed into five strips, so that when the central portion is withdrawn the narrow sides and then the wider sides may be removed from the concrete post.

The galvanized iron core tapers from 2 inches in diameter at the larger end to ¾ of an inch at the top, for a 7-foot post is 7 feet 2 inches long. This can be made by any tinsmith from good heavy galvanized iron, and should be closed at the smaller end.

The mold is fastened together, and about one inch of concrete is placed on the bottom before the core is put in position. After being wrapped with paper the core should be passed through the hole in the lower end gate. The paper covering will permit the removal of the core in twenty to thirty minutes after the post is made. The galvanized iron core may be greased, but the paper is fully as effective.

The wooden core extends entirely through the post, and two end gates with two-inch holes in them are used with it. The metal core should be placed in the mold so that the smaller end is about two inches from the top of the post. After the core is in position the remainder of the concrete can be put in and the post set aside to harden until the core and molds can be removed.

Farm Work Horses.

If those who have horses in their charge on the farm would inaugurate a more systematic course of feeding, utilizing the cheaper forms of feed, much expense of winter feeding could be saved, and better and healthier horses would be the result. Adopt, for instance, the plan of feeding the horses in the morning only a stomachful of the feed, a stomachful at noon, and only a stomachful at night. Such a course would give the horse's stomach a chance to digest the feed.

If a variety of feed is at hand, then feed one kind in the morning, another at noon and another at night. Regularity in feeding is important. If horses are watered frequently enough they will not drink too much at a time. Regular exercise in the open air is absolutely necessary to maintain a healthy condition. Spasmodic exercising alternating with periods of inactivity is dangerous and unprofitable. The proper use of the means at command on the farm will insure a good condition of the horses that will look well, be well and give excellent service.—N. A. Clapp.

Origin of the Potato.

The cultivated potato is a native of the Chilean and Peruvian Andes, but extends in original type as far north as Colorado, where a wild form is occasional. Wild varieties of the potato exist in many parts of the world, but nowhere was it cultivated before the discovery of the western continent save in North and South America. It was taken to Europe, probably from Peru to Spain, early in the sixteenth century. It seems Sir Francis Drake introduced it into England in 1586, though Sir Walter Raleigh is said to have done this a year before. It was first regarded as a curiosity, and so remained until the latter part of the eighteenth century, though the Royal Society of London in 1663 recommended it as a possible safeguard against famine among the Irish peasantry.

The Morgan Horse.

Forty years ago the Morgans were the favorite road horses. This strain traces to a single ancestor, Justin Morgan, foaled in Vermont in 1793, his blood being largely thoroughbred. From him descended the Black Hawk, Bashaw, Golddust, Ethan Allen, Ben Franklin, General Knox and Daniel Lambert families. The Morgan type is short of leg, thick and round barrel, intelligent and of great courage and endurance.

A New Insecticide.

Prof. C. P. Gillette, of the Colorado Agricultural College, his discovered a new insecticide for the codlin moth, which has proved effective in destroying the worms, and probably will be found not so injurious to apple trees as other arsenical poisons. Sulphide of arsenic is the name of the new poison. It comes cheaper than the arsenics now in use.

Planting Potatoes.

A potato specialist gives this advice: Prefer clover sod manured. Plow about four inches deep, planting in every third furrow. Plant about last week in May. Don't plant when dew is on the clover, as it is apt to rot the potatoes. Run over the potato ground with a disk just when the potatoes are coming up, then harrow. Leave two eyes when cutting seed potatoes. Don't cut too long before planting. Use one pound paris green to 100 pounds plaster and as a rule do not go over the potatoes more than once.

A Three-Pen Poultry House.

The cut shows a very useful poultry house for three pens of fowls, with yards arranged for the same number. The house is 30x30 feet and will accommodate 100 fowls. The hallway takes but little room out of the interior and yet it communicates with all three pens. The inside divisions are of wire netting, allowing the sunshine that enters at the side of the house to fall into the pens; but the house should be so located that three sides may receive morning, noon and afternoon sun. The plan is followed, according to Orange Judd Farmer, for dividing the yard outside as for dividing the space inside the house. This gives a large amount of yard space, with yards conveniently located. This building is shingled all over the outside, with the heaviest building paper under the shingles, and may either be sheathed or lathed and plastered inside.

Caring for Grapes.

Rules for grapes culture from the experiment station record, United States Department of Agriculture:

The main points in grape culture are summarized as follows:

With a few exceptions grapes of the Lubrusca species, of which the Concord may be taken as the type, are the most satisfactory for general planting.

A warm, rich, well drained soil is best for the grape.

Almost all vines should be planted at least eight feet apart.

Strong one-year-old vines are most desirable for planting.

Thorough shallow cultivation is essential.

The pruning of the first two years must be done with reference to the system under which the vine is to be trained after it begins fruiting. During this time the vine should become thoroughly established.

The best time for the principal pruning is soon after the leaves drop in autumn, but pruning can be done at any time during the winter when the vines are not frozen. Summer pruning consists of pinching lateral branches in order to encourage the development of the fruit and the bearing wood for the succeeding year.

The long arm, short spur system of training is usually the most satisfactory for the inexperienced grower, but the renewal systems are highly recommended.

Grafting Wax.

In an iron pot melt over the fire 100 parts of the finest asphalt, add 600 parts brown pitch, until, with stirring, it is fluid; then pour in 600 parts of melted yellow beeswax. The fire must not be too hot at this time. When it is all well mixed, add 600 parts of thick turpentine, stir it well and pour into it 600 parts of refined tallow. Lift it from the fire, stir until you begin to note that it is cooling, and then drop in, stirring steadily, very carefully, because the mass will at once rise up, 250 to 500 parts of alcohol, according to the consistency you wish it to have.

Removing a Small Stump.

By fastening the chain to one of the large roots and bringing it across the top of the stump, a leverage can be secured to take full advantage of the strength of the horses.

Soil Moisture.

To produce any crop it requires from 300 to 500 pounds of water to make a pound of dry matter. It is important that soils have a great deal of moisture, and that it is not lost by evaporation. Deep plowing makes soils hold more moisture and frequent cultivations prevent its loss by evaporation.

Green Food for Chicks.

If you have your own glans feed as great a variety as you have. Cracked wheat, cracked Kaffir corn and cracked corn are all good, but something in place of meat should be given, either beef scraps or blood meal, also charcoal and grit.

The Floor of the Brooder.

Some poultrymen use bran on the floors of the brooders, and it is a good thing, provided it is replenished every day. It is more apt to get foul than dry alfalfa leaves. There is just about as much nourishment in the one as the other.

The Honey Product.

The country's honey product for last year is estimated at $25,000,000. There are 7,000 beekeepers in the country and the product of their hives was sufficient to fill a train of cars long enough to reach from New York to Buffalo.

Small Flocks Best.

Because table scraps form a large part of the small flock's ration, and they are usually evenly balanced rations, is one of the reasons a small flock of hens does better than a large one.

The apple crop of 1909 was of much poorer quality than that of 1908, and about 3,000,000 barrels shorter.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

While occupying the pastorate of a Western church in his early career Dr. George H. Fenton had a deacon whose character had always been above reproach until a certain prayer meeting which followed a sermon during which the elder had soundly slumbered.

"Will Brother Jones kindly lead?" was asked by the pastor at the beginning of the prayer service.

Waking with a start at the mention of his name, the deacon almost broke up the service by replying: "I led last time. It's your turn. What are trumps?"—Philadelphia Record.

Kidney Troubles Lower the Vitality of the Whole Body.

Don't wait for serious illness; begin using Doan's Kidney Pills when you first feel backache or notice urinary disorders.

David P. Corey, 236 W. Washington St., Ionia, Mich., says: "I had kidney trouble so badly that for six months I could only get around with a cane or crutches. The backache grew gradually worse until I was compelled to take to my bed. While still in bed I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and gradually improved until well."

ENGLISH OFFICER'S TRAVELS.

Sees Strange Sights in 4,000-Mile Trip Through Asiatic Turkey.

Lieut. Etherton, a young officer in the Garhwal rifles, who has just arrived in England after completing a secret service mission on behalf of the British government, spent three months in his overland journey from the Himalayas, through Chinese Turkestan, Mongolia and Siberia, to the Trans-Siberian Railway, a total distance of 4,000 miles, a London exchange says.

After suffering almost incredible hardships and privations Lieut. Etherton finally carried his mission to a triumphal conclusion. At the end of his journey he received a cable from England announcing the death of his mother.

Some idea of the remarkable nature of Lieut. Etherton's explorations may be gleaned from what he tells.

Strange nomad women in Chinese Turkestan, who ride bucking horses in high boots with high French heels and are wooed and won by being captured on horseback. As many as a dozen suitors frequently take part in an exciting "chase of love."

District officials who were completely won over by the gift of a bottle of preserved gooseberries or a box of assorted crystallized fruit.

Mongolian natives who were utterly cowed by the daily "telescoping" of the explorer's collapsible bed.

A mysterious deserted lake, near the Russian frontier, 800 miles in extent, but of unknown depth, in which no fish swim and no boats float.

THE HOUSEHOLD

How to Cook Asparagus.

Asparagus should be boiled gently in well salted water, standing if possible to save the heads. The shoots tied together in one bunch should be put into the pot so that the water will reach about half-way up. When they have boiled some ten or fifteen minutes they should be laid on their side so that Served with white sauce or with nothing but butter if the full asparagus taste is to be brought out, this makes one of the real delicacies of the table. the water covers all and finished.

Rhubarb Ginger.

Wash but do not peel the rhubarb. The pink skin gives it a pretty color. Measure the rhubarb and allow as much sugar as you have fruit. To four pounds sugar and rhubarb allow the juice of two lemons and the yellow rinds, cut thin, with an eighth of a pound of green ginger root cut in thin slices. Cook until thick as marmalade.

Mexican Scrambled Eggs.

When you are tired of plain scrambled eggs try them as they are cooked in Mexico. Roast a dozen fresh green peppers a few minutes, peel, remove the seeds and chop, when they should be boiled in a very little water until tender, and season well with butter. Beat six or eight eggs, add with salt to the peppers and fry all for a moment in hot butter.

Raisin Fudge.

Two cups sugar, one cup milk, butter size of an egg, one-half cup chocolate. Cook, stirring constantly, until bubbles break slowly. Have ready one-half pound walnuts chopped fine, and one pound chopped seeded raisins. Add these, stirring until stiff, and pour into buttered pans. Mark in squares when sufficiently cool.

Tough Steak.

To make steaks very tender lay them, before cooking, on a flat dish containing three tablespoonfuls of salad oil and one of vinegar, well mixed together. Each side of the steak should be soaked for thirty minutes—making an hour in all—just before cooking.

Quick Brown Bread.

Two cups Graham flour, one cup sour milk, one-half cup molasses, two tablespoonfuls sugar, pinch of salt, one teaspoonful soda in two tablespoonfuls warm water, three-fourths cup raisins chopped and floured. Bake forty minutes in a moderate oven. Excellent.

Hints About the House.

Gritty soaps must never be used for washing paints.

In wiping the kitchen range use a small bag or a glove.

Paper bags which accumulate so fast may be put to good use in the kitchen.

Rub mirrors with methylated spirits, and polish with a touch of blue powder.

One tablespoon of ammonia to a quart of water will clean gold or silver jewelry.

Rolls may be rewarmed and made crisp and good if placed in a paper bag in a hot oven.

The flat taste of boiled water may be removed by pouring from one pitcher to another in the open air.

Meats and fish which spatter in cooking may be seared first and then placed in the oven to finish cooking.

When boiled custard is slightly overcooked it may be brought back to the right consistency if it be thoroughly beaten with an egg beater.

A baking powder box with a small hole in the bottom makes a sharp, quick chopper for use when warming over potatoes or vegetables.

The soiled lace yoke of a dress need not generally be removed to be cleaned. A plan which usually restores its pristine freshness is to rub powdered starch into the lace, let it lie some hours and then brush it out. The starch absorbs both grease and dust.

ART OF EATING AN APPLE.

It Is at Its Best If Munched When Sitting on a Fence.

The apple is so engagingly vagabondish a fruit. It is the black sheep of the fruit family, the tramp and roadster, just as the berries are the gamins and beggars. To eat an apple at a table is to treat it with all disregard of its charm and character, the New York Sun says; to approach it with knife and plate is to take the hopelessly wrong road to its good graces. It should be munched out of doors, preferably with others in one's pockets. An apple is at its best if eaten while sitting on a fence. It then admits you to its sweetest juices, and so attuned is it to the posture, so grateful for your understanding of its proper environment and for the spirit of your attack, that any apple, even a lamentably gnarled one, contrives at such a time to be not wholly unworthy of your attention.

An apple always incites to theft, seducing the most carping moralist, and yet making theft seem right, seem the only sane act, in the very moment of your downfall. Apples love wanderers, approve of homeless people and followers of the highway. They encourage them by growing near the road and doing their best to sustain and nourish. Even in a city apples hold their own and exert their influence. They make opera goers stop at fruit stands and in the flare of a gas jet drop carefully chosen apples into a vulgar and undisguised paper bag. With its pleasant bulge against one's side one's habits change, sinking to a distinctly informal plane. Apples are above all an informal fruit and they argue that opera clothes have no weight against the enticing of rowdyish diversion of a ride on the top of a motor bus, air and apples being sufficient pleasure to justify the fall of any man. They argue so well, backed by their wholesome, lawless tastes, that one must needs agree, and providing the apple sets the tone they make any lark a success.

Your Great Grandmother Made Soap.

She would fill a barrel with wood ashes, let rain water seep through them to make lye, and then have a soap boiling day, using all the bacon rinds and scraps of fat meat and grease she had saved. She made soft soap. Nowadays women don't have to ruin their tempers and their health and their looks making soap, or toiling all day over the washing. Easy Task soap—a pure, white laundry soap made of clean tallow, cocoanut oil, borax and naptha does the hard half of the work in the laundry and everywhere else in the house that a safe and sure cleaner is needed.

What Ails You?

Do you feel weak, tired, despondent, have frequent headaches, coated tongue, bitter or bad taste in morning, "heart-burn," belching of gas, acid risings in throat after eating, stomach gnaw or burn, foul breath, dizzy spells, poor or variable appetite, nausea at times and kindred symptoms?

If you have any considerable number of the above symptoms you are suffering from biliousness, torpid liver with indigestion, or dyspepsia. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is made up of the most valuable medicinal principles known to medical science for the permanent cure of such abnormal conditions. It is a most efficient liver invigorator, stomach tonic, bowel regulator and nerve strengthener.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is not a patent medicine or secret nostrum, a full list of its ingredients being printed on its bottle-wrapper and attested under oath. A glance at these will show that it contains no alcohol, or harmful habit-forming drugs. It is a fluid extract made with pure, triple-refined glycerine, of proper strength, from the roots of native American medicinal forest plants. "It cured me," or "It saved the life of my child," are the expressions you hear every day about Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. This is true the world over where this valuable remedy has been introduced. No other medicine in use for diarrhoea or bowel complaints has received such general approval. The secret of the success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is that it cures. Sold by G. W. Geddes. 22-1m

The "back from Elba business does not seem to fit the Roosevelt return. He happened to land on June 18, the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo. Is it possible that he was contriving to play the part of a Blucher to Taft's Wellington? Have Napoleons Beveridg, Dolliver, LaFollette, et al. thought of that dire contingency?.

As soon as he landed in New York Mr. Roosevelt declared he was "ready and eager" to help solve problems that must be solved. As a matter of cold fact there is growing feeling in this country that most of our national problems can be solved better without Roosevelt's help than with it. But, however that may be, the split in the ex-president's party presents a matter on which he can work for a long time.

The Cincinnati Enquirer has taken a test vote in Ohio similar to the one recently taken in Indiana. It shows that the Taft administration and the Payne Aldrich tariff law are immensely unpopular. It further shows that the republican party is blamed for the increased cost of living. By a vote which stands about two to one it also declared that the political trend favors the democratic party. Doubtless a similar poll taken in other states would produce the same general results as those taken in Indiana and Ohio.

The Indiana republicans have been put in a most humiliating position. After a somewhat sensational appearance of boldness in their state convention, the insurgent leaders in this state have since gone down on their knees to Mr. Taft, as the head of the "regulars," and begged him not to interfere with their game. Both Senator Beveridge and his state chairman have, according to Washington reports, gone to the White House with representations that it would not do to have cross-firing by the two factions. What promises they made or offered to make in return for Mr. Taft's aid has not transpired. But the mere fact that Beveridge and his organization, so defiant in their state convention, should now be slipping in at the backdoor of the headquarters of the "regulars" and begging for favors, is sufficient to discredit their whole campaign. It is not only humiliating those republicans who stand for genuine reform, but it proves to the people of Indiana as a whole that those persons now in charge of the republican machine are trying to trick the public, by false pretense, into giving support to the Beveridge program.

When the Ballinger trial is ended,
And the jury has said what it thinks;
When the case has been made and defended
With the wonted political winks—
We shall smile— and gads, we shall need to
That feel it as well had been dropped,
And the Guggenheim crowd will proceed to Resume where it was when it stopped.
The signs shall come down in the timber,
And the patents shall tie up the coal.
The law will get flabby and limber,
And the trusts will do well on the whole.
It always turns out in that manner,
Although we may blush to confess it,
And we do not regard it a banner
Achievement, exactly, to guess it.

July is a tribute to Caeser. One day with some other insurgents, he talked by the Pillar of Pompey on things of political urgents. He was just on the point of explaining the key to some government riddle when a party of regulars jumped him and cut him in two in the middle.

There were Decius Brutus, the speaker, and Cassius, boss of the Senate, together with others insistent upon some political tenet. "The party forever!" they shouted, and what with that terrible slasher Servillius Casca great Caeser as well had been run through a hasher.

At any rate, Anthony found him cut up into fodder for fishes, and begged this request of the Romans, who granted the least of his wishes. And thus it has happened and shall be so long as the Tiber runs by the Pillar of Pompey that Caesar shall live in the name of July.

The Fourth shall return to discover
Us waiting in battle array,
And what with one thing and another
Regretting we won anyway.
The cannon shall boom, and the scrambie
For things on the medicine shelves
Shall warn inexperienced countries
Aspiring to freedom themselves.

The dynamite cap and the rocket shall remind us of tyranny thwarted, and the valiant forefather shall turn in his coffin to see what he started. The eagle shall mount on his pinions and circle the North and the South, and the rapidfire orator stand on the platform and shoot off his mouth.

This latter, however, is harmless in a strict pathological way, but remains notwithstanding an evil we must in due season allay. Alas, how deficient is nature that might lay this pest on the shelf with ruling that shooting his mouth off he gave the lockjaw to himself!

This tetanus, we are quite certain, has good and defensible uses, and all of its manifestations thus far have been only abuses. The idea, as we regard it, is not that it should be the cause of any more serious matter than locking the orator's jaws.

You know that we never hear of it except on the Fourth of July, and whenever some innocent gets it we forever are wondering why. Well, this is the fact of the matter, and by jove, we are willing to bet it turns out in the long run that no one but a lot of old wind-jammers get it.

However, be that as it may be,
And get whom the tetanus will,
The jubilant youth of the nation
Will resume with its shooting to kill.
The safe and the sane celebration
Will suit us who are not so skittish,
But the youngsters have got to do something
To show what we did to the British.

Republican Convention

The republicans of the county met in delegate convention last Thursday for the purpose of nominating a county ticket. The attendance was much larger than expected and there was no spirited contests to arouse the voter and bring out the crowd.

For representative, H. R. Culbertson announced the name of Capt. L. L. Denison, of Keyser township, which was seconded by L. H. Higley, of Butler, who had been favorably mentioned for the place. The nomination was made by acclamation.

For county assessor the names of P. D. Ginder, of Wilmington, and George Scattergood, of Richland, were announced. The ballot resulted as follows: Ginder, 152½; Scattergood, 186½. Necessary to a choice, 146. Mr. Scattergood was declared the nominee.

For coroner Dr. W. W. Swarts was named by acclamation.

J. W. Reed, of Auburn, was nominated for sheriff by acclamation amid much applause.

Clyde Hart, of Spencer township, for surveyor, by acclamation.

For auditor Thad Thomas, of Smithfield, was nominated by acclamation amid cheers.

For treasurer the names of Solomon Shearer, of Jackson township, and Chas. Jennings, of Troy township. The latter declined and Mr. Shearer was named by acclamation.

Henry Neidig, of Fairfield, was named for commissioner of the north district and E. B. Nimmons, of Wilmington, for commissioner of southeast district.

District Chairman Henry, of Fort Wayne, and County Chairman Hartsell, of Allen county, were present and spoke.

Ninety in the Shade

Ninety in the shade at two o'clock this afternoon,
Not a leaf a stirrin' an' the sun was in full bloom.
Take your arm an' wipe the sweat an' take a breath an' then
Grab your handkerchief an' go to moppin' sweat again.
Gettin' interest on the weather, highest rate that's paid,
Reckon clost to twelve per cent at ninety in the shade.

Haint no use to try to work, it simply can't be done
Neither can a man enjoy himself at havin' fun.
He'd be roasted crisp an' well done fishin' on the lake,
An' even if he wanted to he couldn't "git no bait"
An' no asbestos curtain with an ice sheet underlaid
Could keep the sunshine back of it at ninety in the shade.

When underneath a shady tree a layin' on my back,
An' nothing but the level ground a takin' up the slack,
A tryin' yea for all I'm worth to stay the bakin' through,
Some fellow up an' hollers: "Is it hot enough for you?"
Just watch an' see how many times that inquiry is made
Concerning satisfaction when it's ninety in the shade.

Ninety in the shade it seems to everyone's a bane,
Except unto the weather man a prophesyin' rain;
But the showers that's always comin' fails to terminate in wet,
An' shining little waterdrops to cool the air we get.
I'll take it huggin' zero when the winter's on a raid,
The weather's not a hit with me at ninety in the shade.

—John William Barber.

Banks on Sure Thing Now

"I'll never be without Dr. King's New Life Pills again," writes A. Schingeck, 647 Elm St., Buffalo, N. Y. "They cured me of chronic constipation when all others failed." Unequaled for Biliousness, Jaundice, Indigestion, Headache, Chills, Malaria and Debility, 25c at Stone's drug store. 22-1m

The Rural Delivery Man

"That he is a public benefactor is undoubtedly true," says Bertha Poole Weyl in Woman's Home Companion for July. "But his usefulness would be immeasurably increased if he were allowed to extend his business. People who live on the country routes would joyfully welcome a chance to send and receive packages by the rural carriers if the postoffice department would charge only a reasonable rate for the service. Under the present postal laws it costs eighty cents to send five pounds of rice by a carrier from the village postoffice and general store to a customer living on a rural route, though for sixty cents the same package can be sent to England or any of twenty-nine foreign countries. Is it strange that fifteen million people carry their own parcels back and forth to town and that the rural free delivery has an annual deficit?

"This deficit is not small. There are 38,215 routes which average annually $130 in receipts and $850 in expenses. This means a net loss of $720 per route or a total loss of $27,514,800. Quite a big price for failure to adopt ordinary business methods.

"Several plans have been suggested to obviate this annual deficit. A special rate might be made for the rural service, five cents for the first pound and two cents for each additional pound up to eleven. Provision may be made for carrying, at special rates, packages originating on the line of special route, as on an average trip a carrier handles but twenty pounds of mail with facilities for handling five hundred pounds. All this could be done without any increase in expenditure, and it is estimated that the increased grocery trade alone would cover the dreaded $27,514,800 deficit.

"Consider what this increase in trade would mean to the country store. It would bring to its doors customers from a radius of twents and thirty miles, it would reach the needs and purses of, on an average, four hundred and fifty people to a single delivery route, and, if you count all the routes, fifteen million men, women and children, the number that the parcels post of the rural free delivery would benefit. Does it not seem as though they should be considered?"

KEEP THE KIDNEYS WELL

Health is Worth Saving, and Some Butler People Know How to Save It

Many Butler people take their lives in their hands by neglecting the kidneys when they know these organs need help. Sick kidneys are responsible for a vast amount of suffering and ill health, but there is no need to suffer nor to remain in danger when all diseases and aches and pains due to weak kidneys can be quickly and permanently cured by the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. Here is a Butler citizen's recommendation.

Henry Barnhart, Butler, Ind., says: "I used three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills about a year ago and can say that they benefited me greatly. I had sciatic rheumatism in my left limb and could not put my feet to the ground. I knew that my kidneys were out of order, as the secretions were highly colored and filled with sediment. Learning of Doan's Kidney Pills, I procured a supply at Phillips' drug store and after using them a short time, I was entirely relieved. I have not been bothered by kidney complaint since. I have told several other people about my experience with Doan's Kidney Pills."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other. 24-2

Saved From Awful Death

How an appalling calamity in his family was prevented is told by A. D. McDonald, of Fayetteville, N. C., R. F. D. No. 8. "My sister had consumption," he writes, "she was very thin and pale, had no appetite and seemed to grow weaker every day, as all remedies failed, till Dr. King's New Discovery was tried, and so completely cured her, that she had not been troubled with a cough since. Its the best medicine I ever saw or heard of." For coughs, colds, lagrippe, asthma, croup, hemorrhage, all bronchial troubles, it has no equal, 50c, $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by Stone's drug store. 22-1 m

Enthusiasm Performs Wonders

WHEN the score is 1 to 1 in the last half of the ninth—your team at the bat—2 men on bases and no one out, there's something doing right away—you are up in arms yelling—rooting—doing all you can to rattle the pitcher—make him blow up—go ballooning—it's enthusiasm and it often turns the tide of battle from defeat to victory.

This same brand of enthusiasm directed towards Men's Clothes Perfection is pretty apt to turn out for YOU—Clothes that are right—that satisfy you as being right—It's the kind of clothes you want—the kind you get if made by

An exchange facetiously remarks that when you see a business man advertising steadily and filling his space with interesting news, put it down that he is interested enough in you to be willing to pay for telling you at your home what he has to sell you—he is not selfishly expecting you to chase down town and hunt up his goods and bargains. Neither is he trying to get something for nothing. Show your appreciation of this courtesy on their part by favoring these business men every time you can.

Mr. Hoffman and Mr. Shores, who are lifting the gravel from the Boyle gravel pit returned to their home near Muncie, Ind., Wednesday. They have lifted over 1600 yards since installing their plant here and it is proving to be some of the finest water gravel that has ever been taken out in this section of the county, and we understand the same was estimated and turned over to the city paving contractors.

Wm. McNabb had a runaway, Monday, while coming to town. When passing the J. N. Boyle farm, W. D. Boyle, who had taken his horse down there to pasture, asked Mr. McNabb to ride and upon getting into the buggy, by some unknown reason, the horse become frightened and started to run, and could not be kept in the road. It ran into the fence, throwing the occupants out of the buggy, spraining Mr. Boyle's foot and somewhat bruising him around the shoulders. Fortunately Mr. McNabb received no injuries. Secretary Wilson thinks the sale of foodstuffs in packages is to blame for some of the excessive cost of living. The wives of the men who carry home "packages" will readily agree to this.

A steamship in Florida waters had a hard time getting past a school of monster 1,000-pound turtles that showed fight. It is early in the season, but the sea serpent is not going to be missed.

A little girl who died in Philadelphia twelve years ago left her handful of pennies—37 cents—to start a fund for a new Methodist church. From that tiny beginning much has grown, and work is now going forward on a building that is to cost $75,000. No gift that is sanctified by love is small.

Thomas A. Edison says in Popular Electricity that "there is absolutely no reason why horses should be allowed within the city limits, for, between the gasoline and electric car, no room is left for them. A higher public ideal of health and cleanliness is working toward such banishment swiftly, then we shall have decent streets instead of stables made of cobblestones bordered by sidewalks." Horses are pretty bad, and then there is the man who throws his letter up and throws it out into the street. He should go, too, while we are about it.

A pessimistic old shipmaster of New York has been confiding his discouragement to a reporter. Boys no longer go to sea, he says. American steamship lines have the greatest difficulty in getting the right sort of lads for training up into officers. Public school education unfits boys for the sea. The present-day eagerness in the pursuit of money makes the youngsters unwilling to follow a calling the sacrifices and perils of which are rewarded by the scantiest of livings. But it may be a lack of opportunity rather than a dislike for the seafaring life that keeps the boys ashore. The action of economic forces has swept our merchant ships from the ocean. The small margin of profit on which commerce is nowadays conducted has apparently diverted American capital from shipping to business in which more money can be earned. Only ten per cent of our imports and a much smaller proportion of our oversea trade come in American bottoms. But given the opportunity to go to sea, the boys are fairly ready to go. The navy has less trouble than the army in finding recruits. Nevertheless, the collapse of the American merchant marine is a great misfortune. No great nation is satisfied to have its foreign trade almost wholly in foreign hands; and it is a sad loss to any country when so independent, adventurous and courageous a race as that of the deep-sea mariners declines and disappears. There is much discussion concerning the best means of restoring American shipping. It may be necessary to wait for changing economic conditions to undo the harm they have already done. But we may all hope that the day when the flag shall again hold the place on the high seas which it held half a century ago may not long be delayed.

The death of King Edward, so sudden and startling, was a profound shock to Britain and her colonies and to the world at large. Nothing had prepared even the men and women nearest to the throne for such an unfortunate and disturbing event, for forty-eight hours before few knew that the king was ill at all, and those who did considered the indisposition trifling. It is true that in England the king reigns without governing, and that no perceptible constitutional or political changes are to be apprehended. But while democracy rules and policies, foreign and domestic, are dictated by essential needs, traditions and fixed principles, it would be a mistake to undersestimate the personal and social influence of the king. In diplomacy especially is this influence apt to be strong, and King Edward took a particular interest in foreign relations and is known to have originated and favored certain alliances and understandings. In home politics he was always scrupulously impartial or neutral, but his sympathies were on the side of progress and evolutionary reform. Many have called him "the most popular man in England," and there was little exaggeration in this. A recent article containing daring, unfriendly references to him and charges of excessive love of ease and sport, lack of vigor or interest in serious problems of state provoked genuine national indignation. Even radicals, socialists and ardent home rulers admit that King Edward had no enemies among the workmen and the masses of the people. The republican tendencies of a decade or two ago have disappeared without a trace. King Edward may be said to have strengthened the monarchy in England by his qualities and achievements and to have recovered for it some of the power and prestige it had lost with the advance of popular government and radical liberalism. The new king can but follow in his footsteps and court general respect and admiration by giving like evidence of dignity, tact, a progressive spirit and an earnest desire to promote the welfare of his people, even at the expense of the ancient privileges of an effete peerage or aristocracy.

Neuralgia.

Neuralgia is a paroxysmal pain in a nerve. In most victims of this wretched trouble the same nerve suffers in each attack, although there are patients with whom the agony travels from one nerve to another. The first thing to ascertain in a case of persistent neuralgia is whether the trouble is due to some underlying organic condition, or whether it is simply just a case of a sick nerve calling for help.

The neuralgia which has an organic basis is called "symptomatic" neuralgia, and may be present as one of many other symptoms in tumors, or in certain inflammatory affections or tuberculous lesions which are in such position as to compress the course of the nerve at any point.

Neuralgia pure and simple is called "idiopathic," and may be compared to the screams of an angry baby, who declares its needs in the only fashion it can command.

The only person competent to judge whether a particular case of neuralgia is "symptomatic" or "idiopathic" is of course the physician, and if the pain is traceable to some organic trouble, any treatment directed to removal of the pain alone would be simple loss of time.

In a case of simple neuralgia the first thing to do is to find out the underlying cause, for it may be accepted as an axiom that perfectly well people do not have painful nerves. Young children and old people are rarely sufferers from neuralgia. It is a trouble that attacks those who are living the active adult life, and especially people in middle age, when the various fatigues of that life are most prone to overtake us. It is often one of the sequels of a long illness, such as typhoid fever, and often follows grippe.

Persons with the so-called rheumatic diathesis seem more disposed to it, and any great emotional shock or undue fatigue may bring on an attack in a neuralgic individual.

Besides the paroxysmal pain of neuralgia, there is generally a dull ache all the time of the attack, with tender spots along the line of the nerve, that will be found very sensitive to slight pressure with the finger tip.

Neuralgia may attack any nerve in the body, but it perhaps causes its greatest torture when it takes the form known as tic-douloureoux. This is neuralgia in the face, along the line of the sensitive nerve which supplies all this part of the head. Another exquisitely painful form of neuralgia is that known as sciatica, in the sciatic nerve, which runs down the back of the leg.—Youth's Companion.

WOMAN AS A FACTOR FOR GOOD.

Philadelphia Preacher Believes Fair Sex Angels of the Earth.

With the increasing prominence of the cause of woman suffrage, the question of woman's work and woman's influence is being much discussed. It is argued by the advocates of equal rights that suffrage would "broaden woman's sphere" and "make her a fitter companion of man," and it is contended with equal positiveness by the opponents of suffrage that it would make her less inclined to attend strictly to womanly duties.

Of the many interesting sermons preached from Philadelphia pulpits the other day, one by the Rev. Clinton B. Adams, Congregationalist, deserves more than passing attention, the Philadelphia Times says. His theme was "A Young Woman's Religion," and among other things he described women as the angels of earth, the inspiration of men in whatever they undertake and responsible for whatever they achieve.

Men have accomplished great things without help from or thought of women. Other men have failed through their very devotion to or their control by inferior women. Those, however, are the exceptional cases. Generally, woman is the inspiration, the cause. And she is a tremendous individual factor for good—for all that is good and beautiful.

In one sentence the clergyman has spoken a great truth. He declares that "men are disposed to be what women they love admire in them." This is profoundly true and in her wondrous, indescribable influence over man, she becomes a powerful agent for good or evil.

What has become of the old-fashioned horse that was afraid of automobiles?

AUTOS OF OLD DAYS OF MANY ODD KINDS

Coiled Spring Vehicle One of the First Efforts at Horseless Carriage.

MACHINES THAT HAD LEGS.

France Has Honor of First Using Steam Successfully—America's Pioneers.

Early in the dawn of human intelligence there came the dream of unrestricted, individual locomotion. It was toward the end of the thirteenth century, says R. T. Sloss in his "Book of the Automobile," that the learned Franciscan friar, Roger Bacon, wrote:

TREVITHICK'S STEAM-CARRIAGE, 1802.

"We will be able to propel carriages with incredible speed without the assistance of any animal." At the same time he predicted the coming of the steamship and the flying machine. The scientific character of Bacon's imagination has been completely vindicated in the ocean liners and the swift-flying automobiles and partially so in the recent efforts of Santos-Dumont and others.

The horseless carriage first took tangible form in the seventeenth century, when Johann Haustach of Nuremberg contrived a vehicle propelled by a huge coiled spring, the action being on the principle of clockwork. Haustach was known as "a manufacturer of chariots going by spring and making 2,000 paces an hour." The spring was controlled by a lever in the hands of the chauffeur, and, in the absence of a steering device, the "chariot" could be propelled only in a straight line. Haustach seems to have paid no more attention to the ornamentation of the body of his vehicle than to its propulsion.

Sail Wagons of Holland.

About the same time probably the general utilization of the winds of heaven in the windmills of Holland suggested the idea of "sail wagons," used to some extent on the flat plains of that country. These were called "seylende windwagen," and consisted of the rigging of a ship attached to wheeled platforms.

In 1644 a patent of Louis XIV. granted to "Jean Theson the privilege of employing a little four-wheel carriage set in motion without any horses, but merely by two men seated." The supposition, in the absence of detailed drawings, is that the "men seated" propelled the vehicle by strenuous leg work.

Sir Isaac Newton is said to have invented a steam carriage after others had conceived the idea of propelling vehicles by steam power. The development along this line followed closely that of the steam railroad. The latter, however, appeared so much more feasible to the inventors that it was followed and the steam carriage idea thrown into the background. Newton's idea was not original fundamentally, it is said, but copied after the original steam engine of Hero of Alexandria, who broke into the steam-engine business about 200 B. C. Newton's model was propelled by the reactionary force, or kick, of a jet of steam escaping from a nozzle in the rear.

DUTCH SAIL WAGONS, SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

Early Work in France.

In 1769, Nicholas Joseph Cugnot, with state funds placed at his disposal by the Duc de Choiseul, constructed a steam gun carriage and the following year he produced an improved auto which is still preserved in Paris. The machine had but three wheels, the boiler overhanging in front on the theory that its weight would be counteracted by the load on the carriage. The engine was directly behind the boiler and consisted of two 13-inch single-acting cylinders. The movement of the piston was transmitted to the axle of the driving wheel by two ratchet wheels. The engine could be reversed at will. There was a steering gear, and the vehicle proved its capacity for carrying a load of two and one-half tons at a speed of three miles an hour. Napoleon Bonaparte caused the appointment of a commission of the Institute to investigate the invention, but the revolution suddenly put an effectual check on the further development of the automobile. It is interesting to note that in the matter of the production of a practical automobile France led the world in the eighteenth century, as she now leads the world in the building of racing machines of tremendous power.

Dr. John Robinson is said to have suggested to James Watt, the reputed inventor of the steam engine, in 1759, the idea of building a steam-propelled carriage. Watt, apparently, did not take kindly to the suggestion, for he did not adopt it; but in 1784 he himself patented a steam carriage.

Legs Tried on Machines.

The first American inventors to tackle the steam-propelled vehicle problem were Oliver Evans of Maryland in 1787, and Nathaniel Read of Massachusetts in 1790.

Richard Trevithick of England in 1802 patented a steam carriage that was a distinct advance over previous efforts.

By this time it came to be believed that ordinary wheels were insufficient to secure traction, and mechanical legs were devised as propellers. The Gordon machine, patented in 1824, was a six-legged affair, the pedals being operated by steam. Goldworthy Durney about the same time produced a steam carriage which used legs as auxiliaries. The steam coach patented by Walter Hancock and named the "Autopsy" was placed in commission, with four others, between Stratford and Paddington in 1836 and did a lively passenger business. The more recent development of the automobile is better known. In 1886 Charles E. Duryea conceived the notion of propelling a carriage with a gasoline engine, and two years later partially produced a light buggy driven by a two horse-power engine. His first complete vehicle was brought out in 1892.

SLEEPING OUT OF DOORS.

How the Traveler Passes the Night in the Arizona Desert.

"People drop into a loose habit of speaking about the right and the wrong way of doing a thing," remarked the experienced camper, according to the New York Times. "As a matte of fact, there may be a dozen good ways and as many bad.

"Take sleeping in the open, for instance. My little trips haven't been confined to the Adirondacks and the Berkshires. I've knocked over the whole North American continent and I've picked up some mighty good wrinkles that were never heard of within a 250-mile radius of New York City.

"Down in the Arizona desert last year I was a member of a party traveling between Tucson and the Mexican frontier. The first night out found us in the middle of a flat expanse of sand. There wasn't even a hillock or a rock behind which one could find shelter.

"But the westerners in the party knew a trick or two. I was surprised to see them grubbing out little hollows in the sand corresponding to the shape of the human body. They made a deep depression for the hips and a shallow one for the shoulders, with sand banked up in the middle to support the small of the back. At one end they built up a ridge of sand as a footrest, pounding and stamping on it until it was compact enough not to break down under pressure.

"Then we wrapped ourselves in our blankets Arizona fashion. We placed one corner of the blanket on the left side, just below the heart, and turned around until the body was covered five or six folds deep. This left plenty to spare at both ends, which was disposed of by giving the blanket a turn around our feet and knotting it, and folding down the upper end around the head as a sort of cape.

"We lay down in the hollows we had prepared—'graves,' the westerners called them ,and found that we were amply protected from the wind. The latter blew the fine sand over us, and in time our blankets were hidden from sight. There was no danger of our being choked, however, as we used our saddles as pillows, which kept our heads at a sufficient elevation from the surface of the desert.

"When we opened our eyes at dawn the ground was covered with a heavy frost. It must have been very cold during the night, but we had not felt it. We jumped to our feet, shook ourselves free of the sand that had sifted into our clothes, and lighted a fire. The desert was very desolate and white.

"Two hours later it seemed like a different world. The sun had dissipated the frost like magic and the sand was blazing hot. That is the most singular thing about the Arizona desert at high elevation. One passes from winter to summer overnight.

"While my bones ached for a few days from sleeping in those artificial sand hollows, I soon grew accustomed to it, and I pass on the hint to those campers who may find themselves obliged to spend the night on an unprotected plain."

BACH'S MUSIC.

Some Advice as to How It Should Be Interpreted.

The interpretation of Bach must always be noble, broad and firm, rather too hard than too soft, explains Ferruccio Busoni, the great pianist, in the Delineator. Affected methods, such as a "soulful" swelling of the phrases, coquettish hurrying or hesitating, too light staccato, too smooth legato, pedal debauchery—all these are vicious and out of place here. If used with a proper sense of proportion a certain elasticity of the tempo, giving the interpretation greater freedom, will improve the playing of Bach materially.

The modernization of Bach's compositions by such masters as Liszt and Tausig and many others is accepted by all clear thinking masters as not derogatory to the master's style. It affords rather a completeness of expression. Witness the fact that Raff has orchestrated Bach's "Chaconne" without making it seem ridiculous. Many others have followed with happy results Raff's example of arranging Bach's music for the modern orchestra.

The ease with which Bach's music lends itself to this adaptation is proof of his comprehensive genius. He was not for his day, but for all time.

Bach's "Prelude" and "Fugue No. 10," important and not too difficult, show the man-sided branching of the present day piano technique. The legendary tradition of playing Bach without the use of the damper pedal is obsolete.

The Porter's Dilemma.

The porter was greatly perplexed. At High Polsover, says a writer in London Opinion, a lady with a lorgnette entered the train. She was a middle aged, tall, angular, tailor-made woman, and she looked sternly at the commercial traveler in the seat opposite through her lorgnette. Before seating herself she opened the carriage window, and sent it down with a bang. At Hilsdon Cross another woman came in.

She had fluffy hair, and an appealing look in her blue eyes. She sat down and glanced at the open window and shivered pathetically; then she looked at the commercial traveler.

"I shall be frozen to death!" cried the fluffy-haired lady.

"If this window is closed, I shall suffocate!" cried the other woman.

The porter opened his mouth. He started to raise the window. Then he retreated. Dazed, he turned appealingly to the commercial traveler. Both the women also turned to the commercial traveler. That gentleman rose, passed by the ladies, opened the door to the platform, and went out, followed by the porter.

"And what, sir," said the porter, "would you say as 'ow I should do, sir?"

"It's quite simple," said the commercial traveler. "Leave the window as it is, open, till one lady is frozen to death; then close it and suffocate the other. I'm going forward for the rest of the trip."

Experience Would Tell.

"I want an easy chair," said the householder, entering the store.

"Yes, sir," said the salesman. "What sort?"

"I don't know yet," was the answer. "Let me look into the boss' office and see what he has. He ought to be a judge."—Buffalo Express.

Army Jokes.

Every old soldier knows how a good joke dispelled the blues and waked up some corner of the camp. One or two of these rise up before me and demand recognition.

When the Twentieth Ohio Infantry entered Camp Chase not a few of them were up to any game that promised fun. One day a tall, awkward-looking specimen came to camp as a new recruit. The boys soon found out he was as green as he looked. They asked him if he had been mustered in, and he answered, "No."

"Then," said one of the boys, "the sooner you are mustered in the better. You cannot draw pay till you are."

"Well, I am ready, but I don't know what to do."

"Boys," said the wag of the crowd, "let us help the poor fellow; it won't take long to muster him."

A messenger was sent to the hospital steward for some mustard for a sick man. The recruit was taken to an empty shanty, a large mustard plaster applied to his chest, and he required to lie still until it would draw. After ten minutes he began to wiggle, and exclaimed, "By Jove, boys, this bites."

"Pshaw," said one, "we've all been there."

Ten minutes later he yelled, "Fellows, this barns like h—ades."

"Oh," said one fellow, "ten minutes more; don't be a baby."

The thirty minutes elapsed and the poor fellow got up and walked about with the air of a conqueror. He was a soldier anyhow. In a few days he saw the joke, and no one laughed louder than he.

Poor fellow, in the battle of Raymond, Miss., the end of his tongue was shot off, it was said by the boys, while indulging in some tall swearing.

When the Twentieth reached Port Gibson, Miss., some of the boys entered a deserted bank. Here they found a pile of notes or bills of various denominations which had never been signed. They took a lot with them and some one suggested that if signed they would pass for money. Various signatures were appended, such as "Uncle Sam, President, and John Brown, Cashier." Just as the foragers thought, the country people accepted them gladly. J. C. Meracle, of Company I, bought a lot of honey and gave a twenty-dollar bill in payment. The lady could not make the change, and he generously told her it made no odds. When he entered the road and joined his company some one said to him: "Meracle, you may never eat that honey." He answered: "The bullet that is to kill me has not been made yet." Poor fellow, he was one of the first to fall, shot through the head.

When the Confederates retreated rapidly in our front, their double-quick savoring of the run, one of our drafted men rushed after them in advance of the line. Colonel Force called out to him to know what he was doing there. The fellow stuttered badly and answered, "Co-co-curnal, I wa-wa-wanted another po-po-pop at them."

Pat Nugent, of Company C, was wounded in the arm and declared, "I will never forgive the dom divils." Pat made application for a pension, but failing to get any went to Washington to find out what was the matter with the machine. While there he happened to see John A. Logan, and running up to him said, "Begob, Gineral, you're the man I want to see. You know I was wounded at Raymond, an' I want a pinshun and dom the cint I can get." The Senator went with him to the Pension Bureau, looked after his application, and Pat now receives two dollars a month. "Just enough to buy tobacco, begob."

Reminiscence of General Sherman.

A contributor to one of the Sunday papers of Washington adds another story to the reminiscences of General Sherman. He reports a distinguished officer of the general staff of the army, who was on duty in Washington during the war, as relating an incident witnessed by himself when Sherman's victorious army was reviewed in 1865. He says that when the head of the column arrived opposite the reviewing stand General Sherman and one of his staff, the relator thinks it was General Whipple, dismounted, came up to where President Lincoln was standing, and was received by him with great cordiality. After General Sherman had spoken to several members of the cabinet, Mr. Stanton, whom he had not noticed in any manner, came up, and, holding out his hands, said something to him. "What it was," says the officer who is reported as telling the story, "I did not hear clearly, for just at that moment the crowd saw Sherman, and evidently recognizing him for the first time, gave a tremendous cheer. Mr. Stanton seemed to think General Sherman had not heard his remark, and spoke to him again. General Sherman drew himself up, and, looking the great War Secretary directly in the face, said: 'I do not wish to speak to you, sir; you are nothing but a —— clerk, anyhow.' I could not have been mistaken in the words, for General Sherman spoke loudly and with a decided tone of anger in his voice, and his manner was not to be misunderstood.

"There was a moment of perfect silence. I looked around and noticed my old friend, Montgomery Blair. He was evidently much distressed at the occurrence, for he went up to Mr. Stanton immediately and tried to converse with him. I had seen a great deal of the Secretary of War and knew him well, and I never saw him show so much feeling as he showed then. He was a man of furious passion and overbearing temper, and for a moment I really feared a personal collision might occur between the two men. To be so insulted and by one of his subordinates, was something that aroused every feeling of resentment in Stanton's passionate, despotic nature. He immediately left the platform and Mr. Lincoln seemed to feel easier when he had gone, as did every one else. Many of the gentlemen present had been treated with abruptness that was almost insulting by the Secretary of War and more than one person was secretly delighted at the awful snub administered by the victorious commander of the Army of the Tennessee where everyone could see it.

According to the story, nothing further came of the matter, although for a time Stanton is said to have contemplated preferring charges against Sherman.

In the Confederacy's Last Days.

A glance at the market quotations in a Mobile paper of March 11, 1865, shows that apples were $60 and $70 a bushel; bacon was $4 a pound, and butter $6 to $8; Shelby coal was $200 a ton, and Confederate candles were $10 a pound; coffee was $60 a pound, and calico $20 a yard; cornmeal was $12 a bushel, cow-peas were $16, while flour ranged from $1.30 to $2.00 a pound, and wheat was $30 a bushel; fresh beef was $2.50 a pound, and fresh pork $2.00; lard was $3.50 and tallow $5.00; quinine was $200 an ounce and morphine $350; onions were $70 a bushel and Irish potatoes $90, while salt was $32 a bushel, and whiskey was quoted at from $65 to $150 a gallon, according to quality. A writer in the St. Louis Republican says:

"I visited Mobile in March, 1865, on official business, and, of course, took a week to do one day's business in and spend a useless surplus of six months' pay. An invitation to dinner was an event in a soldier's life to be sought for by patient strategy, and the dinner, if secured, treasured in memory for months after, to be related, item by item, to the boys in camp, who took great pleasure in listening to every detail of the feast. The staple food was corn bread, with bacon and flour gravy, but wealthy families had a very few small wheat biscuits on the table at dinner only. It was etiquette of home visitors to eat but one or two of these, on the polite supposition that the guests had such delicacies at home, but the soldier was urged and expected to eat his fill. I remember hearing an aside remark made by one wealthy and hospitable lady to another about their clergyman's daughter, who was then visiting, or rather foraging, among the faithful. 'She eats five biscuits, and flour $400 a barrel!' The comical alliteration in this indignant protest caused it to stick in my memory. I remember buying a pair of red negro brogan shoes in a large store on Dauphin street for $150. It was the only pair in the store and the sole clerk, a boy of 15, was perfectly indifferent whether I took them or not. One meal at a hotel cost $5, and no one got as much as he could eat at that price. A regular allowance of cornmeal, coffee, oatmeal, biscuit, fried bacon, and in some cases fried chicken were served. When consumed the waiter reported 'all give out.' Sometimes a hog at the table would take the last two biscuits, holding one in reserve while eating the other, but this was rare and apt to be rebuked by some spectator who was 'heeled.' The Confederate soldier was usually a gentleman, or desired to appear as such."

The First Confederate Battle Flags.

From Mrs. Burton Harrison's "Recollections of a Virginia Girl in the First Year of the War" we quote the following: "Another incident of note, in personal experience during the autumn of '61, was that to two of my cousins and to me was intrusted the making of the first three battle flags of the Confederacy, directly after Congress had decided upon a design for them. They were jaunty squares of scarlet crossed with dark blue, the cross bearing stars to indicate the number of seceding States. We set our best stitches upon them, edged them with golden fringes, and when they were finished dispatched one to Johnston, another to Beauregard, and the third to Earl Van Dorn—the latter afterward a dashing cavalry leader, but then commanding infantry at Manassas. The banners were received with all the enthusiasm we could have hoped for; were toasted, feted, cheered abundantly. After two years, when Van Dorn had been killed in Tennessee, mine came back to me, tattered and smoke-stained from long and honorable service in the field. But it was only a little while after it had been bestowed that there arrived one day at our lodging in Culpepper a huge bashful Mississippi scout—one of the most daring in the army—with the frame of a Hercules and the face of a child. He was bidden to come there by his general, he said, to ask if I would not give him an order to fetch some cherished object from my dear old home—something that would prove to me how much they thought of the maker of that flag!' After some hesitation I acquiesced, although thinking it a jest. A week later I was the astonished recipient of a lamented bit of finery left 'within the lines,' a wrap of white and azure, brought to us by Dillon himself, with a beaming face. He had gone through the Union lines mounted on a load of firewood, and while peddling poultry had presented himself at our town house, whence he carried off his prize in triumph, with a letter in its folds telling us how relatives left behind longed to be sharing the joys and sorrows of those at large in the Confederacy."

Might Have Killed a General.

At an ex-Confederate reunion at Fort Worth one of the Federal soldiers present went up to Gen. Pearce and shook hands with him so warmly that his attention was attracted to it, and he asked him if there was not something behind his cordiality.

"General," said the soldier, "there is. I'm shaking hands with you because I didn't kill you. It was at Wilson's Creek that I saw you last, sir. I was a sharpshooter on the skirmish line when you came up with your command. I had a bead drawn on you, and I'm a good shot, when my captain shouted to me not to shoot; that you were Gen. Sigel. I didn't fire, and in another minute you were right on top of us; but if our captain hadn't stopped me you'd be a dead man now, general, and I am awfully glad I didn't. I would have been very proud of it then, though, sir."

Fatal Temptation

CHAPTER VIII.—(Continued.)

There was an hour to pass in the drawing-room before the ball began. Laurence saw Magdalen standing by one of the small tables—she had carelessly taken up an engraving, and was examining it. He crossed over to her. She turned her bright face to him, with a charming smile.

"I have seen you before," he said, a little abruptly; and then he paused, for the beautiful eyes were looking at him with a wondering smile. "I have seen you before," he repeated, "and I have never forgotten it."

"I do not remember ever meeting you," she answered with a puzzled air.

"No, no, he rejoined, hastily. "You did not see me. It was one morning in the summer. You were gathering wild flowers."

"But where?" she asked, laughingly. "I have gathered wild flowers so frequently and in so many different places. Where was it?"

"At Seafield," he replied. "I lived there; and one morning, when I was walking to St. Margaret's Bay—I—saw you."

Her face brightened.

"I remember Seafield," she said, "a lovely place by the sea. I was staying at Pemberton Court, and it must have been during my visit there that you saw me; but," she added, her beautiful eyes looking frankly into his own, "if such was the case, how was it that I did not see you?"

"Should you have remembered me if you had done so?" he asked, eagerly.

"I do not know," she replied. "I see so many faces—"

"And I," he said, speaking out the thoughts of his heart, without pausing to think whether it were discreet to do so or not—"and I, since I saw your face, have seen no other."

"It is time we went to the ballroom," she said, hurriedly.

If Rudolph noticed any change in Laurence after his visit to Swanscourt, the made no comment on the fact. The dearest wish of his heart had been that one of his sons should marry Magdalen d'Este—he had the same wish with regard to his young kinsman, but he never gave expression of it.

After this Laurence went over frequently to Swanscourt, where he was always a most welcome guest. Mr. and Mrs. d'Este both liked him; they had the same idea, that he would be an excellent husband for their beautiful daughter; what she thought on this subject was not so well known. Magdalen was always kind to him—always beautiful and charming, but she did not wear her heart on her sleeve.

Laurence said nothing to any one of the great hope of his life, the desire to win Magdalen d'Este for his wife. Rudolph was so ill that he required all his care and attention; it was hardly the time to trouble him about a love affair.

CHAPTER IX.

Mr. and Mrs. d'Este went away early in the year, and their daughter accompanied them. In the meanwhile, Laurence had proved his gratitude to those he had known at Seafield. He had first of all paid his debt to Marion, sending her, at the same time, a letter filled with expressions of gratitude and affection; then he had lavished presents upon them all—not forgetting Miss Thornton.

"I always said he was a prince in disguise," that lady declared, emphatically, as she admired his costly gifts. "Who but he would have thought of me?"

Miss Leigh received a magnificent set of rubies.

"They are too good for me to wear in this place," said Marion, thoughtfully; "but I shall not always be here."

She often looked thoughtful in those days, for a great plan was maturing in her mind.

And so the time sped on, and at length Rudolph, after a long illness, died. He was laid to rest, amid all the solemn and sorrowful paraphernalia of death, and Laurence became owner of Carrswell. No future ever seemed brighter than his, no prospects fairer. Those who had to deal with Laurence Carr, as he was now called, could not help noticing how kind, gentle, and generous he was to all evil-doers. He could never be persuaded to punish a man for his first offense.

"Give him another chance," he would say. "It is the first offense—we do not know how sorely he was tempted—let him try again."

It was with no small feeling of delight that he heard that Mr. and Mrs. d'Este were expected home. On the day after their arrival, he went over to Swanscourt. They had always received him with the kindliest courtesy; this morning they were more gracious than ever. When they had talked for some little time, Mr. d'Este rode out to keep an appointment, and his wife excused herself on the plea of receiving some visitors.

"You will find Magdalen out in the garden," she said.

That was what he wanted, to be alone with Magdalen, if but a few minutes; and he hurried through the grounds in search of her. Her fair face flushed when she saw him.

She held out her hand to him, and looked into his face with kindly eyes.

"Your mother told me I should find you here," he said.

"Yes," she answered; "I delight in being in the fresh air. What a lovely morning this is."

She was standing near a little fountain under a spreading chestnut tree; near it was a rustic seat.

"Shall we sit down?" she said, taking a seat near the marble basin, and making room for him beside her.

He could hear the beating of his own heart as he accepted her invitation. He was so happy that he forgot even his sin; the memory of it did not creep into that sunlit hour. Of course he was not going to make love to her, although love shone in his eyes, trembled on his lips, was revealed in every word and gesture. He reverted to the old theme—where he had first met her; and they talked about Seafield and St. Margaret's Bay.

In some way—she never could quite tell how it happened—the flowers that she had been carrying lay on the grass at her feet, and her hand rested in his. She was so surprised that she made no effort to withdraw it; and presently she asked him to tell her the story of his life at Seafield.

"I cannot quite make out," she said, when he had finished, "whether you like this Marion Leigh or not."

"She was very kind to me once," he answered; "but, as a rule, we saw very little of each other. I must always be grateful to her for a service she once rendered me."

Soon the other hand was made prisoner, and he was pouring out his whole heart to her, telling her what he hoped to do in the future, what great ends and aims he had fashioned for himself, and of a sweet rest and hope, the fulfillment of which would crown his life. She listened with deepest sympathy, her beautiful eyes meeting his, her fair face changing as his moods changed.

And then—neither of them knew how it happened—he kissed her; and her heart went out to him in that moment, never to come back to her again.

CHAPTER X.

Later on in the season Mr. and Mrs. d'Este left Swanscourt again; they had accepted an invitation to spend some weeks at Ryde. Laurence only saw Magdalen once before her departure.

"Give me something," he said, "to remember this hour and your words."

She turned to a bush near, and plucked a white rose and placed it silently in his hand.

"Thank you," he said; "but I want something more—remember, I have to live without seeing you until August."

She knew—she felt sure that, when she came back to Swanscourt, he would tell her that he loved her, and would ask her to be his wife. There had been no mention of love or marriage between them yet; but her faith in him was so perfect that she raised her face to his and kissed him. Words might have been said then that were irrevocable, but that Mrs. d'Este suddenly appeared.

The family from Swanscourt went away that day, and on the morrow came a letter from Dr. Leigh—he had not been well lately—he said he wanted change of air, and he would avail himself of Laurence's oft-given invitation, and bring Marion with him for a few weeks—he had engaged some one to take charge of his practice, so that he should feel quite at ease while he was away.

"I have not had a real holiday since my honeymoon," wrote the doctor—"that was more than twenty years ago—you may imagine how much I shall enjoy this. Marion looks forward to it with even greater pleasure and anticipation than I do. We shall hope to be with you by the end of the month."

A kindly letter—and Laurence had certainly often written to invite them. He was most anxious to see them; he had thought of it often, and had made plans for their amusement. He could not tell why a shudder came over him, why there was a sense of coming sorrow and trouble. Then he laughed at himself. What could it be? What sorrow could be drawing near him? He shook aside impatiently this feeling of oppression, and set to work in real earnest to provide amusement for his coming guests—perhaps in the depths of his heart there was some little dislike to seeing Marion again. She was the only one who knew of that shameful past; her presence would bring it all the more vividly before him. It was but natural that he should shrink from seeing her. Still, but for her kindness—her generosity—he would not be here—"lord of this fair domain." He would show his gratitude to her by doing all in his power to make her visit pleasant.

He ordered his housekeeper to prepare the best suite of rooms for her; he purchased a beautiful little carriage, with a pair of ponies, as a present for her. She should drive about in the lovely lanes, and when she returned to Seafield, take the present home with her. He remembered that she was fond of flowers, and he ordered her rooms to be filled with the rarest and choicest.

Dr. Leigh and his daughter arrived on the date fixed for their visit, the former looking old and worn, Marion bright, well, and wonderfully handsome. They reached Carrswell in the evening. Laurence was standing on the terrace awaiting them. As Marion Leigh came slowly toward him, he wondered again why that presentiment of trouble weighed so heavily upon him. The doctor was unfeignedly pleased to see him.

Throughout that evening Marion was very quiet; nothing could have been kinder or more cordial than their reception, yet she felt further apart from him than she had ever done before.

Laurence could not fathom the expression of those dark eyes—he could not tell what they meant; but there was something in them that startled him, why, he knew not. He felt that it would be some little relief if she would talk, laugh, look tired or bored—anything rather than watch him in that cool, deliberate way.

CHAPTER XI.

One evening they strolled into the rose-garden. A statue of Flora stood in the midst of the roses, and a garden-chair was placed against it. Marion declared herself fatigued, and sat down, drawing her black shawl around her shoulders. The moonlight, the sweet-scented air, the hundreds of blooming roses, the lovely scene that lay around them, made it a paradise. Laurence did not talk much. Marion, too, was silent for some minutes. She hesitated, as a diver might pause on the brink before he makes a perilous plunge. She was about to gain or lose all.

"Do you remember, Laurence," she said, slowly, "the story you told me about Barbara Carr?"

"Yes; I remember it well," he replied, wondering a little why Marion should revert to that subject now.

She went to one of the rose-trees, and gathered a red rose; he saw her strip away the thorns and arrange the leaves; he saw the dew shining on the petals of the flower; then she walked slowly up to him, and stood before him, the red rose in her hand.

"You remember the story you told me?" she repeated, holding the flower out to him. "Suppose that I were the beautiful Barbara, and you Rupert Carr, would you have the rose from me on the same condition as he took it?"

Her breath came hard and fast as she uttered the last few words; her face grew deathly pale. She held the flower out to him, but he did not take it. Instead of that, he sprung from his seat, pale and agitated.

"I do not understand you," he said, hurriedly; he was taken so utterly by surprise he was at a loss what to say.

"How shall I make my meaning clear?" she said. "Barbara Carr gave the red rose to the man she wished to marry—I give you this."

"There is one great and insupreable obstacle," he replied, in a low, clear voice. "I do not love you."

"That does not matter," she said; "neither, in the sentimental sense of the word, do I love you. We shall not require love; we shall have plenty of money—everything that our hearts most desire."

"Your ideas do not accord with mine," Laurence said, slowly.

"I—I have a claim upon you," she urged.

"I know it," he murmured; and in his own heart he cried: "My sin has found me out!"

She drew a little nearer to him, and held out the red rose to him; the perfume from it reached him, and he hated the scent of roses ever afterward.

"Will you take it?" she asked.

"No, I will not," he replied.

"It is the price of my silence—the price of your secret, Laurence."

"I will not take it; I will not touch it."

Slowly, leaf by leaf, she pulled the beautiful rose to pieces, and threw the petals on the ground.

"Walk over them," she said; "and just as easily shall I tread under foot all your resistance—just as easily shall I bring down your pride, and—and break your heart."

(To be continued.)

Clerkes and Workers.

Here is the statement of the National Employment Exchange as to labor conditions in one field:

"The skilled men and the laborers are all getting work. We can't supply the demand for laborers or mechanics."

Here is a statement from the same authority as to conditions in another field:

"Clerk labor is a drug on the market. There are simply not enough jobs to go around."

Evil days are indeed on the clerker, the New York Globe says. Not only do his wages—"salary" he calls it—tend to stay down while the cost of living increases, but employment is precarious. Great are the material sacrifices that must be made by a young man who has aversion to hard work, who wants to be "genteel," who insists on employment permitting the wearing of cuffs and a collar. False pride is an expensive luxury, and it is being hammered out of many soft heads.

It is the worker, with a trained intelligence directing a skilled hand, that the world needs and wants, and needing him and wanting him, bids for his services. The average income of the good mechanic is now well up to that of the average doctor or lawyer. There is growing up an intellectual proletariat which is suffering keenly. Under the pressure of present economic tendencies it is likely to suffer more and more until there is a recasting of educational methods and a final suppression of the idea that mechanical labor lacks dignity.

Diamond in the Matrix.

The trustees of the British Museum have received from the Transvaal Premier Diamond Mining Company a gift of diamonds which will be added to the collection in the mineralogical department.

The diamonds, thirteen in number, weigh together about twenty-eight karats. The specimens range from a perfectly colorless white crystal of the finest quality to the bort, which is used for grinding purposes and for rock drills.

There are two brown stones, a pink and a yellow stone. There is also a twin or macle crystal. The most interesting specimen of all is a small piece of blue soil with a diamond embedded in it. This is the first of its kind to be shown at the British Museum, the New York Sun's London correspondent says. Indeed, a diamond in the matrix is a rarity in England, and it is said that very few of those who work in the diamond mines at Kimberley have ever seen a diamond actually embedded in the blue ground.

There are also specimens of rock taken from the mine at different depths ranging from fifteen feet to 160 feet. The specimen from the depth nearest the surface is of an orange color and of a powdery consistency.

Never Touched Him.

"She says the average poet is an unkempt, hungry-looking individual."

"That so?"

"Yes, don't it make you angry? You are a poet."

"But, my dear fellow, I am not an average poet."—Houston Post.

A Real Regret.

Editor—I am obliged to decline your poem with thanks. I am very sorry, but— Poet—But what? Editor—The management insists upon my declining all poems that way.

Postponed.

Dolly—Why aren't you at the cooking school?

FOR THE BRIDE AND HER ATTENDANTS.

Letter to a Bride.

The following letter was written by an old friend to a young lady on the eve of her wedding day:

I have sent you a few flowers to adorn the dying moments of your single life. They are the gentlest types of a delicate and durable friendship. They spring up by our side when others have deserted it; and they will be found watching over our graves when those who should cherish have forgotten us. It seems that a past, so calm and pure as yours, should expire with kindred sweetness about it; that flowers and music, kind friends and earnest words, should consecrate the hour when a sentiment is passing into a sacrament.

The three great stages of our being are the birth, the bridal and the burial. To the first we bring only weakness, for the last we have nothing but dust! But here at the altar, where life joins life, the pair come throbbing up to the holy man, whispering the deep promises that arms each other's heart to help on in the life struggle of care and duty. The beautiful will be there, borrowing new beauties from the scene. The gay and the frivolous, they and their flounces will look solemn for once. And youth will come to gaze on all that its sacred thoughts pant for; and age will totter up to hear the old words repeated, that to their own lives have given the charm. Some will weep over it as if it were a tomb, and some laugh over it as if it were a joke; but two must stand by it, for it is fate, not fun, this everlasting locking of their lives!

And now, can you, who have queened it over so many bending forms, can you come down to the frugal diet of a single heart? Hitherto you have been a clock giving your time to all the world. Now you are a watch, buried in one particular bosom, warming only his breast, making only his hours, and ticking only to the beat of his heart, where time and ticking shall be in unison, until these lower ties are lost in that higher wedlock where all hearts are united around the Central Heart of all.

Hoping that calm and sunshine may hallow your clasped hands, I sink silently into a signature.—Manford's Magazine.

For Rainy Days.

A mother lately hit upon the happy idea of having a "rainy day" cupboard, the key of which always remains strictly in her possession and is used only when a rainy day keeps the bairnies indoors. The contents are added to and varied from time to time. There is crepe paper, with a book of instructions how to transform it into various pretty things; paints, magazines to be colored and cut out, beads of all colors and sizes, and the ever-fascinating jig saws, says Home Notes. These are all sacred to wet weather, and since the rainy day cupboard was instituted, rainy days have ceased to be dreaded.

To Iron Linens.

As linens form a large percentage of summer dresses, it is advisable to study a method of preserving the beauty of this fabric. No linen should be starched. True, linen has a crisp, clean finish when starched and ironed, but it rumples easily and one wearing makes a garment unfit for second appearance. Instead, dampen the goods well and iron until perfectly dry. Iron as much of a garment as possible on the wrong side to raise the thread.

In washing blue linen add vinegar to the last rinsing water. Place a teaspoonful of soda in a gallon of water when dipping a lavender. Use no bluing in tans, but supply it plentifully in the rinsing water for white, blue and pink. Green should not be dipped into indigo water. When the green begins to fade dip it into a sour solution of water and vinegar and hang it in the shade to dry. Dress linens are not unlike table linens as to laundry work, as hard pressing on damp material furnishes a certain amount of stiffness, sufficient for such fabrics. Use a very large iron for pressing large pieces.

For Health and Strength.

A sun bath is of more value to health than much warming by the fire.

A little good toilet water or cologne poured into a bath is delightful in its effects.

If your heart is weak, do not indulge in showers, and be careful to temper the water, no matter how strong the heart.

An excellent household remedy for burns is a pure vaseline or olive oil. The great thing is to exclude the air and dirt from the burned surface and this the oil will do.

Drinking with meals greatly dilutes the saliva, making mastication all the more difficult; besides in this way the contents are easily softened and washed down before being properly chewed.

To take disagreeable medicine eat one or two cloves or hold ice in the mouth until the tongue is chilled, and the medicine will be less disagreeable. Medicines that discolor the teeth may be taken through soda straws.

Simple Turban.

The folded turban of soft straw or silk, trimmed only with a large rosette of flowers, or a chou of tulle, is a popular and most becoming hat for the young girl.

Needlework Notes.

Bullion stitch works in effectively on embroidery for gowns.

Geometrical figures are always used in Hardanger embroidery.

The making of lace is a pleasant as well as a fashionable pastime.

Richelieu embroidery is one of the loveliest of the different forms of cut work.

A dainty centerpiece was embroidered in jonquils and feathery sprays of maidenhair fern.

Irish crochet roses appliqued on a band of filet net make a dainty and effective trimming for a party gown.

Home-made pillow cases should have the selvage torn from the material, then overcast. This makes pillow cases much smoother and they will not wrinkle along the seam. Cut the selvage from napkins to give a neather turned edge.

A dashingly effective Japanese motif is a great dragon embroidered solid with satin stitch and large clusters of French knots.

Ruffles thought scant ones, begin at the hem of the dress and it takes nine short ones to complete the entire skirt to the edge of the embroidered cuirasse.

In cutting the yokes for waist and skirt cut them first of some other material than that of the frock, fit them exactly and then cut the yokes of material from these.

When a tablecloth becomes too worn for use the good parts may be cut up in numerous little trays and doilies. Edged with cluny lace they are dainty as well as exceedingly useful.

If you have a number of old sheets that have outlived their usefulness, sew small rings across one end of each and use them as clothes covers. The rings may be placed over hooks and by tucking the sheet under and using a few pins fine dresses, coats and furs can be protected from dust.

To Keep Young.

It is every woman's duty to keep young as long as possible, but, unfortunately, she does not always know the best way to live up to that duty.

Avoid worry, hurry and getting flustered. Learn self-control. Anger is a rapid wrinkle bringer. Be temperate. Moderation does not only refer to the stomach. Overdoing is any way makes for premature age. Live in the open air. Fresh air is not a fad, it is a necessity if one would keep young. Get plenty of sleep. Nothing lines the face like nights of wakefulness. Keep mentally alert. An intellectual back number adds years to her seeming age. Nothing makes for youth like a young mind, save perhaps a young heart. Don't let yourself get sluggish and indifferent. Here is where the benefit of massage, physical culture and a vital interest in life comes in.

Praises Women Who Work.

That Cardinal Gibbons had no respect for idle women was made very evident in the opinion which he expressed recently: "I have ten times more respect for the woman who goes out and earns her living, toils for herself and family and becomes a good housekeeper, rather than for the idle and gossiping society woman who passed away her precious moments in doing nothing. It is an honorable thing to work, and honorable and industrious work is what has made this nation great. Never be afraid to work and always be ready to do your share. Men alone should not be industrious. Women also must work, and the working woman commands, and should command, more respect than the idle woman."

Shabby Skirt Edges.

When the embroidery ruffle of a petticoat is worn on the edge cut off as much as is shabby and turn a narrow hem. Then get torchon lace as wide as the piece which you have removed and sew it to the hem just made. The lifetime of the petticoat will be doubled and its appearance improved.

Teaching Obedience.

Let children understand that disobedience is sure to be followed by punishment. A child seldom disobeys nature more than once in touching a hot lamp glass. It will soon learn to obey you as well. Never allow it to ask why. You know—that is enough.

BURIAL PLACE OF SHIPS

Pinnacle of Rock at Mouth of San Juan de Fuca Straits, in Pacific Ocean.

LONG RECORD OF DISASTER.

New Theory Advanced as to the Loss of Many Vessels Near Vancouver Coast.

That there is a graveyard of steamers at the entrance to the Straits of San Juan de Fuca is the theory advanced by local shipping men apropos of the reports from Ucluelet, which they conjectured might be the hulk of the long lost war sloop Condor, with which 140 British sailors went down.

"I have watched the accounts of the loss of the steamers missing after their departure from these shores carefully," says a marine authority, according to a Victoria correspondent of the New York Sun, "and am convinced that the most probable cause of the repeated disasters is a pinnacle of rock. Somewhere northwest of Duentze Head there is probably such a pinnacle, and the loss of the Condor and of the steamers Matteawan, Montserrat, Keewatin and others that have disappeared, leaving but scant wreckage found long after to indicate their fate, has in all probability been due to their colliding with this pinnacle. If investigations were made, say by sweeping with a chain between two vessels, this obstruction should be definitely placed.

Graveyard of the Sea.

"The wrecks of these almost forgotten craft lie probably heaped together in this graveyard of ships, and if a wrecking vessel went to investigate the result ought to be of large advantage to the wreckers. If they located the wrecks they would recover chain and other materials which would handsomely reward them."

The people of Ucluelet are excited over the reports of the steamer Orion concerning the obstruction she encountered. There is, however, nothing beyond the fouling of the whaler's cable and that the cut end came up covered with paint to base the location of a wreck upon. Nearer to the village is the well known wreck beneath the water of the iron-hulled Pass of Melfort, which drove against the cliffs of Amphitrite point one dark winter's night and foundered with all hands.

It is certain that the bones of many ships lie off the coast of Vancouver Island. A few scattered and broken hulls still perched along the beach remain as monuments. Some years ago Capt. T. P. H. Whitelaw, the veteran wrecker, combed this graveyard superficially and brought up anchor chains and other finds that told of wrecks beneath the waters.

In the '70s the first trading posts were established and the first missionaries went to blaze the way of settlement and civilization in this region. Father Brabant was one of the first coast missionaries and soon after he went to Hesquoit in 1874 he was called upon to bury twelve bodies swept ashore from the Malleville, a Cape Cod brigantine that had dashed against the shore. Since then many vessels have been lost or abandoned there. From some boats have reached shore; of others no vestige has been found. Often but a name board picked up has told of a ship lost with all on board. The bark Dominion left Honolulu for Victoria some years ago and was not heard from. Then, while a missionary was walking along the sandy beach in front of his humble home at Clo-oosse, where the Indians have a village fronting the ocean, he found a nameboard marked "Dominion." Of others believed to be under these waters not even a nameboard or a life-buoy has been found.

OLD-TIME PHOTOGRAPHY.

Not a Work of Art, but Specimens Are Treasured as Priceless.

An event was the taking of the first photograph in the olden days, when photography was still hampered by pitchforks and long exposures. There are few good baby pictures of our fathers. The fond mother or father sit bolt upright, frozen or petrified, while between them is a very starchy little dress surmounted by a very blurry little spot which represents a composite of several partial likenesses of the hopeful.

But it was with the child of 10 or 12 years that the old-time photographer succeeded best; the child that has reached the age capable of feeling the tremendous responsibility of having a picture taken, an exchange says. Every old album, such as used to grace the center table in the front room, parades before you a long array of these conscientious young people undergoing the terrible ordeal of "sitting." Loving mothers spent hours combing those smoothly plastered locks tightly back and binding them uncompromisingly behind with irreproachable ribbon bows. At the last moment, after the operator has screwed the iron fork tight up behind the trembling head and has pushed the huge camera here and there, ducking in and out under the black cloth in a most awe-inspiring manner, mother has slipped into range and given just one more tug at the big sleeves. Then there came the awful command, "Look pleasant," which the victim did by a remarkable effort of will, usually attaining somewhat the expression which comes over the face of a strangling cat. Five minutes later the "artist" announces "That will do," and the family feels the same relief that comes to friends when the announcement that the "patient has survived the operation and is resting comfortably."

If one married man knows a thing, every woman in the neighborhood will soon hear about it.

An electric machine has been made to wash and purify the air in any room.

JOLLY JOKER

He looked in a milliner's window and saw "Hats reduced." "Great Scott!" said he to himself. "What was their original size?"

Prue—Do you think he was sincere when he said he loved you? Dolly—I'm sure of it. He looked too foolish to be making believe.

Mrs. Knicker—Do you let Bridget eat with the family? Mrs. Bocker—Yes; it's much cheaper than to have her eat with the policeman.—Puck.

"That clerk of yours seems to be a hard worker." "Yes; that's his specialty." "What, working?" "No—seeming to."—Philadelphia Ledger.

She—I'll never have another photograph taken. He—Why not? She—If it looks like me I don't like it, and if it flatters me my friends don't like it.

"And is your milk pasteurized?" asks the prospective customer of the dairyman. "Sure," he replies. "My boys pasturize the cows every morning."

"Jones made an awful big hit at the banquet the other night." "Is that so?" "Yes; he was called on for a speech and refused."—Detroit Free Press.

Him—You're the only girl I ever loved! Her—That's interesting but immaterial. What I want to know is, am I the only girl you're ever going to love?

"Wilt fly with me??" asked the ardent swain. "All depends," answered the practical girl. "Is that a proposal, or merely an invitation to go aviating?"

Madge—Edith is surely not going to marry that living skeleton of a man. He's nothing but skin nad bones. Tess—Why not? He'll make her a rattling husband.—Boston Transcript.

"The young man who called on me last night says there is a fool in every family." "Was he trying to advance that as a reason why we should take him into ours?"—Houston Post.

"Now, then, children," said the teacher, "what is it we want most in this world to make us perfectly happy?" "The things we ain't got!" shouted the bright boy in the back seat.—St. Louis News.

"I wish I were an ostrich," said Hicks, angrily, as he tried to eat one of his wife's biscuits, but couldn't. "I wish you were," returned Mrs. Hicks; "I'd get a few feathers for my hat."—Musical Courier.

"These 'ere flying machines and wireless telegrams—wonderful, ain't it, Mike?" "'Tis that. Ah, Tim, afore we're old men we shall be able to travel round the world without leavin' 'ome."—The Sketch.

"And how old are you, little girl?" "Six." "And how is it you are out walking without your mamma?" "Oh, mamma doesn't go in for exercise. Really, we have very little in common."—Houston Chronicle.

"Do you believe in the Darwinian theory?" "I am inclined to go further than Darwin did," answered Miss Cayenne, "and believe that some members of our species have started on a return trip."—Washington Star.

Hewitt—It took the suffragette parade three hours to pass a given point. Jewett—Were there many women in line? Hewitt—Not so very many, but they had to halt every time they approached a dry goods store.—Chicago News.

Ethel (confidentially)—Do you know, Clara, that I had two offers of marriage last week? Clara (with enthusiasm)—Oh, I am delighted, dear! Then the report is really true that your uncle left you his money?—Pick-Me-Up.

"I am dissatisfied with your account of my discovery," declared the scientist. "I told you that it would be impossible to exaggerate the importance of this discovery." "Well?" said the reporter. "You didn't try."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"You can't run a newspaper that will absolutely please everybody," said the editor. "No," replied the old subscriber; "a man's opinion of the fashion page is usually pretty much the same as his wife's opinion of the sporting section."—Washington Star.

"Rory," said the minister, "I hear ye were at Dunlop's kirk on Sunday last. Not that I object, ye ken, but ye widna yersel like yer ain sheep strayin' away into strange pastures." "I widna care, sir," said Rory, "if it was better grass."—Boston Transcript.

"I'm afraid my husband is developing the gambling instinct," sobbed the bride. "What's the matter, dear? Has he been playing poker?" "No, but yesterday he offered to match pennies with brother Frank to determine which one should pay the car fare."—Detroit Free Press.

Saylor—Van Janter's big apartment house burned this morning and the tenants would hardly permit themselves to be dragged out. Metz—Why were they so reluctant to leave? Saylor—They said it was the first time the building had ever been comfortably warm.—Chicago News.

"I don't like these women who gossip about others, do you?" "I should say not. Now, there's Mrs. Green. She's always telling mean things about her neighbors. And Mrs. Hunter talks perfectly dreadful about her friends. Thank goodness, I never say anything about anybody!"—Stray Stories.

Ultimatum.

Mrs. Desmythe—Yes, my dear, I intend my daughters to be engaged when they are 19.

Mrs. Lajones—But suppose they are not?

Mrs. Desmythe—Then they remain 19 until they are.—Tit-Bits.

Either Way.

Silicus—I can't decide which one of those two girls I want to marry. Cynicus—Well, marry either one of them and you'll discover that you get the wrong one.—Philadelphia Record.

MANY AT OLD SETTLERS MEET

Held in Auburn Last Thursday—A Fine Program Was Carried Out

Old settlers day was held in Auburn last Thursday and proved to be one of the best ever held in DeKalb county. The meeting was presided over by President Dennison, and Mayor Culbertson gave the address of welcome. Attorney J. E. Pomeroy responded, paying tribute to the old settlers and holding them up for examples for the younger generation. G. T. Abby, Isaac Gunsenhouser, William Blair, S. L. Widney and J. L. Ralston were appointed as a committee on location and nominations, and this committee made a report naming St. Joe as the next meeting place.

The officers for the coming year are: Sol Barney, president; G. T. Abby, vice president; Bert Patterson, secretary; S. L. Widney, treasurer; and A. J. Ralston, biographer. The vice presidents were named for the different townships.

Senator Stephen A. Powers, of Angola, arrived at noon from Indianapolis and gave the address of the day. He was given a hearty reception. Among the pictured figures in the big crowd was Mayor Lee F. Weldin, of Oklahoma. He resided in this county in the year of 1850. Sheldon Crooks, of Grant township, who has lived in this county all his life, was also present, as was "Uncle" Simon Dickinson, who rode in an invalid chair. The meeting was certainly a grand affair.

The Historical Bluebeard.

Bluebeard was a historical personage whose name was Giles de Retz. He was nicknamed "Barbe Bleue," from having a beard of a blue-black shade. Persuaded by an Italian alchemist that his strength could be restored by bathing in the blood of infants, he had many children entrapped for this hideous purpose into his castle of Chamtoce, on the Loire, the ruins of which are still to be seen. At last the horrible suspicions of the country folk as to what was going on were proved, and the monster was burned at the stake at Nantes in 1440.

Big Circus at Fort Wayne

Announcement is made that on Wednesday, July 13, the Barnum & Bailey greatest show on earth will visit Fort Wayne. This is the best news of the day to those who are fond of the circus form of amusement. For fifty five years this has been the leading show of the world. This year it comes forth with an entire new equipment which cost the management $3,500,000.

The main performance is given in three rings, on two stages, on an immense Roman race track and in the dome. The climax of the program is the appalling performance of Desperado, a mad Frenchman, who leaps from the dome of the tent and lands on his bare chest. Additional thrills are given by Jupiter, a pure white Arabian horse. It rides to the dome of the tent in a balloon and descends amid a Niagara of exploding rockets and fireworks. Then there is Charlie the First, beyond all question the most remarkable animal that ever came to the notice of scientists. Charlie the First is merely a chimpanzee, but he has become the greatest bicycle rider and acrobat in the world. He does an act on one of the stages that is the wonder of the age.

In the menagerie is found the most remarkable zoological exhibit ever seen outside of the interior of the Africal jungle. It is Bumbino, the first and only baby giraffe ever born or exhibited in America. Only once before in history has the stork visited the giraffe pen of a captive zoo of animals. That event happened over fifty years ago in London, England. The youngster died before it could be placed on exhibition. Bumbino is only three feet tall, less than one-seventh of its mother's height. The youngster is worth its weight in gold.

On the list of performers are the names of 400 of the world's most talented performers. The new parade is a marvel of interest. It is a panorama of a thousand wonders. There are three miles of it.
